(a) Section 1317(6)(W) of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, as amended by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988, is further amended by adding the following 2 sentences at the end thereof: "Paragraph (52) of this section shall be applied to bonds authorized under this subparagraph by substituting 'September 3, 1996' for 'December 31, 1990'. In applying subparagraph (Y) of this paragraph, bonds authorized under this subparagraph shall be treated as qualified redevelopment bonds notwithstanding that the facilities to be financed are not identified at the time the bonds are issued if all such facilities financed with the proceeds of the bonds would have been eligible facilities had they been so identified."

(b) Section 204(a)(32)(M) of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, as amended by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988, is amended further by adding at the end thereof: "Section 203(b)(2) shall be applied to such property by substituting 'September 3, 1999' for 'January 1, 1989' and 'January 1, 1991'."

Subtitle G—Revision of Civil Penalties

SEC. 11701. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Improved Penalty Administration and Compliance Tax Act".

PART I—DOCUMENT AND INFORMATION RETURN PENALTIES

SEC. 11711. UNIFORM PENALTIES FOR FAILURES TO COMPLY WITH CERTAIN INFORMATION REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Part II of subchapter B of chapter 68 (relating to failure to file certain information returns or statements) is amended to read as follows:

"PART II—FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH CERTAIN INFORMATION REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

"Sec. 6721. Failure to file correct information returns.

"Sec. 6722. Failure to furnish correct payee statements.

"Sec. 6723. Failure to comply with other information reporting requirements.

"Sec. 6724. Waiver; definitions and special rules.

"SEC. 6721. FAILURE TO FILE CORRECT INFORMATION RETURNS.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF PENALTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a failure described in paragraph (2) by any person with respect to an information return, such person shall pay a penalty of $50 for each return with respect to which such a failure occurs, but the total amount imposed on such person for all such failures during any calendar year shall not exceed $250,000.

"(2) FAILURES SUBJECT TO PENALTY.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the failures described in this paragraph are—

"(A) any failure to file an information return with the Secretary on or before the required filing date, and

"(B) any failure to include all of the information required to be shown on the return or the inclusion of incorrect information.

"(b) REDUCTION WHERE CORRECTION IN SPECIFIED PERIOD.—

"(1) CORRECTION WITHIN 30 DAYS.—If any failure described in subsection (a)(2) is corrected on or before the day 30 days after the required filing date—

"(A) the penalty imposed by subsection (a) shall be $15 in lieu of $50, and

"(B) the total amount imposed on the person for all such failures during any calendar year which are so corrected shall not exceed $75,000.

"(2) FAILURES CORRECTED ON OR BEFORE AUGUST 1.—If any failure described in subsection (a)(2) is corrected after the 30th day referred to in paragraph (1) but on or before August 1 of the calendar year in which the required filing date occurs—

"(A) the penalty imposed by subsection (a) shall be $30 in lieu of $50, and

"(B) the total amount imposed on the person for all such failures during the calendar year which are so corrected shall not exceed $150,000.

"(c) EXCEPTION FOR DE MINIMIS FAILURES TO INCLUDE ALL REQUIRED INFORMATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) an information return is filed with the Secretary,

"(B) there is a failure described in subsection (a)(2)(B) with respect to such return, and

"(C) such failure is corrected on or before August 1 of the calendar year in which the required filing date occurs, for purposes of this section, such return shall be treated as having been filed with all of the correct required information.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The number of information returns to which paragraph (1) applies for any calendar year shall not exceed the greater of—

"(A) 10, or

"(B) one-half of 1 percent of the total number of information returns required to be filed by the person during the calendar year.

"(d) LOWER LIMITATIONS FOR PERSONS WITH GROSS RECEIPTS OF NOT MORE THAN $5,000,000.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If any person meets the gross receipts test of paragraph (2) with respect to any calendar year, with respect to failures during such taxable year—

"(A) subsection (a)(1) shall be applied by substituting '$100,000' for '$250,000',

"(B) subsection (b)(1)(B) shall be applied by substituting '$25,000' for '$75,000', and

"(C) subsection (b)(2)(B) shall be applied by substituting '$50,000' for '$150,000'.

"(2) GROSS RECEIPTS TEST.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A person meets the gross receipts test of this paragraph for any calendar year if the average annual gross receipts of such person for the most recent 3 taxable years ending before such calendar year do not exceed $5,000,000.

"(B) CERTAIN RULES MADE APPLICABLE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the rules of paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 448(c) shall apply.

"(e) PENALTY IN CASE OF INTENTIONAL DISREGARD.—If 1 or more failures described in subsection (a)(2) are due to intentional disregard of the filing requirement (or the correct information reporting requirement), then, with respect to each such failure—

"(1) subsections (b), (c), and (d) shall not apply,

"(2) the penalty imposed under subsection (a) shall be $100, or, if greater—

"(A) in the case of a return other than a return required under section 6045(a), 6041A(b), 6050H, 6050J, 6050K, or 6050L, 10 percent of the aggregate amount of the items required to be reported correctly, or

"(B) in the case of a return required to be filed by section 6045(a), 6050K, or 6050L, 5 percent of the aggregate amount of the items required to be reported correctly, and

"(3) in the case of any penalty determined under paragraph (2)—

"(A) the $250,000 limitation under subsection (a) shall not apply, and

"(B) such penalty shall not be taken into account in applying such limitation (or any similar limitation under subsection (b)) to penalties not determined under paragraph (2).

"SEC. 6722. FAILURE TO FURNISH CORRECT PAYEE STATEMENTS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of each failure described in subsection (b) by any person with respect to a payee statement, such person shall pay a penalty of $50 for each statement with respect to which such a failure occurs, but the total amount imposed on such person for all such failures during any calendar year shall not exceed $100,000.

"(b) FAILURES SUBJECT TO PENALTY.—For purposes of subsection (a), the failures described in this subsection are—

"(1) any failure to furnish a payee statement on or before the date prescribed therefor to the person to whom such statement is required to be furnished, and

"(2) any failure to include all of the information required to be shown on a payee statement or the inclusion of incorrect information.

"(c) PENALTY IN CASE OF INTENTIONAL DISREGARD.—If 1 or more failures to which subsection (a) applies are due to intentional disregard of the requirement to furnish a payee statement (or the correct information reporting requirement), then, with respect to each failure—

"(1) the penalty imposed under subsection (a) shall be $100, or, if greater—

"(A) in the case of a payee statement other than a statement required under section 6045(b), 6041A(e) (in respect of a return required under section 6041A(b)), 6050H(d), 6050J(e), 6050K(b), or 6050L(c), 10 percent of the aggregate amount of the items required to be reported correctly, or

"(B) in the case of a payee statement required under section 6045(b), 6050K(b), or 6050L(c), 5 percent of the aggregate amount of the items required to be reported correctly, and

"(2) in the case of any penalty determined under paragraph (1)—

"(A) the $100,000 limitation under subsection (a) shall not apply, and

"(B) such penalty shall not be taken into account in applying such limitation to penalties not determined under paragraph (1).

"SEC. 6723. FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH OTHER INFORMATION REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

"In the case of a failure by any person to comply with a specified information reporting requirement on or before the time prescribed therefor, such person shall pay a penalty of $50 for each such failure, but the total amount imposed on such person for all such failures during any calendar year shall not exceed $100,000.

"SEC. 6724. WAIVER; DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) REASONABLE CAUSE WAIVER.—No penalty shall be imposed under this part with respect to any failure if it is shown that such failure is due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect.

"(b) PAYMENT OF PENALTY.—Any penalty imposed by this part shall be paid on notice and demand by the Secretary and in the same manner as tax.

"(c) SPECIAL RULE FOR FAILURE TO MEET MAGNETIC MEDIA REQUIREMENTS.—No penalty shall be imposed under section 6721 solely by reason of any failure to comply with the requirements of the regulations prescribed under section 6011(e), except to the extent that such a failure occurs with respect to more than 250 information returns.

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this part—

"(1) INFORMATION RETURN.—The term 'information return' means—

"(A) any statement of the amount of payments to another person required by—

"(i) section 6041(a) or (b) (relating to certain information at source),

"(ii) section 6042(a)(1) (relating to payments of dividends),

"(iii) section 6044(a)(1) (relating to payments of patronage dividends),

"(iv) section 6049(a) (relating to payments of interest),

"(v) section 6050A(a) (relating to reporting requirements of certain fishing boat operators),

"(vi) section 6050N(a) (relating to payments of royalties), or

"(vii) section 6051(d) (relating to information returns with respect to income tax withheld), and

"(B) any return required by—

"(i) section 6041A(a) or (b) (relating to returns of direct sellers),

"(ii) section 6045(a) or (d) (relating to returns of brokers),

"(iii) section 6050H(a) (relating to mortgage interest received in trade or business from individuals),

"(iv) section 6050I(a) (relating to cash received in trade or business),

"(v) section 6050J(a) (relating to foreclosures and abandonments of security),

"(vi) section 6050K(a) (relating to exchanges of certain partnership interests),

"(vii) section 6050L(a) (relating to returns relating to certain dispositions of donated property),

"(viii) section 6052(a) (relating to reporting payment of wages in the form of group-life insurance),

"(ix) section 6053(c)(1) (relating to reporting with respect to certain tips),

"(x) section 1060(b) (relating to reporting requirements of transferors and transferees in certain asset acquisitions), or

"(xi) subparagraph (A) or (C) of subsection (c)(4), or subsection (e), of section 4093 (relating to information reporting with respect to tax on diesel and aviation fuels).

Such term also includes any form, statement, or schedule required to be filed with the Secretary with respect to any amount from which tax was required to be deducted and withheld under chapter 3 (or from which tax would be required to be so deducted and withheld but for an exemption under this title or any treaty obligation of the United States).

"(2) PAYEE STATEMENT.—The term 'payee statement' means any statement required to be furnished under—

"(A) section 6031(b) or (c), 6034A, or 6037(b) (relating to statements furnished by certain pass-thru entities),

"(B) section 6039(a) (relating to information required in connection with certain options),

"(C) section 6041(d) (relating to information at source),

"(D) section 6041A(e) (relating to returns regarding payments of remuneration for services and direct sales),

"(E) section 6042(c) (relating to returns regarding payments of dividends and corporate earnings and profits),

"(F) section 6044(e) (relating to returns regarding payments of patronage dividends),

"(G) section 6045(b) or (d) (relating to returns of brokers),

"(H) section 6049(c) (relating to returns regarding payments of interest),

"(I) section 6050A(b) (relating to reporting requirements of certain fishing boat operators),

"(J) section 6050H(d) relating to returns relating to mortgage interest received in trade or business from individuals),

"(K) section 6050I(e) (relating to returns relating to cash received in trade or business),

"(L) section 6050J(e) (relating to returns relating to foreclosures and abandonments of security),

"(M) section 6050K(b) (relating to returns relating to exchanges of certain partnership interests),

"(N) section 6050L(c) (relating to returns relating to certain dispositions of donated property),

"(O) section 6050N(b) (relating to returns regarding payments of royalties),

"(P) section 6051 (relating to receipts for employees),

"(Q) section 6052(b) (relating to returns regarding payment of wages in the form of group-term life insurance),

"(R) section 6053(b) or (c) (relating to reports of tips), or

"(S) section 4093(c)(4)(B) (relating to certain purchasers of diesel and aviation fuels).

Such term also includes any form, statement, or schedule required to be furnished to the recipient of any amount from which tax was required to be deducted and withheld under chapter 3 (or from which tax would be required to be so deducted and withheld but for an exemption under this title or any treaty obligation of the United States).

"(3) SPECIFIED INFORMATION REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—The term 'specified information reporting requirement' means—

"(A) the notice required by section 6050K(c)(1) (relating to requirement that transferor notify partnership of exchange),

"(B) any requirement contained in the regulations prescribed under section 6109 that a person—

"(i) include his TIN on any return, statement, or other document (other than an information return or payee statement),

"(ii) furnish his TIN to another person, or

"(iii) include on any return, statement, or other document (other than an information return or payee statement) made with respect to another person the TIN of such person,

"(C) any requirement contained in the regulations prescribed under section 215 that a person—

"(i) furnish his TIN to another person, or

"(ii) include on his return the TIN of another person, and

"(D) the requirement of section 6109(e) that a person include the TIN of any dependent on his return.

"(4) REQUIRED FILING DATE.—The term 'required filing date' means the date prescribed for filing an information return with the Secretary (determined with regard to any extension of time for filing)."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Sections 6017A, 6676, and 6687 are hereby repealed.

(2) Subsection (b) of section 7205 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) BACKUP WITHHOLDING ON INTEREST AND DIVIDENDS.—If any individual willfully makes a false certification under paragraph (1) or (2)(C) of section 3406(d), then such individual shall, in addition to any other penalty provided by law, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

(3) The table of sections for subpart B of part II of subchapter A of chapter 61 is amended by striking the item relating to section 6017A.

(4) The table of sections for part I of subchapter B of chapter 68 is amended by striking the items relating to sections 6676 and 6687.

(5) The table of parts for subchapter B of chapter 68 is amended by striking the item relating to part II and inserting the following:

"Part II. Failure to comply with certain information reporting requirements."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to returns and statements the due date for which (determined without regard to extensions) is after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 11712. INFORMATION REQUIRED WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

(a) CLARIFICATION OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS UNDER SECTION 6038.—

(1) Subsection (a) of section 6038 (relating to information with respect to certain foreign corporations) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) INFORMATION REQUIRED FROM CERTAIN SHAREHOLDERS IN CERTAIN CASES.—If any foreign corporation is treated as a controlled foreign corporation for any purpose under subpart F of part III of subchapter N of chapter 1, the Secretary may require any United States person treated as a United States shareholder of such corporation for any purpose under subpart F to furnish the information required under paragraph (1)."

(2) Paragraph (1) of section 6038(a) is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the second sentence the following: "or which the Secretary determines to be appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to returns and statements the due date for which (determined without regard to extensions) is after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 11713. UNIFORM REQUIREMENTS FOR RETURNS ON MAGNETIC MEDIA.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (e) of section 6011 (relating to regulations requiring returns on magnetic tape, etc.) is amended to read as follows:

"(e) REGULATIONS REQUIRING RETURNS ON MAGNETIC MEDIA, ETC.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall prescribe regulations providing standards for determining which returns must be filed on magnetic media or in other machine-readable form. The Secretary may not require returns of any tax imposed by subtitle A on individuals, estates, and trusts to be other than on paper forms supplied by the Secretary.

"(2) REQUIREMENTS OF REGULATIONS.—In prescribing regulations under paragraph (1), the Secretary—

"(A) shall not require any person to file returns on magnetic media unless such person is required to file at least 250 returns during the calendar year, and

"(B) shall take into account (among other relevant factors) the ability of the taxpayer to comply at reasonable cost with the requirements of such regulations."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to returns the due date for which (determined without regard to extensions) is after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 11714. STUDY OF PROCEDURES TO PREVENT MISMATCHING.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—The Comptroller General (in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate) shall conduct a study on procedures to resolve, with the least disclosure of return information possible, discrepancies between taxpayer-identity information shown on information returns and such information in the records of the Internal Revenue Service.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than June 1, 1990, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report on the study conducted under subsection (a), together with such recommendations as he may deem advisable.

SEC. 11715. STUDY OF SERVICE BUREAUS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—The Comptroller General (in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate) shall conduct a study of whether persons engaged in the business of transmitting information returns or other documents to the Internal Revenue Service on behalf of other persons should be subject to registration or other regulation.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than July 1, 1990, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report on the study conducted under subsection (a), together with such recommendations as he may deem advisable.

PART II—REVISION OF ACCURACY-RELATED PENALTIES

SEC. 11721. REVISION OF ACCURACY-RELATED PENALTIES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subchapter A of chapter 68 (relating to additions to the tax and additional amounts) is amended by striking section 6662 and inserting the following:

"PART II—ACCURACY-RELATED AND FRAUD PENALTIES

"Sec. 6662. Imposition of accuracy-related penalty.

"Sec. 6663. Imposition of fraud penalty.

"Sec. 6664. Definitions and special rules.

"SEC. 6662. IMPOSITION OF ACCURACY-RELATED PENALTY.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF PENALTY.—If this section applies to any portion of an underpayment of tax required to be shown on a return, there shall be added to the tax an amount equal to 20 percent of the portion of the underpayment to which this section applies.

"(b) PORTION OF UNDERPAYMENT TO WHICH SECTION APPLIES.—This section shall apply to the portion of any underpayment which is attributable to 1 or more of the following:

"(1) Negligence or disregard of rules or regulations.

"(2) Any substantial understatement of income tax.

"(3) Any substantial valuation overstatement under chapter 1.

"(4) Any substantial overstatement of pension liabilities.

"(5) Any substantial estate or gift tax valuation understatement.

This section shall not apply to any portion of an underpayment on which a penalty is imposed under section 6663.

"(c) NEGLIGENCE.—For purposes of this section, the term 'negligence' includes any failure to make a reasonable attempt to comply with the provisions of this title, and the term 'disregard' includes any careless, reckless, or intentional disregard.

"(d) SUBSTANTIAL UNDERSTATEMENT OF INCOME TAX.—

"(1) SUBSTANTIAL UNDERSTATEMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, there is a substantial understatement of income tax for any taxable year if the amount of the understatement for the taxable year exceeds the greater of—

"(i) 10 percent of the tax required to be shown on the return for the taxable year, or

"(ii) $5,000.

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a corporation other than an S corporation or a personal holding company (as defined in section 542), paragraph (1) shall be applied by substituting "$10,000" for "$5,000".

"(2) UNDERSTATEMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'understatement' means the excess of—

"(i) the amount of the tax required to be shown on the return for the taxable year, over

"(ii) the amount of the tax imposed which is shown on the return, reduced by any rebate (within the meaning of section 6211(b)(2)).

"(B) REDUCTION FOR UNDERSTATEMENT DUE TO POSITION OF TAXPAYER OR DISCLOSED ITEM.—The amount of the understatement under subparagraph (A) shall be reduced by that portion of the understatement which is attributable to—

"(i) the tax treatment of any item by the taxpayer if there is or was substantial authority for such treatment, or

"(ii) any item with respect to which the relevant facts affecting the item's tax treatment are adequately disclosed in the return or in a statement attached to the return.

"(C) SPECIAL RULES IN CASES INVOLVING TAX SHELTERS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any item attributable to a tax shelter—

"(I) subparagraph (B)(ii) shall not apply, and

"(II) subparagraph (B)(i) shall not apply unless (in addition to meeting the requirements of such subparagraph) the taxpayer reasonably believed that the tax treatment of such item by the taxpayer was more likely than not the proper treatment.

"(ii) TAX SHELTER.—For purposes of clause (i), the term 'tax shelter' means—

"(I) a partnership or other entity,

"(II) any investment plan or arrangement, or

"(III) any other plan or arrangement, if the principal purpose of such partnership, entity, plan, or arrangement is the avoidance or evasion of Federal income tax.

"(D) SECRETARIAL LIST.—The Secretary shall prescribe (and revise not less frequently than annually) a list of positions—

"(i) for which the Secretary believes there is not substantial authority, and

"(ii) which affect a significant number of taxpayers.

Such list (and any revision thereof) shall be published in the Federal Register.

"(e) SUBSTANTIAL VALUATION OVERSTATEMENT UNDER CHAPTER 1.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, there is a substantial valuation overstatement under chapter 1 if the value of any property (or the adjusted basis of any property) claimed on any return of tax imposed by chapter 1 is 200 percent or more of the amount determined to be the correct amount of such valuation or adjusted basis (as the case may be).

"(2) LIMITATION.—No penalty shall be imposed by reason of subsection (b)(3) unless the portion of the underpayment for the taxable year attributable to substantial valuation overstatements under chapter 1 exceeds $5,000 ($10,000 in the case of a corporation other than an S corporation or a personal holding company (as defined in section 542)).

"(f) SUBSTANTIAL OVERSTATEMENT OF PENSION LIABILITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, there is a substantial overstatement of pension liabilities if the actuarial determination of the liabilities taken into account for purposes of computing the deduction under paragraph (1) or (2) of section 404(a) is 200 percent or more of the amount determined to be the correct amount of such liabilities.

"(2) LIMITATION.—No penalty shall be imposed by reason of subsection (b)(4) unless the portion of the underpayment for the taxable year attributable to substantial overstatements of pension liabilities exceeds $1,000.

"(g) SUBSTANTIAL ESTATE OR GIFT TAX VALUATION UNDERSTATEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, there is a substantial estate or gift tax valuation understatement if the value of any property claimed on any return of tax imposed by subtitle B is 50 percent or less of the amount determined to be the correct amount of such valuation.

"(2) LIMITATION.—No penalty shall be imposed by reason of subsection (b)(5) unless the portion of the underpayment attributable to substantial estate or gift tax valuation understatements for the taxable period (or, in the case of the tax imposed by chapter 11, with respect to the estate of the decedent) exceeds $5,000.

"(h) INCREASE IN PENALTY IN CASE OF GROSS VALUATION MISSTATEMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To the extent that a portion of the underpayment to which this section applies is attributable to one or more gross valuation misstatements, subsection (a) shall be applied with respect to such portion by substituting '40 percent' for '20 percent'.

"(2) GROSS VALUATION MISSTATEMENTS.—The term 'gross valuation misstatements' means—

"(A) any substantial valuation overstatement under chapter 1 as determined under subsection (e) by substituting '400 percent' for '200 percent',

"(B) any substantial overstatement of pension liabilities as determined under subsection (f) by substituting '400 percent' for '200 percent', and

"(C) any substantial estate or gift tax valuation understatement as determined under subsection (g) by substituting '25 percent' for '50 percent'.

"SEC. 6663. IMPOSITION OF FRAUD PENALTY.

"(a) IMPOSITION OF PENALTY.—If any part of any underpayment of tax required to be shown on a return is due to fraud, there shall be added to the tax an amount equal to 75 percent of the portion of the underpayment which is attributable to fraud.

"(b) DETERMINATION OF PORTION ATTRIBUTABLE TO FRAUD.—If the Secretary establishes that any portion of an underpayment is attributable to fraud, the entire underpayment shall be treated as attributable to fraud, except with respect to any portion of the underpayment which the taxpayer establishes (by a preponderance of the evidence) is not attributable to fraud.

"(c) SPECIAL RULE FOR JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return, this section shall not apply with respect to a spouse unless some part of the underpayment is due to the fraud of such spouse.

"SEC. 6664. DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.

"(a) UNDERPAYMENT.—For purposes of this part, the term 'underpayment' means the amount by which any tax imposed by this title exceeds the excess of—

"(1) the sum of—

"(A) the amount shown as the tax by the taxpayer on his return, plus

"(B) amounts not so shown previously assessed (or collected without assessment), over

"(2) the amount of rebates made.

For purposes of paragraph (2), the term 'rebate' means so much of an abatement, credit, refund, or other repayment, as was made on the ground that the tax imposed was less than the excess of the amount specified in paragraph (1) over the rebates previously made.

"(b) PENALTIES APPLICABLE ONLY WHERE RETURN FILED.—The penalties provided in this part shall apply only in cases where a return of tax is filed (other than a return prepared by the Secretary under the authority of section 6020(b)).

"(c) REASONABLE CAUSE EXCEPTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—No penalty shall be imposed under this part with respect to any portion of an underpayment if it is shown that there was a reasonable cause for such portion and that the taxpayer acted in good faith with respect to such portion.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR CERTAIN VALUATION OVERSTATEMENTS.—In the case of any underpayment attributable to a substantial or gross valuation overstatement under chapter 1 with respect to charitable deduction property, paragraph (1) shall not apply unless—

"(A) the claimed value of the property was based on a qualified appraisal made by a qualified appraiser, and

"(B) in addition to obtaining such appraisal, the taxpayer made a good faith investigation of the value of the contributed property.

"(3) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) CHARITABLE DEDUCTION PROPERTY.—The term 'charitable deduction property' means any property contributed by the taxpayer in a contribution for which a deduction was claimed under section 170. For purposes of paragraph (2), such term shall not include any securities for which (as of the date of the contribution) market quotations are readily available on an established securities market.

"(B) QUALIFIED APPRAISER.—The term 'qualified appraiser' means any appraiser meeting the requirements of the regulations prescribed under section 170(a)(1).

"(C) QUALIFIED APPRAISAL.—The term 'qualified appraisal' means any appraisal meeting the requirements of the regulations prescribed under section 170(a)(1).

"PART III—APPLICABLE RULES

"Sec. 6665. Applicable rules.

"SEC. 6665. APPLICABLE RULES.

"(a) ADDITIONS TREATED AS TAX.—Except as otherwise provided in this title—

"(1) the additions to the tax, additional amounts, and penalties provided by this chapter shall be paid upon notice and demand and shall be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as taxes; and

"(2) any reference in this title to 'tax' imposed by this title shall be deemed also to refer to the additions to the tax, additional amounts, and penalties provided by this chapter.

"(b) PROCEDURE FOR ASSESSING CERTAIN ADDITIONS TO TAX.—For purposes of subchapter B of chapter 63 (relating to deficiency procedures for income, estate, gift, and certain excise taxes), subsection (a) shall not apply to any addition to tax under section 6651, 6654, or 6655; except that it shall apply—

"(1) in the case of an addition described in section 6651, to that portion of such addition which is attributable to a deficiency in tax described in section 6211; or

"(2) to an addition described in section 6654 or 6655, if no return is filed for the taxable year."

(b) REPEAL OF INCREASE IN INTEREST ON CERTAIN SUBSTANTIAL UNDERPAYMENTS.—Subsection (c) of section 6621 (relating to interest on substantial underpayments attributable to tax motivated transactions) is hereby repealed.

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 6653 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6653. FAILURE TO PAY STAMP TAX.

"Any person (as defined in section 6671(b)) who—

"(1) willfully fails to pay any tax imposed by this title which is payable by stamp, coupons, tickets, books, or other devices or methods prescribed by this title or by regulations under the authority of this title, or

"(2) willfully attempts in any manner to evade or defeat any such tax or the payment thereof,

PART III—PREPARER, PROMOTER, AND PROTESTER PENALTIES

SEC. 11731. PENALTY FOR INSTITUTING PROCEEDINGS BEFORE TAX COURT PRIMARILY FOR DELAY, ETC.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Section 6673 (relating to damages assessable for instituting proceedings before the Tax Court primarily for delay, etc.) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6673. SANCTIONS AND COSTS AWARDED BY COURTS.

"(a) TAX COURT PROCEEDINGS.—

"(1) PROCEDURES INSTITUTED PRIMARILY FOR DELAY, ETC.—Whenever it appears to the Tax Court that—

"(A) proceedings before it have been instituted or maintained by the taxpayer primarily for delay,

"(B) the taxpayer's position in such proceeding is frivolous or groundless, or

"(C) the taxpayer unreasonably failed to pursue available administrative remedies, the Tax Court, in its decision, may require the taxpayer to pay to the United States a penalty not in excess of $25,000.

"(2) COUNSEL'S LIABILITY FOR EXCESSIVE COSTS.—Whenever it appears to the Tax Court that any attorney or other person admitted to practice before the Tax Court has multiplied the proceedings in any case unreasonably and vexatiously, the Tax Court may require—

"(A) that such attorney or other person pay personally the excess costs, expenses, and attorneys' fees reasonably incurred because of such conduct, or

"(B) if such attorney is appearing on behalf of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the United States pay such excess costs, expenses, and attorneys' fees in the same manner as such an award by a district court.

"(b) PROCEEDINGS IN OTHER COURTS.—

"(1) CLAIMS UNDER SECTION 7433.—Whenever it appears to the court that the taxpayer's position in the proceedings before the court instituted or maintained by such taxpayer under section 7433 is frivolous or groundless, the court may require the taxpayer to pay to the United States a penalty not in excess of $10,000.

"(2) COLLECTION OF SANCTIONS AND COSTS.—In any civil proceeding before any court (other than the Tax Court) which is brought by or against the United States in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax, interest, or penalty under this title, any monetary sanctions, penalties, or costs awarded by the court to the United States may be assessed by the Secretary and, upon notice and demand, may be collected in the same manner as a tax.

"(3) SANCTIONS AND COSTS AWARDED BY A COURT OF APPEALS.—In connection with any appeal from a proceeding in the Tax Court or a civil proceeding described in paragraph (2), an order of a United States Court of Appeals or the Supreme Court awarding monetary sanctions, penalties or court costs to the United States may be registered in a district court upon filing a certified copy of such order and shall be enforceable as other district court judgments."

(b) CLARIFICATION OF AUTHORITY TO IMPOSE PENALTIES BY APPELLATE COURTS.—Paragraph (4) of section 7482(c) (relating to power to impose damages) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) TO IMPOSE PENALTIES.—The United States Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court shall have the power to require the taxpayer to pay to the United States a penalty in any case where the decision of the Tax Court is affirmed and it appears that the appeal was instituted or maintained primarily for delay or that the taxpayer's position in the appeal is frivolous or groundless."

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part I of subchapter B of chapter 68 is amended by striking the item relating to section 6673 and inserting the following:

"Sec. 6673. Sanctions and costs awarded by courts."

SEC. 11732. MODIFICATIONS TO PENALTIES ON RETURN PREPARERS FOR CERTAIN UNDERSTATEMENTS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 6694 (relating to understatement of taxpayer's liability by income tax return preparer) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) UNDERSTATEMENTS DUE TO UNREALISTIC POSITIONS.—If—

"(1) any part of any understatement of liability with respect to any return or claim for refund is due to a position for which there was not a realistic possibility of being sustained on its merits,

"(2) any person who is an income tax return preparer with respect to such return or claim knew (or reasonably should have known) of such position, and

"(3) such position was not disclosed as provided in section 6662(d)(2)(B)(ii) or was frivolous, such person shall pay a penalty of $250 with respect to such return or claim unless it is shown that there is reasonable cause for the understatement and such person acted in good faith.

"(b) WILLFUL OR RECKLESS CONDUCT.—If any part of any understatement of liability with respect to any return or claim for refund is due—

"(1) to a willful attempt in any manner to understate the liability for tax by a person who is an income tax return preparer with respect to such return or claim, or

"(2) to any reckless or intentional disregard of rules or regulations by any such person, such person shall pay a penalty of $1,000 with respect to such return or claim. With respect to any return or claim, the amount of the penalty payable by any person by reason of this subsection shall be reduced by the amount of the penalty paid by such person by reason of subsection (a)."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to documents prepared after December 31, 1989.

(2) Subsection (a) of section 2523 is amended by striking "who is a citizen or resident".

(3) Paragraph (3) of section 2106(a) is amended by striking "ALLOWED WHERE SPOUSE IS CITIZEN".

(4)(A) Subparagraph (B) of section 2056(d)(2) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) SPECIAL RULE.—If any property passes from the decedent to the surviving spouse of the decedent, for purposes of subparagraph (A), such property shall be treated as passing to such spouse in a qualified domestic trust if—

"(i) such property is transferred to such a trust before the date on which the return of the tax imposed by this chapter is made, or

"(ii) such property is irrevocably assigned to such a trust under an irrevocable assignment made on or before such date which is enforceable under local law."

(B) In the case of the estate of a decedent dying before the date of the enactment of this Act, the period during which the transfer (or irrevocable assignment) referred to in section 2056(d)(2)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as amended by subparagraph (A)) may be made shall not expire before the date 1 year after such date of enactment.

(5) Subsection (d) of section 2056 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) SPECIAL RULE WHERE RESIDENT SPOUSE BECOMES CITIZEN.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply if—

"(A) the surviving spouse of the decedent becomes a citizen of the United States before the day on which the return of the tax imposed by this chapter is made, and

"(B) such spouse was a resident of the United States at all times after the date of the death of the decedent and before becoming a citizen of the United States."

(6) Paragraph (3) of section 2056(d) is amended—

(A) by striking "section 2001" and inserting "this chapter", and

(B) by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "and without regard to subsection (d)(3) of such section".

(7)(A) Subsection (a) of section 2056A is amended—

(i) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(1) the trust instrument requires that at least 1 trustee of the trust be an individual citizen of the United States or a domestic corporation and that no distribution from the trust may be made without the approval of such a trustee,", and

(ii) by striking paragraph (2) and redesignating paragraphs (3) and (4) as paragraphs (2) and (3), respectively.

(B) Subsection (b) of section 2056A is amended by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (8) as paragraphs (4) through (9), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) CERTAIN LIFETIME DISTRIBUTIONS EXEMPT FROM TAX.—

"(A) INCOME DISTRIBUTIONS.—No tax shall be imposed by paragraph (1)(A) on any distribution of income to the surviving spouse.

"(B) MINIMUM EXEMPTION.—If the aggregate distributions during any calendar year of income to the surviving spouse under all qualified domestic trusts of the decedent do not exceed $100,000, no tax shall be imposed on any other distributions to the surviving spouse during such calendar year except to the extent that such other distributions exceed the difference between $100,000 and the amount of such income distributions.

"(C) ADDITIONAL EXEMPTION FOR DISTRIBUTION FOR MEDICAL EXPENSES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a qualified medical expense distribution—

"(I) no tax shall be imposed by paragraph (1)(A) on such distribution, and

"(II) such distribution shall not be taken into account in determining the amount of other distributions exempt from such tax under subparagraph (B).

"(ii) QUALIFIED MEDICAL EXPENSE DISTRIBUTION.—For purposes of clause (i), the term 'qualified medical expense distribution' means any distribution made in the form of a payment on behalf of the surviving spouse to any person for medical care (as defined in section 213(d)) of the surviving spouse provided by such person."

(C) Subparagraph (A) of section 2056A(b)(1) is amended by striking "other than a distribution of income required under subsection (a)(2)".

(D) Paragraph (4) of section 2056A(b) (as redesignated by subparagraph (B)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) TAX WHERE TRUST CEASES TO QUALIFY.—If any qualified domestic trust ceases to meet the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a), the tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall apply as if the surviving spouse died on the date of such cessation."

(8) Subsection (d) of section 2056 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) REFORMATIONS PERMITTED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any property with respect to which a deduction would be allowable under subsection (a) but for this subsection, the determination of whether a trust is a qualified domestic trust shall be made—

"(i) as of the date on which the return of the tax imposed this chapter is made, or

"(ii) if a judicial proceeding is commenced on or before the due date (determined with regard to extensions) for filing such return to change such trust into a trust which is a qualified domestic trust, as of the time when the changes pursuant to such proceeding are made.

"(B) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—If a judicial proceeding described in subparagraph (A)(ii) is commenced with respect to any trust, the period for assessing any deficiency of tax attributable to any failure of such trust to be a qualified domestic trust shall not expire before the date 1 year after the date on which the Secretary is notified that the trust has been changed pursuant to such judicial proceeding or that such proceeding has been terminated."

(9) Subsection (b) of section 2056A is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(10) CERTAIN BENEFITS ALLOWED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If any property remaining in the qualified domestic trust on the date of the death of the surviving spouse is includible in the gross estate of such spouse for purposes of this chapter (or would be includible if such spouse were a citizen or resident of the United States), any benefit which is allowable (or would be allowable if such spouse were a citizen or resident of the United States) with respect to such property to the estate of such spouse under section 2032, 2032A, 2055, 2056, or 6166 shall be allowed for purposes of the tax imposed by paragraph (1)(B).

"(B) SECTION 303.—If the estate of the surviving spouse meets the requirements of section 303 with respect to any property described in subparagraph (A), for purposes of section 303, the tax imposed by paragraph (1)(B) with respect to such property shall be treated as a Federal estate tax payable with respect to the estate of the surviving spouse.

"(C) SECTION 6161(a)(2).—The provisions of section 6161(a)(2) shall apply with respect to the tax imposed by paragraph (1)(B), and the reference in such section to the executor shall be treated as a reference to the trustees of the trust.

"(11) SPECIAL RULE WHERE DISTRIBUTION TAX PAID OUT OF TRUST.—For purposes of this subsection, if any portion of the tax imposed by paragraph (1)(A) with respect to any distribution is paid out of the trust, an amount equal to the portion so paid shall be treated as a distribution described in paragraph (1)(A).

"(12) SPECIAL RULE WHERE SPOUSE BECOMES CITIZEN.—If the surviving spouse of the decedent becomes a citizen of the United States and if—

"(A) such spouse was a resident of the United States at all times after the date of the death of the decedent and before such spouse becomes a citizen of the United States,

"(B) no tax was imposed by paragraph (1)(A) with respect to any distribution before such spouse becomes such a citizen, or

"(C) such spouse elects—

"(i) to treat any distribution on which tax was imposed by paragraph (1)(A) as a taxable gift made by such spouse for purposes of—

"(I) section 2001, and

"(II) determining the amount of the tax imposed by section 2501 on actual taxable gifts made by such spouse during the year in which the spouse becomes a citizen or any subsequent year, and

"(ii) to treat any reduction in the tax imposed by paragraph (1)(A) by reason of the credit allowable under section 2010 with respect to the decedent as a credit allowable to such surviving spouse under section 2505 for purposes of determining the amount of the credit allowable under section 2505 with respect to taxable gifts made by the surviving spouse during the year in which the spouse becomes a citizen or any subsequent year, paragraph (1)(A) shall not apply to any distributions after such spouse becomes such a citizen (and paragraph (1)(B) shall not apply).

"(13) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 1015.—For purposes of section 1015, any distribution on which tax is imposed by paragraph (1)(A) shall be treated as a transfer by gift, and any tax paid under paragraph (1)(A) shall be treated as a gift tax."

(10) Paragraph (2) of section 2056A(c) is amended by striking "The term" and inserting "Except as provided in regulations, the term".

(11) Clause (ii) of section 2056A(b)(2)(B) is amended by striking "as a credit or refund" and inserting "as a credit or refund (with interest)".

(12) Paragraph (2) of section 2056A(b) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(C) SPECIAL RULE WHERE DECEDENT HAS MORE THAN 1 QUALIFIED DOMESTIC TRUST.—If there is more than 1 qualified domestic trust with respect to any decedent, the amount of the tax imposed by paragraph (1) with respect to such trusts shall be determined by using the highest rate of tax in effect under section 2001 as of the date of the decedent's death (and the provisions of paragraph (3)(B) shall not apply) unless, pursuant to a designation made by the decedent's executor, there is 1 person—

"(i) who is an individual citizen of the United States or a domestic corporation and is responsible for filing all returns of tax imposed under paragraph (1) with respect to such trusts and for paying all tax so imposed, and

"(ii) who meets such requirements as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe."

(13) Section 2056A is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section, including regulations under which an annuity includible in the decedent's gross estate under section 2039 may be treated as a qualified domestic trust."

(14) In the case of the estate of, or gift by, an individual who was not a citizen or resident of the United States but was a resident of a foreign country with which the United States has a tax treaty with respect to estate, inheritance, or gift taxes, the amendments made by section 5033 of the 1988 Act shall not apply to the extent such amendments would be inconsistent with the provisions of such treaty relating to estate, inheritance, or gift tax marital deductions. In the case of the estate of an individual dying before the date 3 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, or a gift by an individual before the date 3 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the requirement of the preceding sentence that the individual not be a citizen or resident of the United States shall not apply.

(15) Paragraph (5) of section 2056A(b) (as redesignated by paragraph (7)(B) of this subsection) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) DUE DATE.—

"(A) TAX ON DISTRIBUTIONS.—The estate tax imposed by paragraph (1)(A) shall be due and payable on the 15th day of the 4th month following the calendar year in which the taxable event occurs; except that the estate tax imposed by paragraph (1)(A) on distributions during the calendar year in which the surviving spouse dies shall be due and payable not later than the date on which the estate tax imposed by paragraph (1)(B) is due and payable.

"(B) TAX AT DEATH OF SPOUSE.—The estate tax imposed by paragraph (1)(B) shall be due and payable on the date 9 months after the date of such death."

(16) For purposes of applying section 2040(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 with respect to any joint interest to which section 2040(b) of such Code does not apply solely by reason of section 2056(d)(1)(B) of such Code, any consideration furnished before July 14, 1988, by the decedent for such interest to the extent treated as a gift to the spouse of the decedent for purposes of chapter 12 of such Code shall be treated as consideration originally belonging to such spouse and never acquired by such spouse from the decedent.

(e) AMENDMENTS RELATED TO SECTION 5041 OF THE 1988 ACT.—

Subtitle I—Child Care Provisions

SEC. 11901. GRANTS TO STATES FOR CHILD CARE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Title XX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by inserting after the title heading the following:

"SEC. 2000. PURPOSE OF TITLE; LIMITATION ON ENTITLEMENT.

"(a) PURPOSES OF TITLE.—The purpose of this title is to provide Federal assistance to States for a range of social services, with additional funds set aside for child care services.

"(b) LIMITATION ON ENTITLEMENT.—For payments to which States are entitled under this title, there are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary—

"(1) $2,900,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, of which $200,000,000 shall be for payments under subtitle B;

"(2) $3,250,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, of which $350,000,000 shall be for payments under subtitle B;

"(3) $3,500,000,000 for fiscal year 1992, of which $400,000,000 shall be for payments under subtitle B; and

"(4) $3,700,000,000 for each fiscal year after fiscal year 1992, of which $400,000,000 shall be for payments under subtitle B.

"Subtitle A—Grants to States for Social Services";

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"Subtitle B—Grants to States for Child Care

"SEC. 2011. PAYMENTS TO STATES.

"(a) ENTITLEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each State which is eligible for payments under this subtitle for a fiscal year shall be entitled to payments in an aggregate amount equal to the child care allotment of the State for such fiscal year.

"(2) ELIGIBILITY.—

"(A) FIRST 3 YEARS.—During the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subtitle, each State is eligible for payments under this subtitle.

"(B) AFTER 3 YEARS.—After the end of such 3-year period, a State shall be ineligible for any payment under this subtitle if the State has not demonstrated to the Secretary that all child care providers in the State who receive funds under this title and all other providers in the State who receive public funds for child care services—

"(i) are licensed or regulated as required by State or local law;

"(ii) comply with the minimum child care standards established by the State in accordance with section 2012(c); and

"(iii) are subject to the enforcement provisions in section 2012(i).

This subparagraph shall not be construed to require the training or licensing of any individual who provides child care solely to members of the family of the individual.

"(b) PAYMENTS.—The Secretary shall make payments to each State which is eligible for payments under this subtitle for a fiscal year from the child care allotment of the State under this subtitle for such fiscal year, in accordance with section 6503 of title 31, United States Code.

"SEC. 2012. STATE ADMINISTRATION.

"(a) ADMINISTRATION.—The State agency with primary responsibility for child care in the State shall administer the use of all payments made to the State under this subtitle.

"(b) USE OF PAYMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) 80 PERCENT FOR CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Each State which receives a payment under this subtitle shall use 80 percent of the amount of such payment to provide child care services in accordance with this subtitle.

"(B) 20 PERCENT FOR ADMINISTRATION, TRAINING, AND ENFORCEMENT.—Each State which receives a payment under this subtitle shall use 20 percent of the amount of such payment for child-care related administration and training, and for enforcing in accordance with subsection (i) the child care standards established by the State in accordance with subsection (c).

"(2) LIMITATIONS.—

"(A) CHILD CARE PROVIDERS AND SERVICES MUST MEET STATE STANDARDS AND REQUIREMENTS.—Each State which receives a payment under this subtitle may not use any part of any grant made under this subtitle for any child care services unless such services meet all applicable child care standards and licensing and registration requirements—

"(i) during the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subtitle, as established by State and local law; and

"(ii) after such 3-year period, as established by State and local law pursuant to subsection (c).

"(B) NO SUPPLANTING OF OTHER PUBLIC FUNDS FOR CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Each State which receives a payment under this subtitle shall not use such payment to supplant any other Federal or State funds used for child care services.

"(c) CHILD CARE STANDARDS.—Beginning 3 years after the date of the enactment of this subtitle, each State which receives a payment under this subtitle shall have in effect child care standards in each of the categories described in this subsection, which shall apply to all child care funded in the State under this title and all child care services delivered by providers in the State who receive public funds for child care services. Such categories are as follows:

"(1) CENTER-BASED CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards with respect to child care services provided by center-based child care providers shall be limited to—

"(A) group size limits in terms of the number of caregivers and the number and ages of children;

"(B) the maximum appropriate child-staff ratios;

"(C) preservice qualifications and background of child care personnel;

"(D) requirements for inservice training in areas appropriate to the provision of such child care services;

"(E) health and safety requirements for children and caregivers, including requirements for—

"(i) the prevention and control of infectious diseases (including immunization and handwashing procedures);

"(ii) injury prevention, control, and treatment;

"(iii) building and physical premises safety;

"(iv) general health and nutrition;

"(v) children with special needs; and

"(vi) prevention of child abuse; and

"(F) requirements for parental involvement in licensed and regulated child care services.

"(2) FAMILY CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards with respect to child care services provided by family child care providers shall be limited to—

"(A) the maximum number of children for which child care services should be provided and the maximum number of infants for which child care services should be provided;

"(B) the minimum age for caregivers;

"(C) requirements for inservice training in areas appropriate to the provision of such child care services, or participation in a provider organization that addresses child development and management issues; and

"(D) health and safety requirements for children and caregivers, including those described in paragraph (1)(E), as appropriate for family child care services.

"(3) GROUP HOME CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards with respect to child care services provided by group home child care providers shall be limited to the matters specified in paragraphs (1)(B) and (2).

"(d) MINIMUM TRAINING REQUIREMENT.—Each State which receives a payment under this subtitle after the expiration of the 2-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subtitle shall require all child care providers (and the caregivers employed by such providers) who receive public funds for child care services and are required to be licensed or regulated in the State to complete annually an average of 15 hours of training. Such training shall be tailored to the needs of the State and the providers.

"(e) MARKET RATES.—Each State which receives a payment under this subtitle shall reimburse child care expenses at market rates, with higher reimbursements for infants and toddlers, children with disabilities, and comprehensive child care programs for children of adolescent parents.

"(f) SLIDING FEE SCHEDULE.—Each State which receives a payment under this subtitle shall establish a sliding fee schedule, based on income, for determining the amount a family will be required to pay for the delivery of child care services under this title.

"(g) CHILD CARE SERVICES TO BE PROVIDED AT NO COST TO FAMILIES WITH INCOMES BELOW POVERTY LINE.—Each State which receives a payment under this subtitle shall ensure that child care services which are provided to any family with income below the poverty line shall be provided at no cost to such family.

"(h) POLICIES AND PROCEDURES.—Each State which receives a payment under this subtitle shall develop policies and procedures designed to ensure that the State will not reduce—

"(1) the categories of child care providers licensed or regulated by the State on the date of the enactment of this subtitle; or

"(2) the level of standards applicable to child care services provided in the State and to the matters referred to in subsection (c), even if such standards exceed the standards required to be established by the State in accordance with subsection (c) unless the State demonstrates, to the satisfaction of the Secretary, that the reduction is—

"(A) based on positive developmental practice; or

"(B) necessary to increase access to and availability of child care providers, and will not jeopardize the health and safety of children.

"(i) ENFORCEMENT.—Beginning 3 years after the date of the enactment of this subtitle, each State which receives a payment under this subtitle shall have in effect enforcement policies and practices that will apply to all child care funded in the State under this title and all child care services delivered by providers in the State who receive public funds for child care services, including policies and practices that—

"(1) require personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to receive training in child development, health and safety, child abuse prevention and detection, the needs of children with a disability, program management, and relevant law enforcement;

"(2) impose personnel requirements to ensure that individuals who are hired as licensing inspectors are qualified to inspect and, to the maximum extent feasible, have inspection responsibility exclusively for children's services;

"(3) require personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to make—

"(A) not less than 1 unannounced inspection annually of each center-based child care provider in the State; and

"(B) unannounced inspections annually, and during normal hours of operation, of not less than 25 percent of licensed and regulated family child care providers in the State;

"(4) require the ratio of licensing personnel to child care providers in the State to be maintained at a level sufficient to enable the State to conduct inspections of child care facilities and providers on a timely basis and otherwise to comply with the requirements of this subsection;

"(5) require licensed or regulated child care providers (including registered child care providers) in the State—

"(A) to have written policies and program goals and to make a copy of such policies and goals available to parents; and

"(B) to provide parents with unlimited access to their children whenever children of such parents are in the care of such providers;

"(6) implement a procedure to address complaints that will provide a reasonable opportunity for a parent, or child care provider, that is adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision of the agency described in subsection (a) or any program or activity assisted under this subtitle or, to the extent funds are used for child care services, under subtitle A, to be heard by the State;

"(7) prohibit the operator of a child care facility to take any action against an employee of such operator that would adversely affect the employment, or terms or conditions of employment, of such employee because such employee communicates a failure of such operator to comply with any applicable licensing or regulatory requirement;

"(8) make consumer education information available to inform parents and the general public about licensing requirements, complaint procedures, and policies and practices required by this subsection;

"(9) require a child care provider to post, on the premises where child care services are provided, the telephone number of the appropriate licensing or regulatory agency that parents may call regarding a failure of such provider to comply with any applicable licensing or regulatory requirement; and

"(10) require the State to maintain a record of parental complaints and to make information regarding substantiated parental complaints available to the public on request.

"(j) TIMING OF EXPENDITURES.—Except as provided in section 2013(c)(1), each State receiving a payment under this subtitle for a fiscal year shall expend such funds in such fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

"SEC. 2013. CHILD CARE ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) FORMULA FOR DETERMINING CHILD CARE ALLOTMENTS.—The child care allotment of any State which is eligible for payments under this subtitle for a fiscal year shall be—

"(1) the State share for such fiscal year; multiplied by

"(2) the child care set aside for such fiscal year.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—

"(1) STATE SHARE.—The term 'State share' means, with respect to a State and a fiscal year—

"(A) the regular allotment of the State under section 2003 for such fiscal year; divided by

"(B)(i) the amount specified in section 2003(c) for such fiscal year; minus

"(ii) the aggregate of the regular allotments, under section 2003 for such fiscal year, of the States which are not eligible for payments under this subtitle for such fiscal year.

"(2) CHILD CARE SET ASIDE.—The term 'child care set aside' means—

"(A) $200,000,000 for fiscal year 1990;

"(B) $350,000,000 for fiscal year 1991; and

"(C) $400,000,000 for each fiscal year after fiscal year 1991.

"(c) REDISTRIBUTION OF UNEXPENDED CHILD CARE ALLOTMENTS.—

"(1) REMITTANCE TO THE SECRETARY.—Each State which receives any payment under this subtitle for a fiscal year shall remit to the Secretary that part of such payment which the State intends not to, or does not, expend in such fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

"(2) REDISTRIBUTION.—The Secretary shall increase the child care allotment of each State not remitting any amount to the Secretary for a fiscal year pursuant to paragraph (1) by an amount equal to—

"(A) the aggregate of the amounts so remitted; multiplied by

"(B) the adjusted State share for such fiscal year.

"(3) ADJUSTED STATE SHARE.—The term 'adjusted State share' means, with respect to a fiscal year—

"(A) the child care allotment of the State for such fiscal year (before any increase under paragraph (2)); divided by

"(B)(i) the child care set aside for such fiscal year; minus

"(ii) the aggregate of the amounts remitted to the Secretary for such fiscal year pursuant to paragraph (1).

"SEC. 2014. REPORTS AND AUDITS.

"(a) REPORTS ON INTENDED USES OF CHILD CARE ALLOTMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Before any State expends any payment made to the State under this subtitle for any fiscal year, the State shall report to the Secretary on the intended uses of such payment (including information on the types of activities to be supported, and the categories and characteristics of individuals to be served) and on any part of such payment which the State intends not to expend in such fiscal year or in the succeeding fiscal year.

"(2) PUBLICATION IN THE STATE.—The State shall make the report required by paragraph (1) public within the State in such manner as to facilitate comment by any person (including any Federal or other public agency) during the development of the report and after the completion of the report.

"(b) NOTICE TO SECRETARY OF UNEXPENDED CHILD CARE SET ASIDE.—Each State which has not completely expended the payments made to the State under this subtitle for a fiscal year in such fiscal year or the succeeding fiscal year shall notify the Secretary of any amount not so expended.

"(c) REPORTS ON ACTUAL USE OF CHILD CARE SET ASIDE.—

"(1) ANNUAL REPORTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each State shall prepare reports annually, beginning with fiscal year 1992, on the activities of the State carried out with funds made available under this subtitle or (to the extent funds made available under subtitle A are expended for child care services) under subtitle A, covering the most recently completed fiscal year.

"(B) FORM AND CONTENT.—Each report required by subparagraph (A) shall be in such form and contain such information (including the information specified in paragraph (2)) as the State finds necessary—

"(i) to provide an accurate description of such activities;

"(ii) to secure a complete record of the purposes for which funds made available under this subtitle were spent; and

"(iii) to determine the extent to which such funds were spent in a manner consistent with the reports required by subsection (a).

"(C) AVAILABILITY OF COPIES.—The State shall make copies of each report required by this section available for public inspection within the State, shall transmit a copy of each such report to the Secretary, and shall provide a copy of each such report, on request, to any interested public agency.

"(D) SUBMISSION TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall annually compile the State reports transmitted to the Secretary pursuant to subparagraph (C), and submit such annual compilation to the Congress.

"(2) REPORTS TO CONTAIN CERTAIN SPECIFIC INFORMATION.—Each report prepared and transmitted by a State under paragraph (1) shall set forth with respect to child care services funded under this subtitle or subtitle A (for the fiscal year covered by the report)—

"(A) showing separately for center-based child care services, group home child care services, family child care services, and relative care services—

"(i) the number of children who received such services paid for, in whole or in part, with funds made available under this subtitle or subtitle A, grouped according to the average income of the families of such children as a percentage of the poverty line;

"(ii) the average cost and market rate, by geographical area, for child care services funded, in whole or in part, with funds made available under this subtitle or subtitle A; and

"(iii) the out-of-pocket costs for such services funded, in whole or in part, with funds made available under this subtitle or subtitle A, grouped according to the average income of the families of the children receiving such services as a percentage of the poverty line;

"(B) whether the recipients of each type of service specified in subparagraph (A) receive public assistance benefits, the extent to which such benefits are taken into account in determining the child care services benefit, and the effect of public assistance benefits on the child care services benefit;

"(C) income eligibility guidelines, sliding fee schedules, requirements for enrollment in school or training programs, and any other criteria applied in determining eligibility for, or priority in receiving, each type of service specified in subparagraph (A);

"(D) the methods by which each type of service specified in subparagraph (A) was provided;

"(E) the child care standards in effect in the State with respect to each type of service specified in subparagraph (A);

"(F) the child care licensing and regulatory (including registration) requirements in effect in the State with respect to each type of service specified in subparagraph (A); and

"(G) the enforcement policies and practices in effect in the State which apply to licensed and regulated child care providers (including providers required to register).

"(3) UNIFORM REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Within 12 months after the date of the enactment of this subtitle, the Secretary shall establish uniform reporting requirements for use by the States in preparing the information required by this subsection, and make such other provision as may be necessary or appropriate to ensure that compliance with this subsection will not be unduly burdensome on the States.

"(4) INTERIM REPORT.—The Secretary shall issue an interim report on the matters described in paragraphs (1) and (2) with respect to fiscal year 1991, based on information made available by the States.

"(c) AUDITS.—Each State shall, not less often than every 2 years, audit the expenditures of the State from payments made under this subtitle. Such audits shall be conducted by an entity independent of any agency administering activities funded under this subtitle, in accordance with generally accepted auditing principles. Within 30 days after each such audit is completed, the State shall submit a copy of such audit to the legislature of the State and to the Secretary. Each State shall repay to the United States amounts ultimately found not to have been expended in accordance with this subtitle, or the Secretary may offset such amounts against any other amount to which the State is or may become entitled under this subtitle.

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subtitle:

"(1) CENTER-BASED CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term 'center-based child care provider' means a child care provider that provides child care services in a nonresidential facility, and may include a nonprofit institution of higher education.

"(2) FAMILY CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term 'family child care provider' means 1 individual who provides child care services to a child who does not reside with such individual, as the sole caregiver and in the private residence of such individual.

"(3) GROUP HOME CHILD CARE PROVIDER.—The term 'group home child care provider' means 2 or more individuals who jointly provide child care services in a private residence to a child who does not reside with any of such individuals.

"(4) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term 'institution of higher education' has the meaning given such term in section 481(a)(1) of the Higher Education Act of 1965, except that with respect to a tribally controlled community college such term has the meaning given it in section 2(a)(5) of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978.

"(5) POVERTY LINE.—The term 'poverty line' has the meaning given to such term in section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant Act.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Title XX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397 et seq.) is amended—

(A) by striking "this title" each place such term appears (except in section 2001 and the 3rd place such term appears in section 2002(d)) and inserting "this subtitle";

(B) by inserting "regular" before "allotment" each place such term appears;

(C) in section 2003(c), as amended by section 10201 of this Act, by striking paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) and inserting the following:

"(5) $2,900,000,000, for the fiscal year 1990;

"(6) $3,250,000,000, for the fiscal year 1991;

"(7) $3,500,000,000, for the fiscal year 1992; and

"(8) $3,700,000,000, for the fiscal year 1993 and each succeeding fiscal year."; and

(D) in section 2006(a), by striking "each such agency may provide its views on these reports" and inserting "the Secretary shall annually compile the reports transmitted to the Secretary and submit such annual compilation".

(2) The heading of section 2001 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397) is amended by striking "TITLE" and inserting "SUBTITLE".

(3) The heading of section 2003 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397b) is amended by inserting "REGULAR" before "ALLOTMENTS".

SEC. 11902. CHILD CARE STANDARDS IMPROVEMENT INCENTIVE GRANT PROGRAM; DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.

(a) GRANT PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—On October 1, 1989, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (in this subsection referred to as the "Secretary") shall establish a child care standards improvement incentive grant program to make grants to eligible States to assist such States in improving State child care standards in the categories described in section 2012(c) of the Social Security Act.

(2) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this subsection, the State desiring the grant shall prepare and submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary shall require, including—

(A) an assurance that the State will meet the requirements of paragraph (4)(C);

(B) information that shall—

(i) describe the present level of child care standards that are in effect in the State;

(ii) describe the prospective use of such grant; and

(iii) describe the expected improvement in the child care standards of the State;

(C) an assurance that the State will use any amounts received under a grant under this subsection to specifically improve its child care standards; and

(D) any other information that the Secretary determines appropriate.

(3) CONSIDERATION AND AWARDING OF GRANTS.—

(A) INITIAL GRANTS.—The Secretary shall consider applications submitted by States under paragraph (2), and shall award the initial grants under this section to States on a competitive basis after considering the following criteria:

(i) The relative quality of the existing child care standards of the State as described in the application in comparison to such standards of other States that submit applications.

(ii) The level of child care standards that the State desires to adopt and the State plans for achieving this improved level of standards.

(iii) The relative fiscal capacity of the State in comparison to that of other States that submit applications.

(B) SUBSEQUENT GRANTS.—In determining whether a State that submits an application under paragraph (2) for a subsequent grant under this subsection after the expiration of the previous grant, the Secretary shall award such grant based on the compliance of the State with the application for the previous grant. The Secretary may award a subsequent grant to a State that has not complied with such application of the State if the Secretary determines that factors beyond the control of the State significantly contributed to such noncompliance.

(4) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall pay each State awarded a grant under the program established under this subsection 80 percent of the costs to be incurred with respect to activities carried out under the grant.

(B) STATE CONTRIBUTION.—Each State awarded a grant under the program established under this subsection shall, from non-Federal sources, pay 20 percent of the costs to be incurred with respect to activities carried out under the grant.

(C) LIMITATION.—A State may not require any private provider of child care services that receives or seeks funds made available under title XX of the Social Security Act to contribute in cash or in kind to the State contribution required by subparagraph (B).

(5) USE OF GRANTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Each State that receives a grant under this subsection shall use amounts provided under such grant to specifically carry out the State's application for improving child care standards, as submitted by the State under paragraph (2).

(B) SPECIFIC USES.—In meeting the requirement of subparagraph (A), a State may use such amounts for any activity which is directly related to the State's application for improving child care standards.

(6) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—

(A) TERM OF GRANTS.—Grants made under the program established under this subsection shall be for a 2-year period with no State receiving more than 3 consecutive grants.

(B) TERMINATION.—The grant program established under this subsection shall terminate 8 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.—

(1) AUTHORITY TO MAKE DEMONSTRATION GRANTS.—The Secretary may make grants to not more than 10 eligible public agencies and private entities, in urban and rural areas, to administer child development models.

(2) APPLICATION FOR GRANT.—To be eligible to receive a grant under paragraph (1), a public agency or private entity (in this subsection referred to as the "applicant") shall submit to the Secretary an application that contains at least the following:

(A) Information demonstrating that the applicant has established, or will establish, a child development model.

(B) A detailed plan for the recruitment, training, and support of family child care satellites that will participate in such model.

(C) An assurance that each family child care satellite will be required by the applicant, as conditions of participating in such model—

(i) to pay to the applicant a minimal annual fee; and

(ii) to enter into a contract with the applicant requiring such satellite to provide high quality child care services to children for whom it provides child care services.

(D) A detailed plan for the continuing evaluation of such model and such satellites.

(E) A plan specifying in detail the expenditures the applicant will make, as part of administering a child development model, with such grant throughout a 2-year period.

(F) An assurance that resource materials acquired by such model with a grant received under paragraph (1) will be made available to any child care provider in the community.

(G) An assurance that with respect to each of the following categories of children, there is at least 1 participating satellite that will provide child care services:

(i) Children who are ill but not terminally ill.

(ii) Children who do not speak English as their primary language, if there is a reasonable number of such children in the geographical area in which such model will be administered.

(iii) Children who have a handicapping condition.

(H) An assurance that the applicant will recruit, train, monitor, and provide support for not fewer than 20, and not more than 35, family child care satellites.

(I) An assurance that the applicant will provide to each participating satellite training with respect to the following:

(i) Basic child development, including physical development, social and emotional development, intellectual development, and language development.

(ii) Developmentally appropriate activities.

(iii) Developmentally appropriate problem solving.

(iv) Providing family child care services as a business.

(J) Information describing the demographics of the population in the geographical area in which such model will be administered.

(K) An assurance that the applicant will prepare and submit to the Secretary, by such date as the Secretary may specify, the report required by paragraph (3)(B).

(L) Such information and assurances as the Secretary may require by rule.

(3) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—

(A) EVALUATION.—Each applicant that receives a grant under paragraph (1) shall evaluate each family child care satellite that participates in the child development model administered by the applicant. Such evaluation shall include—

(i) a determination, based on making monthly visits (with and without advance notice to such satellite), whether—

(I) the child care services provided by such satellite are appropriate for the ages of the children to whom such services are provided;

(II) the interaction of the staff of such satellite with such children is of good quality; and

(III) such satellite is providing nutritional food to such children to satisfy their needs;

(ii) a determination of the extent to which the community cluster of which such model is a part—

(I) expands the availability of quality child care for working families;

(II) encourages quality and professionalism in child care;

(III) encourages the emotional security of sustained relationships between children and child care providers;

(IV) serves as a model and information center for current and potential child care providers; and

(V) educates family child care providers on matters relating to quality child care; and

(iii) such other information as the Secretary may require by rule.

(B) REPORT.—In accordance with rules issued by the Secretary, submit to the Secretary a detailed description of the results of the evaluation conducted under subparagraph (A).

(4) REPORT BY THE SECRETARY.—Not later than April 1, 1992, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report describing the operation of the child development models that received grants under paragraph (1) and summarizing the evaluations received under paragraph (3)(B) by the Secretary.

(5) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subsection:

(A) CHILD CARE DEVELOPMENT CENTER.—The term "child care development center" means a center-based child care provider that provides child care services that include educational activities that are appropriate to the ages of participating children.

(B) CHILD DEVELOPMENT MODEL.—The term "child development model" means—

(i) a child care development center that—

(I) provides child care services at a single site (or at multiple sites in reasonably close proximity) to infants, toddlers, preschool children, and school-age children; and

(II) is capable of providing training and on-going assistance to satellites that provide child care services to sick children or to exceptional children; or

(ii) a high quality child care program that is capable of—

(I) recruiting, training, supporting, and monitoring family child care providers; and

(II) providing training and on-going assistance to satellites that provide child care services to sick or exceptional children.

(C) COMMUNITY CLUSTER.—The term "community cluster" means a child development model together with not fewer than 20, and not more than 35, family child care satellites.

(D) FAMILY CHILD CARE SATELLITE.—The term "family child care satellite" means a licensed or unlicensed family child care provider who is—

(i) capable of providing high quality child care services, as defined by such child development model; and

(ii) monitored and evaluated regularly by such child development model.

(E) HIGH QUALITY CHILD CARE PROGRAM.—The term "high quality child care program" means a child care program in which—

(i) participating children are well nourished;

(ii) the health of participating children is monitored;

(iii) participating children are supervised;

(iv) participating children have adequate space;

(v) ample equipment for learning is provided to participating children;

(vi) materials are incorporated into the child care environment in ways that are appropriate to the ages of participating children;

(vii) staff members who carry out such program have training in child development and teaching methods;

(viii) appropriate salaries and benefits are available to staff members;

(ix) such program is well planned and well organized;

(x) such program provides to parents unlimited access to their children while their children are receiving child care services provided by such program;

(xi) the number of participating children is appropriate; and

(xii) the ratio of staff members to participating children is appropriate.

(F) RESOURCE MATERIAL.—The term "resource material" means a printed or nonprint material relating to—

(i) child development or providing child care services; or

(ii) practical or legal matters applicable to the operation of a child care provider, including management, taxation, and insurance;

(G) SUPPORT.—The term "support" means—

(i) access to a toy lending library;

(ii) regular inservice programs on topics related to providing child care services;

(iii) development of a family child care satellite support group; and

(iv) regular visits from a resource specialist.

(c) LIMITATION ON AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For grants under this section, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary not to exceed $75,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1990 through 1997.

(2) DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.—2 percent of the amounts appropriated for each fiscal year pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be used to make grants under subsection (b) in such fiscal year.

SEC. 11903. EXPANSION OF EARNED INCOME TAX CREDIT.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 32 (relating to earned income tax credit) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an eligible individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable year an amount equal to the credit percentage of so much of the earned income for the taxable year as does not exceed $5,714.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The amount of the credit allowable to a taxpayer under this subsection for any taxable year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the credit percentage of $5,714, over

"(B) the phaseout percentage of so much of the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year as exceeds $9,000.

"(b) PERCENTAGES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"In the case of an eligible individual with—	The credit percentage is—	The phaseout percentage is—
1 qualifying child	17	12
2 qualifying children	21	15
3 or more qualifying children	25	18.

"(2) SUPPLEMENTAL YOUNG CHILD CREDIT.—In the case of a taxpayer with a qualifying child who has not attained age 6 as of the close of the calendar year in which or with which the taxable year of the taxpayer ends—

"(A) the credit percentage shall be increased by 6 percentage points, and

"(B) the phaseout percentage shall be increased by 4.25 percentage points.".

(b) QUALIFYING CHILD DEFINED.—Subsection (c) of section 32 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) QUALIFYING CHILD.—The term 'qualifying child' means any child (within the meaning of section 151(c)(3)) of the eligible individual if—

"(A) such individual is entitled to a deduction under section 151 for such child (or would be so entitled but for paragraph (2) or (4) of section 152(e)), and

"(B) such child has the same principal place of abode as such individual for more than one-half of the taxable year.".

(c) ADVANCE PAYMENT PROVISIONS.—

(1) PAYMENT BASED ON NUMBER OF QUALIFYING CHILDREN.—

(A) Subsection (b) of section 3507 is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting ", and", and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) states the number of qualifying children (as defined in section 32(c)(3)) of the employee for the taxable year and whether any such child is described in section 32(b)(2).".

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 3507(c) is amended—

(i) by striking "14 percent" in subparagraphs (B)(i) and (C)(i) and inserting "the credit percentage",

(ii) by striking "subsection (b)" in subparagraph (B)(ii) and inserting "subsection (a)(2)", and

(iii) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"For purposes of this paragraph, the determination of the credit percentage under section 32(b), and the determination of the amounts referred to in subparagraph (B)(ii), shall be made on the basis of the information specified in the earned income eligibility certificate.".

(C) Clause (i) of section 3507(e)(3)(A) is amended by inserting before ", or" the following: "(or changing the percentages applicable to the employee under section 32(b) for the taxable year)".

(2) EXPANDED PARTICIPATION IN ADVANCE PAYMENT PROGRAM.—Subsection (e) of section 3507 (relating to furnishing and taking effect of certificates) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) EMPLOYERS REQUIRED TO COLLECT CERTIFICATE OR STATEMENT OF INELIGIBILITY, ETC.—On or before the date of commencement of employment with an employer, the employer shall require the employee to furnish to the employer a signed earned income eligibility certificate or a signed statement that such employee does not meet the requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (b). As of the beginning of each calendar year, the employer shall require each employee with respect to whom an earned income eligibility certificate is in effect to determine whether there has been a change in circumstances requiring a new certificate or revocation of such certificate.".

(3) REPEAL OF CALENDAR YEAR LIMITATION ON EFFECTIVENESS OF CERTIFICATE.—

(A) Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 3507(e)(1) are each amended by striking "had been in effect for the calendar year" and inserting "is in effect".

(B) Paragraph (2) of section 3507(e) is amended—

(i) by striking "for any calendar year", and

(ii) by striking "during such calendar year".

(d) COORDINATION OF EARNED INCOME CREDIT WITH MEANS-TESTED PROGRAMS.—Section 32 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) COORDINATION OF CREDIT WITH MEANS-TESTED PROGRAMS.—

"(1) FEDERAL MEANS-TESTED TRANSFER PAYMENTS TREATED AS SUPPORT PROVIDED BY TAXPAYER.—Solely for purposes of determining whether any credit is allowable to an individual under this section (and the amount of credit so allowable), Federal means-tested payments shall be treated as support provided by such individual.

"(2) CREDIT DISREGARDED IN DETERMINING BENEFITS UNDER OTHER MEANS-TESTED PROGRAMS.—Any refund of tax by reason of this section, and any payment made by an employer under section 3507, shall not be taken into account as income or receipts for purposes of determining the eligibility (for the month in which such refund or payment is made or any month thereafter) of such individual or any other individual for benefits or assistance, or the amount or extent of benefits or assistance, under any Federal program or under any State or local program financed in whole or in part with Federal funds. The preceding sentence shall apply only if the individual (or the family unit of which the individual is a member) is a recipient of benefits or assistance under such a program for the month before the month in which such refund or payment is made.".

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (2) of section 32(f) is amended—

(A) by striking "subsection (b)" each place it appears in subparagraphs (A) and (B) and inserting "subsection (a)(2)", and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"Separate tables shall be prescribed for taxpayers with 1 qualifying child, 2 qualifying children, 3 or more qualifying children, and any qualifying child who has not attained age 6.".

(2) Subparagraph (A) of section 32(i)(2) is amended by striking "or (ii)" in clause (i) and by striking "clause (iii)" in clause (ii) and inserting "clause (ii)".

(3) Subparagraph (B) of section 32(i)(2) is amended by striking clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) and inserting the following:

"(i) the $5,714 amounts contained in subsection (a), and

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

Subtitle J—Capital Gain Provisions

PART I—REDUCTION IN CAPITAL GAINS TAX FOR NONCORPORATE TAXPAYERS

SEC. 11951. TEMPORARY REDUCTION IN CAPITAL GAINS TAX.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 (relating to treatment of capital gains) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 1202. TEMPORARY REDUCTION IN CAPITAL GAINS TAX FOR NONCORPORATE TAXPAYERS.

"(a) DEDUCTION ALLOWED FOR 30 PERCENT OF CAPITAL GAIN.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If, for any taxable year which includes any portion of the temporary rate reduction period, a taxpayer other than a corporation has a qualified net capital gain, an amount equal to 30 percent of the qualified net capital gain shall be allowed as a deduction. Such deduction shall be allowable in computing adjusted gross income.

"(2) ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—In the case of an estate or trust, the deduction under paragraph (1) shall be computed by excluding the portion (if any) of the gains for the taxable year from sales or exchanges of capital assets which, under sections 652 and 662 (relating to inclusions of amounts in gross income of beneficiaries of trusts), is includible by the income beneficiaries as gain derived from the sale or exchange of capital assets.

"(b) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 1(g).—In the case of any taxable year which includes any portion of the temporary rate reduction period, for purposes of section 1(g)(1)(A), the amount allowed as a deduction under subsection (a) shall be applied against (and operate to reduce) the amount of the qualified net capital gain as determined for purposes of section 1(g)(1)(A).

"(c) DEDUCTION NOT ALLOWED FOR PURPOSES OF MINIMUM TAX.—The deduction under subsection (a) shall not be allowed in determining alternative minimum taxable income.

"(d) QUALIFIED NET CAPITAL GAIN.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified net capital gain' means the lesser of—

"(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year, or

"(B) the net capital gain for the taxable year determined—

"(i) by taking into account only gain or loss from sales or exchanges occurring during the temporary rate reduction period, and

"(ii) by not taking into account any gain or loss from the sale or exchange of any collectible.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES FOR PASS-THRU ENTITIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In applying paragraph (1) with respect to any pass-thru entity, the determination of when a sale or exchange has occurred shall be made at the entity level.

"(B) PASS-THRU ENTITY DEFINED.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'pass-thru entity' means—

"(i) a regulated investment company,

"(ii) a real estate investment trust,

"(iii) an S corporation,

"(iv) a partnership,

"(v) an estate or trust, and

"(vi) a common trust fund.

"(3) COLLECTIBLE.—For purposes of this section, the term 'collectible' has the meaning given to such term by section 408(m)(2) without regard to section 408(m)(3).

"(e) TEMPORARY RATE REDUCTION PERIOD.—For purposes of this section, the term 'temporary rate reduction period' means the period beginning on September 14, 1989, and ending on December 31, 1991.

"(f) MODIFICATIONS TO OTHER PROVISIONS.—

"(1) For purposes of section 163(d), the deduction allowable under this section to the extent attributable to gain from dispositions of property held for investment shall be applied against (and operate to reduce) the net gain referred to in section 163(d)(4)(B)(ii).

"(2) In the case of any charitable contribution (other than of a collectible) by a person other than a corporation during the temporary rate reduction period, section 170(e)(1)(B) shall be applied by substituting '70 percent of the amount of gain' for 'the amount of gain'.

"(3) The deduction allowed under this section shall not be taken into account in determining the net operating loss under section 172 for any taxable year.

"(4) To the extent that the amount otherwise allowable as a deduction under section 642(c) consists of any gain taken into account in determining the qualified net capital gain, proper adjustment shall be made for any deduction allowable to the trust or estate under this section.

"(5) The deduction allowed under this section shall not be taken into account for purposes of section 643(a).

"(6) For purposes of this section, the rules of section 691(c)(4) shall apply.

"(7) The amount subject to tax under section 871(a)(2) shall be determined without regard to the deduction allowed under this section.

"(8) The deduction allowed under this section shall not be taken into account in determining the net earnings from self-employment of any options dealer (as defined in section 1402(i)) or commodities dealer (as so defined).

"(9) In the case of a withdrawal during the temporary rate reduction period, section 7518(g)(6)(A), and section 607(h)(6) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, shall each be applied by substituting '19.6 percent' for '28 percent'."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 1202. Temporary reduction in capital gains tax for noncorporate taxpayers."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending on or after September 14, 1989.

SEC. 11952. NET CAPITAL GAIN NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT UNDER PHASE OUT OF 15-PERCENT RATE AND PERSONAL EXEMPTIONS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subparagraph (A) of section 1(g)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) taxable income reduced by the qualified net capital gain, over".

(b) QUALIFIED NET CAPITAL GAIN.—Subsection (g) of section 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) QUALIFIED NET CAPITAL GAIN.—The term 'qualified net capital gain' means the lesser of—

"(A) the net capital gain for the taxable year, or

"(B) the net capital gain for the taxable year determined—

"(i) by taking into account only gain or loss from sales or exchanges on or after September 14, 1989, and

"(ii) by not taking into account any gain or loss from the sale or exchange of any collectible (as defined in section 408(m)(2) without regard to section 408(m)(3)).

For purposes of the preceding sentence the rules of section 1202(d)(2) shall apply."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending on or after September 14, 1989.

SEC. 11953. RECAPTURE UNDER SECTION 1250 OF TOTAL AMOUNT OF DEPRECIATION.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 1250 (relating to gain from disposition of certain depreciable realty) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, if section 1250 property is disposed of, the lesser of—

"(1) the depreciation adjustments in respect of such property, or

"(2) the excess of—

"(A) the amount realized (or, in the case of a disposition other than a sale, exchange, or involuntary conversion, the fair market value of such property), over

"(B) the adjusted basis of such property, shall be treated as gain which is ordinary income. Such gain shall be recognized notwithstanding any other provision of this subtitle.

"(b) DEPRECIATION ADJUSTMENTS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'depreciation adjustments' means, in respect of any property, all adjustments attributable to periods after December 31, 1963, reflected in the adjusted basis of such property on account of deductions (whether in respect of the same or other property) allowed or allowable to the taxpayer or to any other person for exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, or amortization (other than amortization under section 168 (as in effect before its repeal by the Tax Reform Act of 1976), 169, 185 (as in effect before its repeal by the Tax Reform Act of 1986), 188, 190, or 193). For purposes of the preceding sentence, if the taxpayer can establish by adequate records or other sufficient evidence that the amount allowed as a deduction for any period was less than the amount allowable, the amount taken into account for such period shall be the amount allowed."

(b) LIMITATION IN CASE OF INSTALLMENT SALES.—Subsection (i) of section 453 is amended—

(1) by striking "1250" the first place it appears and inserting "1250 (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1989)", and

(2) by striking "1250" the second place it appears and inserting "1250 (as so in effect)".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subparagraph (E) of section 1250(d)(4) is amended—

(A) by striking "additional depreciation" and inserting "amount of the depreciation adjustments", and

(B) by striking "ADDITIONAL DEPRECIATION" in the subparagraph heading and inserting "DEPRECIATION ADJUSTMENTS".

(2) Subparagraph (B) of section 1250(d)(6) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) DEPRECIATION ADJUSTMENTS.—In respect of any property described in subparagraph (A), the amount of the depreciation adjustments attributable to periods before the distribution by the partnership shall be—

"(i) the amount of gain to which subsection (a) would have applied if such property had been sold by the partnership immediately before the distribution at its fair market value at such time, reduced by

"(ii) the amount of such gain to which section 751(b) applied."

(3) Subparagraph (D) of section 1250(d)(8) is amended—

(A) by striking "additional depreciation" each place it appears and inserting "amount of the depreciation adjustments", and

(B) by striking "ADDITIONAL DEPRECIATION" in the subparagraph heading and inserting "DEPRECIATION ADJUSTMENTS".

(4) Paragraph (8) of section 1250(d) is amended by striking subparagraphs (E) and (F) and inserting the following:

"(E) ALLOCATION RULES.—For purposes of this paragraph, the amount of gain attributable to the section 1250 property disposed of shall be the net amount realized with respect to such property reduced by the greater of the adjusted basis of the section 1250 property disposed of, or the cost of the section 1250 property acquired, but shall not exceed the gain recognized in the transaction."

(5) Subsection (d) of section 1250 is amended by striking paragraph (10).

(6) Section 1250 is amended by striking subsections (e), (f), and (g) and by redesignating subsections (h) and (i) as subsections (g) and (h), respectively.

(7) Paragraph (5) of section 48(q) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) RECAPTURE OF REDUCTION.—For purposes of sections 1245 and 1250, any reduction under this subsection shall be treated as a deduction allowed for depreciation."

(8) Clause (i) of section 267(e)(5)(D) is amended by striking "section 1250(a)(1)(B)" and inserting "section 1250(a)(1)(B) (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1989)".

(9)(A) Subsection (a) of section 291 is amended by striking paragraph (1) and redesignating paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) as paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4), respectively.

(B) Subsection (c) of section 291 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) SPECIAL RULE FOR POLLUTION CONTROL FACILITIES.—Section 168 shall apply with respect to that portion of the basis of any property not taken into account under section 169 by reason of subsection (a)(4)."

(C) Section 291 is amended by striking subsection (d) and redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (d).

(D) Subparagraph (A) of section 265(b)(3) is amended by striking "291(e)(1)(B)" and inserting "291(d)(1)(B)".

(E) Subsection (c) of section 1277 is amended by striking "291(e)(1)(B)(ii)" and inserting "291(d)(1)(B)(ii)".

(10) Subsection (d) of section 1017 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) RECAPTURE OF DEDUCTIONS.—For purposes of sections 1245 and 1250—

"(1) any property the basis of which is reduced under this section and which is neither section 1245 property nor section 1250 property shall be treated as section 1245 property, and

"(2) any reduction under this section shall be treated as a deduction allowed for depreciation."

(11) Paragraph (5) of section 7701(e) is amended by striking "(relating to low-income housing)" and inserting "(as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1989)".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to dispositions on or after September 14, 1989, in taxable years ending after such date.

PART II—INDEXING OF CERTAIN ASSETS ACQUIRED AFTER 1991 FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING GAIN

SEC. 11961. INDEXING OF CERTAIN ASSETS ACQUIRED AFTER 1991 FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING GAIN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part II of subchapter O of chapter 1 (relating to basis rules of general application) is amended by inserting after section 1021 the following new section:

"SEC. 1022. INDEXING OF CERTAIN ASSETS ACQUIRED AFTER 1991 FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING GAIN.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—

"(1) INDEXED BASIS SUBSTITUTED FOR ADJUSTED BASIS.—Solely for purposes of determining gain on the sale or other disposition by an individual of an indexed asset which has been held for more than 1 year, the indexed basis of the asset shall be substituted for its adjusted basis.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR RECAPTURE GAIN.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply for purposes of determining the amount of recapture gain on the sale or other disposition of an indexed asset, but the amount of any such recapture gain shall increase the adjusted basis of the asset for purposes of applying paragraph (1) to determine the amount of other gain on such sale or other disposition.

"(B) RECAPTURE GAIN.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'recapture gain' means any gain treated as ordinary income under section 1245, 1250, or 1254.

"(b) INDEXED ASSET.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'indexed asset' means—

"(A) any stock in a corporation, and

"(B) any tangible property (or any interest therein), which is a capital asset or property used in the trade or business (as defined in section 1231(b)) and the holding period of which begins after December 31, 1991.

"(2) CERTAIN PROPERTY EXCLUDED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'indexed asset' does not include—

"(A) CREDITOR'S INTEREST.—Any interest in property which is in the nature of a creditor's interest.

"(B) COLLECTIBLES.—Any collectible (as defined in section 408(m)(2) without regard to section 408(m)(3)).

"(C) OPTIONS.—Any option or other right to acquire an interest in property.

"(D) NET LEASE PROPERTY.—In the case of a lessor, net lease property (within the meaning of subsection (i)(3)).

"(E) CERTAIN PREFERRED STOCK.—Stock which is fixed and preferred as to dividends and does not participate in corporate growth to any significant extent.

"(F) STOCK IN FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.—Stock in a foreign corporation.

"(G) STOCK IN S CORPORATIONS.—Stock in an S corporation.

"(3) EXCEPTION FOR STOCK IN FOREIGN CORPORATION WHICH IS REGULARLY TRADED ON NATIONAL OR REGIONAL EXCHANGE.—Paragraph (2)(F) shall not apply to stock in a foreign corporation the stock of which is listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange, or any domestic regional exchange for which quotations are published on a regular basis or is authorized for trading on the national market system operated by the National Association of Securities Dealers other than—

"(A) stock of a foreign investment company (within the meaning of section 1246(b)),

"(B) stock in a passive foreign investment company (as defined in section 1296), and

"(C) stock in a foreign corporation held by a United States person who meets the requirements of section 1248(a)(2).

"(c) INDEXED BASIS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) INDEXED BASIS.—The indexed basis for any asset is—

"(A) the adjusted basis of the asset, multiplied by

"(B) the applicable inflation ratio.

"(2) APPLICABLE INFLATION RATIO.—The applicable inflation ratio for any asset shall be determined by dividing—

"(A) the CPI for the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the disposition takes place, by

"(B) the CPI for the calendar year preceding the calendar year in which the taxpayer's holding period for such asset began.

The applicable inflation ratio shall not be taken into account unless it is greater than 1. The applicable inflation ratio for any asset shall be rounded to the nearest one-hundredth.

"(3) CONVENTIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (2), if any asset is disposed of during any calendar year—

"(A) such disposition shall be treated as occurring on the last day of such calendar year, and

"(B) the taxpayer's holding period for such asset shall be treated as beginning in the same calendar year as would be determined for an asset actually disposed of on such last day with a holding period of the same length as the actual holding period of the asset involved.

"(4) CPI.—For purposes of this subsection, the CPI for any calendar year shall be determined under section 1(f)(4).

"(d) SHORT SALES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a short sale of an indexed asset with a short sale period in excess of 1 year, for purposes of this title, the amount realized shall be an amount equal to the amount realized (determined without regard to this paragraph) multiplied by the applicable inflation ratio. In applying subsection (c)(2) for purposes of the preceding sentence, the date on which the property is sold short shall be treated as the date on which the holding period for the asset begins and the closing date for the sale shall be treated as the date of disposition.

"(2) SHORT SALE OF SUBSTANTIALLY IDENTICAL PROPERTY.—If the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse sells short property substantially identical to an asset held by the taxpayer, the asset held by the taxpayer and the substantially identical property shall not be treated as indexed assets for the short sale period.

"(3) SHORT SALE PERIOD.—For purposes of this subsection, the short sale period begins on the day after property is sold and ends on the closing date for the sale.

"(e) TREATMENT OF REGULATED INVESTMENT COMPANIES AND REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS.—

"(1) ADJUSTMENTS AT ENTITY LEVEL.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the adjustment under subsection (a) shall be allowed to any qualified investment entity (including for purposes of determining the earnings and profits of such entity).

"(B) EXCEPTION FOR CORPORATE SHAREHOLDERS.—Under regulations—

"(i) in the case of a distribution by a qualified investment entity (directly or indirectly) to a corporation—

"(I) the determination of whether such distribution is a dividend shall be made without regard to this section, and

"(II) the amount treated as gain by reason of the receipt of any capital gain dividend shall be increased by the percentage by which the entity's net capital gain for the taxable year determined without regard to this section exceeds the entity's net capital gain for such year determined with regard to this section, and

"(ii) there shall be other appropriate adjustments (including deemed distributions) so as to ensure that the benefits of this section are not allowed (directly or indirectly) to corporate shareholders of qualified investment entities.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, any amount includible in gross income under section 852(b)(3)(D) shall be treated as a capital gain dividend and an S corporation shall not be treated as a corporation.

"(C) EXCEPTION FOR QUALIFICATION PURPOSES.—This section shall not apply for purposes of sections 851(b) and 856(c).

"(D) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN TAXES IMPOSED AT ENTITY LEVEL.—

"(i) TAX ON FAILURE TO DISTRIBUTE ENTIRE GAIN.—If any amount is subject to tax under section 852(b)(3)(A) for any taxable year, the amount on which tax is imposed under such section shall be increased by the percentage determined under subparagraph (B)(i)(II). A similar rule shall apply in the case of any amount subject to tax under paragraph (2) or (3) of section 857(b) to the extent attributable to the excess of the net capital gain over the deduction for dividends paid determined with reference to capital gain dividends only. The first sentence of this clause shall not apply to so much of the amount subject to tax under section 852(b)(3)(A) as is designated by the company under section 852(b)(3)(D).

"(ii) OTHER TAXES.—This section shall not apply for purposes of determining the amount of any tax imposed by paragraph (4), (5), or (6) of section 857(b).

"(2) ADJUSTMENTS TO INTERESTS HELD IN ENTITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Stock in a qualified investment entity shall be an indexed asset for any calendar month in the same ratio as the fair market value of the assets held by such entity at the close of such month which are indexed assets bears to the fair market value of all assets of such entity at the close of such month.

"(B) RATIO OF 90 PERCENT OR MORE.—If the ratio for any calendar month determined under subparagraph (A) would (but for this subparagraph) be 90 percent or more, such ratio for such month shall be 100 percent.

"(C) RATIO OF 10 PERCENT OR LESS.—If the ratio for any calendar month determined under subparagraph (A) would (but for this subparagraph) be 10 percent or less, such ratio for such month shall be zero.

"(D) VALUATION OF ASSETS IN CASE OF REAL ESTATE INVESTMENT TRUSTS.—Nothing in this paragraph shall require a real estate investment trust to value its assets more frequently than once each 36 months (except where such trust ceases to exist). The ratio under subparagraph (A) for any calendar month for which there is no valuation shall be the trustee's good faith judgment as to such valuation.

"(3) QUALIFIED INVESTMENT ENTITY.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified investment entity' means—

"(A) a regulated investment company (within the meaning of section 851), and

"(B) a real estate investment trust (within the meaning of section 856).

"(f) OTHER PASS-THRU ENTITIES.—

"(1) PARTNERSHIPS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a partnership, the adjustment made under subsection (a) at the partnership level shall be passed through to the partners (but only for purposes of determining the income of partners who are individuals).

"(B) SPECIAL RULE IN THE CASE OF SECTION 754 ELECTIONS.—In the case of a transfer of an interest in a partnership with respect to which the election provided in section 754 is in effect—

"(i) the adjustment under section 743(b)(1) shall, with respect to the transferor partner, be treated as a sale of the partnership assets for purposes of applying this section, and

"(ii) with respect to the transferee partner, the partnership's holding period for purposes of this section in such assets shall be treated as beginning on the date of such adjustment.

"(2) S CORPORATIONS.—In the case of an S corporation, the adjustment made under subsection (a) at the corporate level shall be passed through to the shareholders. This section shall not apply for purposes of determining the amount of any tax imposed by section 1374 or 1375.

"(3) COMMON TRUST FUNDS.—In the case of a common trust fund, the adjustment made under subsection (a) at the trust level shall be passed through to the participants (but only for purposes of determining the income of participants who are individuals).

"(g) DISPOSITIONS BETWEEN RELATED PERSONS.—This section shall not apply to any sale or other disposition of property between related persons (within the meaning of section 465(b)(3)(C)) if such property, in the hands of the transferee, is of a character subject to the allowance for depreciation provided in section 167.

"(h) TRANSFERS TO INCREASE INDEXING ADJUSTMENT.—If any person transfers cash, debt, or any other property to another person and the principal purpose of such transfer is to secure or increase an adjustment under subsection (a), the Secretary may disallow part or all of such adjustment or increase.

"(i) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) TREATMENT AS SEPARATE ASSET.—In the case of any asset, the following shall be treated as a separate asset:

"(A) A substantial improvement to property.

"(B) In the case of stock of a corporation, a substantial contribution to capital.

"(C) Any other portion of an asset to the extent that separate treatment of such portion is appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(2) ASSETS WHICH ARE NOT INDEXED ASSETS THROUGHOUT HOLDING PERIOD.—The applicable inflation ratio shall be appropriately reduced for periods during which the asset was not an indexed asset.

"(3) NET LEASE PROPERTY DEFINED.—The term 'net lease property' means leased property where—

"(A) the term of the lease (taking into account options to renew) was 50 percent or more of the useful life of the property, and

"(B) for the period of the lease, the sum of the deductions with respect to such property which are allowable to the lessor solely by reason of section 162 (other than rents and reimbursed amounts with respect to such property) is 15 percent or less of the rental income produced by such property.

"(j) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section."

(b) GAINS AND LOSSES FROM INDEXED ASSETS NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT UNDER LIMITATION ON INVESTMENT INTEREST.—Subparagraph (B) of section 163(d)(4) (defining investment income) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences:

"Gain from the sale or other disposition of an indexed asset (as defined in section 1022) held for more than 1 year shall not be taken into account for purposes of the preceding sentence. The preceding sentence shall not apply to gain from the sale or other disposition of any such asset if the taxpayer elects to waive the benefits of section 1022 in determining the amount of such gain."

(c) REPEAL OF SECTION 1(j).—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (j) of section 1 is hereby repealed.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Paragraph (4) of section 694(c) is amended by striking "1(j), 1201, and 1211" and inserting "1201, and 1211".

(B)(i) Subparagraph (B) of section 904(b)(2) is amended by striking so much of such subparagraph as precedes clause (i) and inserting the following:

"(B) SPECIAL RULE WHERE CORPORATE CAPITAL GAIN RATE DIFFERENTIAL.—In the case of a corporation for any taxable year for which there is a capital gain rate differential—".

(ii) Subparagraph (D) of section 904(b)(3) is amended to read as follows:

"(D) CAPITAL GAIN RATE DIFFERENTIAL.—There is a capital gain rate differential for any taxable year in the case of a corporation if any rate of tax imposed by section 11, 511, or 831(a) or (b) (whichever applies) exceeds the alternative rate of tax under section 1201(a) (determined without regard to the last sentence of section 11(b)(1))."

(iii) Subparagraph (E) of section 904(b)(3) is amended by striking clauses (ii) and (iii) and inserting the following:

"(ii) HIGHEST APPLICABLE TAX RATE.—For purposes of clause (i), the term 'highest applicable tax rate' means the highest rate of tax specified in section 11(b).

"(iii) ALTERNATIVE TAX RATE.—For purposes of clause (i), the term 'alternative tax rate' means the alternative rate of tax under section 1201(a)."

(C)(i) The last sentence of subparagraph (A) of section 7518(h)(6) is amended to read as follows: "With respect to the portion of any nonqualified withdrawal made out of the capital gain account by a corporation during the taxable year to which section 1201(a) applies, the rate of tax taken into account under the preceding sentence shall not exceed 34 percent."

(ii) The last sentence of subparagraph (A) of section 607(h)(6) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, is amended to read as follows: "With respect to the portion of any nonqualified withdrawal made out of the capital gain account by a corporation during the taxable year to which section 1201(a) of such Code applies, the rate of tax taken into account under the preceding sentence shall not exceed 34 percent."

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part II of subchapter O of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1021 the following new item:

"Sec. 1022. Indexing of certain assets acquired after 1991 for purposes of determining gain."

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the amendments made by this section shall apply to dispositions of any property the holding period of which begins after December 31, 1991.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN TRANSACTIONS BETWEEN RELATED PERSONS.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall not apply to any property acquired after December 31, 1991, from a related person (as defined in section 465(b)(3)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) if—

(A) such property was so acquired for a price less than the property's fair market value, and

(B) the amendments made by this section did not apply to such property in the hands of such related person.

(3) SUBSECTION (c).—The amendments made by subsection (c) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1991.

PART III—TREATMENT OF CERTAIN TIMBER ACTIVITIES UNDER PASSIVE LOSS RULES

SEC. 11965. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN TIMBER ACTIVITIES UNDER PASSIVE LOSS RULES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (c) of section 469 (defining passive activity) is amended by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), as paragraphs (5), (6), and (7), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) CERTAIN INTERESTS IN TIMBER PROPERTY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'passive activity' shall not include any interest in qualified timber property (as defined in section 194(c)(1) held by a natural person directly or through an entity which does not limit the liability of such person with respect to such interest.

"(B) INCOME IN SUBSEQUENT YEARS.—If any taxpayer has any loss for any taxable year from an interest in any qualified timber property (as so defined) which is treated as a loss which is not from a passive activity, then any net income from such property (or any other property the basis of which is determined in whole or part by reference to the basis of such property) for any succeeding taxable year shall be treated as income of the taxpayer which is not from a passive activity."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (5) of section 469(c) (as redesignated by subsection (a)) is amended by striking "(2) and (3)" each place it appears and inserting "(2), (3), and (4)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments printed in section 1 of House Report 101-261 are considered as having been adopted.

The following is the text of the amendments considered to have been adopted in the House and in the Committee of the whole:

Strike out section 10412 of the bill and insert the following:

SEC. 10412. DUTY REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN LEATHER-RELATED PRODUCTS

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 213 of the Caribbean Basin Economic Recovery Act (19 U.S.C. 2703) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) The rate of duty on any handbag, luggage, flat good, work glove, or leather wearing apparel that—

"(A) is a product of a beneficiary country; and

"(B) was not designated on August 5, 1983, as an eligible article for the purpose of the generalized system of preferences under title V of the Trade Act of 1974; is a rate equal to 50 percent of the general column 1 rate of duty under the HTS that would apply to such article but for this paragraph.

"(2) The President shall proclaim the rates of duty imposed under paragraph (1).

"(3) The duty applied under paragraph (1) to an article is in lieu of the duty provided for that article under general column 1 of the HTS.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 213(b) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out ", handbags, luggage, flat goods, work gloves, and leather wearing apparel" in paragraph (2);

(2) by striking out "or" at the end of paragraph (4);

(3) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting "; or"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) articles to which reduced rates of duty apply under subsection (h).".

On page 702, delete the item relating to "Importation of Radio Frequency Devices" under "Miscellaneous Charges" and redesignate the following items accordingly.

Strike section 8002 and insert the following:

SEC. 8002. FUNDING OF COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS FOR CERTAIN POSTAL SERVICE ANNUITANTS AND SURVIVOR ANNUITANTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 8348 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(m)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the United States Postal Service shall be liable for that portion of any estimated increase in the unfunded liability of the Fund which is attributable to any benefits payable from the Fund to former employees of the Postal Service who first become annuitants by reason of separation from the Postal Service on or after October 1, 1986, or to their survivors, or to the survivors of individuals who die on or after October 1, 1986, while employed by the Postal Service, when the increase results from a cost-of-living adjustment under section 8340 of this title.

"(2) The estimated increase in the unfunded liability referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be determined by the Office after consultation with the Postal Service. The Postal Service shall pay the amount so determined to the Office in 15 equal annual installments with interest computed at the rate used in the most recent valuation of the Civil Service Retirement System, and with the first payment thereof due at the end of the fiscal year in which the cost-of-living adjustment with respect to which the payment relates becomes effective.

"(3) In determining the amount for which the Postal Service is liable under this subsection in cases in which the benefits involved are based on service of an individual who performed 1 or more forms of service besides employment with the Postal Service, the amount of the Postal Service's liability shall be prorated to reflect only that portion of total service which is attributable to employment with the Postal Service."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE; SIZE OF ANNUAL INSTALLMENTS TO FUND EARLIER COLAs; ADDITIONAL AMOUNT INITIALLY PAYABLE.—

(1) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section and the amendment made by this section shall be effective as of October 1, 1986.

(2) SIZE OF ANNUAL INSTALLMENTS TO FUND PREVIOUS YEARS' COLAs.—Notwithstanding any provision of section 8348(m) of title 5, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), the estimated increase in the unfunded liability referred to in paragraph (1) of such section 8348(m) shall be payable based on annual installments equal to—

(A) $100,000 each, with respect to the cost-of-living adjustment which took effect in fiscal year 1987;

(B) $6,000,000 each, with respect to the cost-of-living adjustment which took effect in fiscal year 1988; and

(C) $15,000,000 each, with respect to the cost-of-living adjustment which took effect in fiscal year 1989.

(3) ADDITIONAL AMOUNT PAYABLE.—

(a) GENERALLY.—The first payment made under the provisions of section 8348(m) of title 5, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)) shall include, in addition to the amount which would otherwise be payable at the time, an amount equal to the sum of any amounts which would have been due under those provisions in any prior year if this section had been enacted before October 1, 1986.

(B) COMPUTATION METHOD.—Subject to paragraph (2), the additional amount payable under this paragraph shall be computed in accordance with section 8348(m) of title 5, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), and shall include interest. Interest on an amount—

(i) shall be computed at the rate used in the most recent valuation of the Civil Service Retirement System;

(ii) shall accrue, and be compounded, annually; and

(iii) shall be computed for the period beginning on the date by which such amount should have been paid (if this section had been enacted before October 1, 1986) and ending on the date on which payment is made.

At the end of the bill insert the following new title:

TITLE XII—MISCELLANEOUS

Any transfer of outlays, receipts, or revenues from one fiscal year to an adjacent fiscal year that occurs pursuant to any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be considered a necesssary (but secondary) result of a significant policy change as provided in section 202(b) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987.

Insert after section 3403 of the bill the following:

SEC. 3404. APPLICATION OF OTHER ACTS.

Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (as amended) shall be deemed applicable to any program or activity assisted under any provision of subtitle E, or of any amendment made by such subtitle E, to the same extent and in the same manner as any program or activity included within the meaning of such term under such title IX. References in subtitle E, or any amendment made by subtitle E, to section 654 of the Head Start Act shall be construed so as to be consistent with such title IX.

The CHAIRMAN. No other amendments are in order except that amendments printed in section 2 of House Report 101-261. Said amendments may be offered only by the Member indicated in House Report 101-261 or his designee, may be offered only in the order and manner specified, and shall be considered as having been read. Debate on said amendments shall be equally divided by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed thereto. Said amendments are not subject to amendment except as specified in House Report 101-261.

If more than one of the amendments relating to catastrophic health insurance (amendments No. 6 and 7) are adopted, only the latter amendment adopted shall be considered as finally adopted and reported back to the House.

If more than one of the amendments relating to child care (amendments No. 9 and 10) are adopted, only the latter amendment adopted shall be considered as finally adopted and reported back to the House.

The Chair will announce the amendment made in order by House Resolution 249 and the name of its sponsor in order to give notice to the Committee of the Whole as to the order of recognition.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 1 printed in section 2 of House Report 101-261.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to advise the Members of what amendments we will consider today so that they are aware of the ones we will have today and hopefully tomorrow and next week and in what order.

Today we will first take up the amendment of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] to strike the Visclosky provision. The time allotted for that is 60 minutes.

The second amendment, also with a time allotment of 60 minutes, will be by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] for the repeal of section 89.

The third amendment will be offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] to strike the diversion from aviation. That will also have 60 minutes.

Tomorrow, hopefully we would take up the capital gains amendment and on Tuesday the Fairness Doctrine and the catastrophic health care area, and on Wednesday the child care amendments. That is the order we anticipate right now in order to complete the reconciliation bill.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MRS. ROUKEMA

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment made in order by the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. ROUKEMA: On page 149, strike out line 1 and all that follows through page 150, line 22 and redesignate succeeding subsections accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] will be recognized for 30 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], the ranking member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, during the last several hours we have heard a lot of political rhetoric, but now we are at an issue that is not political. This is neither a Democrat issue, it is not a Republican issue, it is not a labor issue, it is not a management issue. What we are talking about now is charting a new course when dealing with pensions without any planning, without any studies, without any hearings.

Charting a new course is fine if you are taking the voyage by yourself, but if you are charting a new course and there are millions of Americans who could be affected and who could be adversely affected, then I think we had better think about what we should be doing in relationship to hearings and in relationship to study. We have no idea, no idea what the Visclosky amendment will do to the pension system in this country.

We do know one thing: We know that the people responsible for making sure that money is available will not have total responsibility and could lose, and they will pay. It will not be the employee who will pay. It will be the employer who will pay if, as a matter of fact, we made bad investments. So, again, it is not a political issue.

We are talking about millions of Americans whose pensions we want to make sure we protect, and I would ask all of my colleagues not to think in political terms. It is not Democrat, it is not Republican, it is not labor, it is not management. It is the future of millions of pension programs for those who are presently receiving their benefits and those who are about to receive those benefits.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY].

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Chairman, I appear here today to urge you to vote against a motion-to-strike the Visclosky provision from the budget reconciliation bill. My provision would require equal employee and management representation on the board of trustees for single-employer pension plans. This is a good provision and one of basic fairness.

Pensions are deferred income and workers should have a voice in how their pension funds are invested. Workers understand all too well that their retirement income depends upon the wise and profitable investment of their pension funds.

Originally introduced as H.R. 2664 on June 15, the provision is the direct result of 3 days of hearings convened last spring by the Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations to examine the role of pension funds in corporate takeovers.

In those hearings, I found testimony from Thomas Donahue, to be particularly troubling. He cited the case of the Texaco buyout of Getty which resulted in the termination of the Getty pension plan and adversely affected 18,000 Getty workers by usurping $250 million in so-called excess pension assets.

To those who argue that hearings were not held specifically on the issue of joint trusteeship, I would like to quote from Mr. Donahue's statement of February 9, 1989:

[The Texaco buyout] highlights the problem workers face in single-employer plans when they are denied any voice in the administration or in the investment of pension fund assets.

Further, my provision reflects the concerns of the Education and Labor Committee over the pernicious effects of leveraged buyouts specifically and other corporate mergers and acquisitions generally. On July 13, the major elements of H.R. 2664 were approved by the full Education and Labor Committee as part of its budget reconciliation recommendations.

According to the General Accounting Office, 40 percent of LBO's result in the termination of one or more of the pension funds of the corporation that has been taken over.

My provision does not affect terminations or reversions of pension fund assets. However, worker representation on the board of trustees for the company threatened with a hostile takeover would be crucial in such a situation.

Pension fund trustees often vote proxies in takeover battles. Without employee representatives on these boards, the interests of the workers affected by the takeover are not taken into consideration.

The boards of trustees make investment decisions, but they do not control the formation or termination of pension plans or the distribution of benefits.

In fact, employee and management trustees share a common interest in sound investment. All trustees are governed by ERISA's fiduciary guidelines, which require that the pension fund assets are managed in the sole interests of the plan participants.

Given this fiduciary standard, there is no reason to believe that joint trusteeship will cause far-reaching changes in the investment of most funds.

This concept of joint trusteeship is not unprecedented.

Seven States have public employee representation on pension commissions that review pension and retirement legislation and conduct fiscal impact studies of legislative changes.

Also, for over 40 years, since the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act in 1948, employee/management boards have profitably overseen multiemployer pension plans.

In 1987, these multiemployer plans covered 9.7 million plan participants and held assets of $164 billion.

In a 1988 study conducted by the consulting firm of Martin E. Segal, stated that:

> The funded status of multiemployer plans is excellent and comparable to the funded status of single-employer plans.

I would like to clarify the election procedure under which the employee trustees would be chosen. All my provision mandates is that the elections be conducted by secret ballot with a certification of the results.

The Secretary of Labor would initially establish the guidelines for the elections. Once with guidelines have been established, there would not be a need for the National Labor Relations Board to supervise the elections as is often the case in union elections. The cost of worker trustee elections would be nominal.

In union elections, the interests of workers and management are often adversarial, and close supervision by the NLRB is necessary to protect both sides. Since workers and management share a common interest in the performance of pension funds, trustee elections will not provoke the same sort of antagonism that makes costly supervision necessary.

For those of you who are concerned about small businesses and the effect of this provision on "mom and pop" pension plans, I can make the assurance that provisions will be made in conference for small businesses.

We live in an era where concern for worker rights is often dismissed simply as evidence of an antibusiness bias. Such a characterization has been applied to my provision which gives workers and management equal representation on the boards of trustees that govern single-employer pension plans. My bill recognizes the legitimate right of all workers to influence investment decisions that affect the deferred wages accumulated in their pension funds.

The issue of joint trusteeship is a simple matter of fairness.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VISCLOSKY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Under the Visclosky amendment, if an employer who is sponsoring a single-employer plan did not like what the newly created trustees are doing, is there anything in the Visclosky amendment or currently in law that would keep the employer from terminating if he does not like what the trustees are doing that are created under your amendment?

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Not at all.

Mr. BARTLETT. He could just terminate anyway?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA], for yielding. I compliment her on the amendment and say, to avoid confusion and dissension among employees and because of my support for small business, I enthusiastically support her amendment, and urge all of our colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. Chairman, I want to express my strong support for the amendment offered by my colleague from New Jersey, MARGE ROUKEMA. The Roukema amendment would delete from the budget reconciliation bill the most onerous and ill-conceived pension-related provision in title III.

This provision, referred to as the Visclosky amendment, would require that all single-employer pension plans be controlled by a joint board of labor and management trustees. This proposal would require employee elections in any business that sponsors any pension plan, regardless of whether the employees are organized or not; require the Department of Labor to supervise these elections among some 700,000 different pension plans and consequently inject the U.S. Government into union organizing efforts.

If enacted, these new mandates necessarily would politicize the administration, liability, and investment of several hundred billion dollars of pension assets, thus endangering the security of pension benefits and the stability of investment markets. Further, these changes would create confusion and dissension among employees. The proposal fails to provide for the high likelihood of disputes among workers who are covered by more than one union as well as workers who are not covered by any union. Indeed, the bill appears to require that a union would represent nonunion employees even if those employees have rejected union representation.

Perhaps most damaging of all, there is evidence that the proposal would result in weaker funding for pension plans. A recent study by the Employee Benefits Research Insitute showed a full percentage point difference in investment performance between single-employer and multiemployer pension plans which are under joint trusteeship. As a result, the investments of single-employer plans have significantly and consistently outperformed those of multiemployer plans.

Unfortunately, the effect of this proposal will fall disproportionately on America's small businesses, as well as lower income workers wo stand to lose their pension benefit as a consquence of these provisions. Tragically, these workers are least able to contribute to individual retirement accounts as an alternative.

I must reiterate that the Visclosky amendment is the most onerous pension-related provision in the bill, since the Education and Labor Committee included in their section several provisions which would threaten the viability of the voluntary private pension system. I regret that the Rules Committee did not make in order Representative ROUKEMA's original amendment to strike all the bill's misguided provisions on pension benefit plans.

While all these provisions are cause for concern, we have an opportunity to remove the most damaging provision, the Visclosky amendment. Let me stress that this provision would discourage the creation, maintenance, and proper funding of pension plans at a time when we should be making greater efforts to expand pension coverage for our Nation's current and retired work force. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the Roukema amendment.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, as the ranking minority member of the Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor, I want in the strongest possible terms to urge my colleagues to support the Roukema amendment to strike the most radical change ever proposed to the ERISA pension law in its 15-year history.

Let me first summarize the effects of the so-called Visclosky amendment which requires contentious trustee elections to be held next year in each of this Nation's 1.5 million pension plans. Talk about disruption. Nowhere does this provision say how the trustees will be chosen among the 68.5 million affected current and former employee and retiree pension plan participants. This is the case for defined benefit plans, defined contribution plans, for plans covering hundreds of thousands of participants or the smallest of plans covering a single, solitary worker. From mega-corporations to mom-and-pop operations, the enormity of this undertaking could lead one to dismiss the Visclosky provision as unworkable, untenable, and unbelievable—but it's here in the bill and must be stricken before it inflicts untold damage to the private pension system.

To say that this amendment is misguided is an understatement. No wonder it was rammed into reconciliation without notice or even a single hour of hearings. It would radically alter the voluntary pension system and negatively affect the capital markets. It could distort plan investment strategy, reduce equity holdings, and lower investment returns, thus jeopardizing the pension levels for millions of employees and retirees, and send labor-management relations into chaos.

In short, if left in this legislation in any form, this single provision will reverse the well-reasoned ERISA pension policies that have stood the test of time in nourishing private pension development.

The administration has communicated these same concerns. The Secretary of Labor, Elizabeth Dole, in urging support for the Roukema amendment, states her strong opposition to the Visclosky provision which would politicize the Nation's employee pensions.

I also oppose the inclusion of these provisions because they are not germane to budget reconciliation, because they were adopted by circumventing the normal legislative process, and because their substance is contrary to the purpose of ERISA to encourage the establishment and continuation of defined benefit and other pension plans.

In reflection, I think it unfortunate that over the last few years budget reconciliation has become the preferred vehicle for major changes to our Nation's pension and other employee benefit laws. This use of the budget process has truncated and suppressed balanced hearings and the sort of reasoned and bipartisan deliberations which led to the enactment of ERISA years ago.

This led to the inclusion in this year's budget bill of not only the Visclosky amendment, but to other interlinked provisions. They include an absolute prohibition on the reversion to employers of excess assets upon plan termination; and ERISA report filing fees ranging from $100 to $500 per plan and $200 per participant upon plan termination. The filing fees on pension and health plans were included only to pay for the revenue reductions of the other provisions, but are insidious on their own, represent new taxes, and will discourage pension and health plan coverage under 5.4 million plans.

I had originally asked that all of these "gang-of-three" be deleted, but at least we will now have the opportunity to remove the leader of this gang from causing further damage.

In several instances the Visclosky provision could also be found in conflict with the labor policies and precedents under the National Labor Relations Act and the Labor-Management Relations Act [Taft-Hartley Act]. By legislating mandated elections in the nonunion setting and, in certain cases, mandating union representation of nonunion employees, the amendment conflicts and overrides the current statutory rights of such employees. Conflicts will also arise among unions when a single plan covers employees under different collective bargaining agreements. As pension plan participants, employees and retirees often have competing interests. How would these conflicts and those of other disparate participant groups be resolved? In this connection the legislation does not tell us, and it certainly raises more questions than answers. What is clear, however, is that mandated elections and trustee representation will create new tensions and a battleground in labor-management relations.

Even if plans and their participants and plan sponsors could resolve these contentious election issues, the representation and composition of the resulting joint boards of trustees may subject investment decisions and other plan operations to political and social objectives contrary to longstanding ERISA policy and Department of Labor investment guidelines. In fact, the amendment's supporters state that it will provide a needed safeguard against the pressures and effects of corporate mergers, acquisitions, and LBO's. But on what basis? Clearly the current ERISA fiduciary law has provided plan participants with comprehensive and adquate protection.

There has been no evidence offered as to abuses or other conditions which would necessitate such a radical change in ERISA's fiduciary standards. Not only is there no evidence under single-employer plans of systemic fiduciary problems, to the contrary, there is no need to require employees to become fiduciaries because ERISA already requires trustees to exercise independent fiduciary judgment solely in the interest of participants and beneficiaries. Other than organized labor, what groups of employees are asking for this change? None that I know of. Among these millions of employees, yet to be heard from, who among them would consider themselves expert in planning fiduciary matters and how many, if any, would be willing to accept exposure of millions of dollars in personal liability under ERISA? If adopted, under the amendment, banks and other expert fiduciaries would be displaced by a board of trustees, many of whom would lack the necessary fiduciary skills.

It is not hard to imagine the chaotic situation that would likely result in the Nation's financial institutions and markets from such a precipitous change in ERISA investment law. While under defined benefit pension plans the employer sponsor would continue to bear the full risk of investment losses, the amendment would undermine the prerogative of plan sponsors to select and discharge trustees solely on the quality of their performance. In the long run the Nation's equity markets could be impaired as joint trustees avoid common stock purchase in favor of fixed investments. One constituent company has told me that if only a small percentage of the estimated $600 billion in pension fund equity investments were shifted, the negative effect on the equity markets could be severe. This potential, but likely, result is in marked contrast to the policies that both the Bush administration and the Congress have announced in the last few days to encourage savings and lessen the disadvantage of raising capital through equity means.

Given these weighty concerns with the amendment, is it possible that there is more to its intended effect than first meets the eye? In the statement of introduction, the amendment's sponsor expresses concern over pension plan terminations that may accompany various changes in corporate structure. The committee's majority views also state that, "There is no reason why participants in single-employer pension plans should not be governed by the same principles as multiemployer plans," which, by the way of definition only involve plans subject to collective bargaining agreements.

There are untold and unexamined legal consequences to this provision. The Visclosky amendment would appear to make redundant the specific provision prohibiting excess asset re-versions in the Education and Labor reconciliation instructions. Unlike the original Clay/Metzenbaum reversion legislation which specifically mandates COLA's, the prohibition approach would indirectly require excess assets in some indeterminate way to be distributed to participants and beneficiaries upon plan termination.

In fact, any provision prohibiting pension reversions will not only increase the budget deficit—$1.6 billion over 5 years—but will lead to the demise and underfunding of defined benefit plans while also impairing the equity markets as companies turn to fixed investments to limit their exposure to investment risk. To employers relying on current law regarding about $210 billion in excess assets, the provision would be confiscatory. Employees would also face a greater risk of loss of pension accruals or plan coverage as plans become underfunded or are terminated at the point of asset sufficiency. With fewer employees covered under defined benefit plans, employee retirment income security will be greatly impaired for future generations. And this just at the time we should be encouraging retirement savings for baby-boomers and post-boomers.

In conclusion, I would think it quite apparent that the Visclosky amendment raises more questions and could create more serious problems than their proponents say they want to solve. They would disrupt the operations of defined benefit and defined contribution plans, of large as well as small plans—whether covering one or hundreds of thousands of participants—and nonnegotiated as well as union-negotiated plans. Many employers, especially including Keogh and IRA plan sponsors, would terminate their plans rather than incur the expense and labor-management problems inherent in this proposal. Neither would they create new plans.

In short, if you liked sec. 89 and the Catastrophic Illness bill you'll love the fallout from Visclosky. For the reasons I have stated, and many others, I strongly urge my colleagues to vote for the Roukema amendment to remove at least this one isuse from contention and help save the private pension system from a behind-the-scenes deal which could be devastating to fiduciary protections and the future expansion of pension coverage for this Nation's employees and retirees.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR].

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Visclosky provision in the reconciliation bill requiring equal representation for workers on the boards of trustees of single-employer pension plans.

The issue before us today is one of fairness.

Since 1948, under the Taft-Hartley Act, workers and employers have been equally represented on the boards of trustees of multiemployer pension plans.

The Visclosky provision would simply extend this principle to single-employer pension plans.

Workers have a right to share in managing their own pension plans. The retirement benefits are theirs, and are in essence deferred wages.

Workers must be equal partners with their employers in determining how these funds are invested. They know what's in their own interest better than anyone.

The evidence indicates that when workers are involved, wise investment decisions will be made.

Multiemployer pension plans, managed by joint boards of trustees for the last 40 years, have performed just as well as single-employer pension funds.

By granting workers an equal say, boards of trustees can make better decisions about the investment security of pension funds—about their impact on American families and communities.

Workers and employers share the same goals: Efficient pension plan management and prudent investment decisions. Together they can determine which investments will yield the most income with the greatest security. Equal representaion will help avoid adversarial relationships in managing these funds.

Equal worker-management representation has been successful in multiemployer pension plans. There's no reason it won't work just as well for single-employer plans.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the motion to strike the Visclosky provision from the bill.

It is a matter of fairness and of the right of American workers to secure retirement benefits.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONIOR. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman know that the PBGC has in fact calculated officially that the investment returns of multiemployer plans are approximately 1½ percent below, per annum, the investment returns of single-employer plans if you take them up group by group?

Mr. BONIOR. I am not aware of that. In fact, the figures and facts and data that I have on multiemployer pension plans indicate that over the last 40 years they have performed as well as single-employer pension plans.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman would yield further.

Mr. BONIOR. I yield.

Mr. BARTLETT. In fact, the PBGC has calculated that the return by multiemployer pension plans is about 1½ percent per annum less than single-employer pension plans as a group. I would be happy to show the gentleman the source of the data.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman suggesting perhaps we ought to move away from equal representation on boards of multiemployer pension plans because of that figure?

Mr. BARTLETT. No, I am not. The point here of course is that a single-employer pension plan, the single employer has the complete responsibility for making up the investment losses. So with that responsibility ought to go the authority to make certain the investments in fact accrue to the beneficiaries of the plan participants, but with the responsibility should go the authority to make the investment decisions.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I have a great deal of respect for Mr. VISCLOSKY and Mr. CLAY. I hate to disagree with them on this issue.

What we have to talk about is that these plans are voluntary plans. No one is required to setup one of these plans.

Now I do not know what is going to happen to the ones that are in existence, they certainly could go out of existence and many of them do go out of existence.

But I think if you think it through, there will never be any more of them setup if you breach this matter.

I do not know who the money belongs to. I think that is an open question. I think most of the money belongs to the taxpayers. You have to remember that all the money put into these pension plans first of all is tax deductible. We have just come from a 46 percent tax rate.

Then there is the inside buildup on these funds which is tax-free. So most of the money in these funds belongs to the taxpayer. Maybe we should take that into consideration in these surplus-funded plans.

But I can tell you this from my experience, and I worked on this for a long time when ERISA came about: If we do what is suggested here, there just will be no new plans.

Mr. Chairman, America needs these private pension plans. We should not do that. The subject matter that has been brought up here is one that should be referred to both the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Education and Labor; we should have some understanding as to the ramifications of it. It just has not been done.

So on that ground that it has not been considered by the main committee of jurisdiction, and it is a tax deduction that we are talking about here now more than anything else, and the fiduciary control of it all came out of the Committee on Ways and Means. We have not had any exposure to this. I am openminded on it. But if it is adopted now and becomes law, there will just be no more plans, no new plans.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIBBONS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with my friend from Florida that this is not the proper way to find an answer to the problem we have facing us in the pension program.

The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Education and Labor have been at odds here now for the past two sessions, trying to find some kind of an answer. I do not think the proper way, in a matter of trusteeship, should be handled in a reconciliation bill. We ought to have a bill come out of the committee, so that we have a chance to vote on it, where we have hearings and know exactly what it is.

As it is, we are trying to settle very major issues in reconciliation.

Now I am not going to vote for this Visclosky amendment, but I say that without prejudice, because it seems to me that both the working people and the management have got to realize we need to make some changes and I hope in the next session we can approach it in that kind of spirit.

At this point I think it would be improper to do this through reconciliation.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] has made a very good statement.

I would say to my friends from the Committee on Education and Labor they can accomplish their goals through collective bargaining if that is really what they want, but they should not prohibit the establishment of new plans.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, how many times on the floor of the House have we heard Members speak, particularly on the Republican side of the aisle, about their belief that opening the economy of a nation to competition and collective bargaining will result not just in industrial democracy but in political democracy. Whether the setting is in Eastern Europe or Central America, many times we have heard the argument that democracy is followed or is complemented by an open economy.

The Visclosky amendment tests whether Americans believe in industrial democracy only as an export product or will accept it for domestic consumption in the United States.

Historically in the United States we have expanded the voice of American workers with collective bargaining, profit sharing, employee membership on corporate boards. Mr. VISCLOSKY challenges us to give American workers a voice in deciding the fate of their retirement plans, an issue just as critical as wages, hours, working conditions.

Opponents would argue that you just cannot trust employees to make the best decision when it comes to the investment of their retirement funds. I do not believe that for a minute.

Workers will guard these investments in their future just as carefully, if not more so, as management.

Others just do not want to see blue collars or coveralls in the board rooms. To that elitist and reactionary position I can only say, "Step aside."

The democratic principles that guide this country are just as valid in the work place as they are in the polling place. The Visclosky language is an affirmation of our confidence in democracy and deserves our solid support.

Vote "no" on the Roukema amendment.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington, [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I join many of my colleagues in suggesting that Mr. VISCLOSKY has in mind here a perfectly legitimate goal. I do not question his motives in the least.

Let me make a couple of points that would tend to, I think, persuade perhaps one to conclude this is not a good idea.

First of all, Mr. VISCLOSKY in his comments said that leverage buyouts would somehow be affected by membership on these investment boards of workers. That is a totally irrelevant issue to this debate. It has absolutely nothing to do with this.

In a leveraged buyout, when a plan termination is involved, that is a decision of the employer. The employer makes that decision, and this group of workers would have absolutely nothing to do with it. So set that aside; LBO's are totally separate.

Our colleague from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], who just happens to know something about this issue from his years of experience, concluded, as I did, that workers also do not need this so-called protection.

In 1974 President Ford signed the Employee Retirement Income Security Act [ERISA]. When he did so, he put in place protections for workers that had never existed before, and ERISA has worked pretty well.

The problem is now we are going to say that an employers must share responsibility with employees for decision making on the investment of pension plan assets. Also, employers are going to say, "No." They will not do it. What is their alternative? Well, the answer is clear in the response to the question from the gentleman from Texas. They can and will terminate their plans, or as our friend from Florida said, they will not set them up in the first place.

In the last 10 to 15 years this Congress has changed tax and pension law practically every year. The Congress has heaped on new requirements, year after year. What has been the result? Members can look back at years 1983, 1984, 1985, and I will tell Members what plan sponsors were doing. They were doing then what they will do if this amendment stays in place. They were terminating their plans in record numbers, and that is what will result from the Visclosky amendment.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Roukema amendment, and in support of the amendment by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY]. The issue here is one of fairness. Several people have risen already today and said that, in fact, this is a radical proposal, that somehow to give employees a voice over their retirement, over the use of their pension funds, is radical. Did the Congress think it was radical when we provided tax benefits so that the employer could hand off ownership to the employees, as we give them ESOP's? Do they think it is radical when we give them IRA's, so people can take control over their retirements, and make the investments wherever they want? Is it radical that the employees of United Airlines are smart enough, apparently, to guide this company against some of the captains of private enterprise, to win that effort to buy United Airlines, but they are not smart enough to invest their pension funds?

How can this be? How can this be? We celebrate employees taking over the Gdansk shipyard in Poland, but do not let an American employee have a say in their retirement, because they would squander the money. What would they do? Would they do what the employers are doing now, put it into a fund to participate in the purchase of junk bonds, as they are doing today with employees? Would they invest it in savings and loan stocks as the employers are doing today? Radical.

What would be radical, would be to take the money away from the people who are investing it today and give it to the people. Now, Members say the Government cannot do this because it is an employer's money. Yes, but how did the pension get earned? The employer said, "I will put a dime into the pension plan if you work an hour." That sounds like money, because I just gave them an hour's work, and he got a percent of the profit. He got to pay off his debt, and he got to participate in his pension plan. What is radical about employees directing where they would like these benefits made? This is where America should be going, in the cooperation between employers and employees, where we can increase the productivity, where the employers have a stake in the say of the health of that company, so that those pension plans can be continued to be paid into. That is what Americans should be doing. What the Republicans are saying is, Americans can have employee participation in Europe, in Eastern Europe, in Poland, we can have cooperation by doing calisthenics in Tennessee with the Japanese, but employees cannot control their own pension. Employees cannot control where they would like this investment. Employees cannot do that because that would be radical.

This is about fairness. This is about a stake of employees, working for hourly wages, having a say in the economy of this country. It is on their back that we generate capital gains. It is on their back that we generate profits, that we pay taxes on, and it is on their back that we generate taxes. But somehow, Members are going to use the forces of the Government to keep them away from a say in their own money?

Now, some people say an employee will not set up a plan. Why would they not? We will have a competitive system. If I am an employee and retirement is important to me, I will try to find an employer that offers pension benefits. If my employer terminates my pension benefits, I guess I will have to go somewhere else. That is the market system. But what some Members are saying is that the marketplace must work to the exclusion of the employees, that we really do not trust working people in this country.

Now, as has been pointed out, working people have had a say in their pension plans since 1948, and they have been performing very well. I would say for those who say this was not raised, I raised this issue in those 3 days of hearings. I asked continually, how do we get a share at the table for the people who are affected most by these decisions—the workers—and we went through it, around and around with each of the witnesses, about how we get employer participation. That is where the Visclosky amendment comes in, because he understood what people were saying.

Today there is no way for those employees to participate, and that is why the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY] has offered this amendment. It is about fairness, about equity, and control over your own destiny as American workers.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Roukema amendment and in support of the Visclosky provision—which is a basic statement of equity for millions of employees throughout the United States.

At the heart of the debate over this provision is good old-fashioned economic paternalism.

Should employers alone control the pension funds, and make the investment decisions, for the beneficiaries of those funds—the employees?

Or should single employer funds move into the 20th century—as did multiemployer funds 40 years ago—and involve the participation of the men and women who are most affected by these pension funds, the employees themselves?

The arguments against Visclosky are updated versions of the same arguments we have heard in the past against unionization, against collective bargaining, against worker participation in corporate planning.

For years, we in this body have quoted the results of studies about the competitive edge of foreign business practices which emphasize cooperation and joint decisionmaking between capital and labor. Those results have been quoted and requoted by the leading business schools and the best business journals. They tell us that cooperation and joint decisionmaking is the best way to promote competitiveness and workplace harmony.

Well, cooperation is more than workers and employers doing calisthenics together.

It means sharing decisions about the business, and certainly about those aspects which affect employees' economic security. It is time that we statutorily acknowledge what our foreign competitors practice: business works best when decisions are made cooperatively.

Current law, the Secretary of Labor informs us in her letter of September 26, "already requires that plan trustees must act solely in the interest of plan participants and exercise the highest standards of investment responsibility."

In other words, workers—the beneficiaries of the plans—should meekly allow others to make all those complex investment decisions on their behalf, because they're not sophisticated enough to make the right choices.

What nonsense.

If anyone suggested that employers alone set wages, determine health and safety conditions, or adjudicate disputes "solely in the interest of employees," they would be properly ridiculed.

But a law which bars employees from a role in managing their own pension plans is accorded credibility.

Those who oppose the Visclosky provision, in essence, tell us that employees should entrust their future economic security entirely to their employers. Why?

There is no evidence that workers participation will result in bad investment decisions.

There is no evidence that the security of the pension fund will be undermined if the beneficiaries of those plans have a say in the investment of their funds.

In fact, following the 1987 stock market crash, jointly managed multiemployer funds performed better than other plans.

The entire trend of labor-management relations over the past half century has been toward accommodation, toward joint decisionmaking, toward mutual interest. And certainly, for us to regain our preeminent position in the world marketplace, we must find ways of alleviating every form of economic conflict. That is as true in the administration of pension funds as it is on the factory floor or in collective bargining negotiations.

Some may say that no problem exists in employer-only management of single employer funds. But problems do exist from the standpoint of the beneficiaries of those funds, the workers, and the organizations which represent them.

Not only are workers' voices absent in investment decisions, but those same decisions frequently are made contrary to the broader economic interests of working people.

Under the current employer-only policy, pension assets are being used to finance leveraged buyouts that reshape American business and unemploy tens of thousands of workers.

According to the AFL-CIO, 90,000 union workers have already lost their jobs because of mergers, takeovers and leveraged buyouts—many financed with pension assets.

Some may argue that such broader considerations are inappropriate to decisions about pension investments. Perhaps they are.

But who is in a better situation to make that determination which affects the employees who are the beneficiaries of the pension fund: employees and employers jointly, or employers along?

Deletion of the Visclosky amendment would represent a giant step backward in two major respects—

First, workers would be told that their employers exclusively should make decisions about the employees' future economic security and investment of worker assets; and

Second, employer-employee cooperation—the much-heralded panacea for our lack of economic competitiveness—would stop at the pension issue.

Don't tell American workers that they are too stupid, or too shortsighted, or too naive to share in the decisionmaking about their own economic futures.

Don't tell American workers that they should let their employers continue to use employees assets to finance investment policies that impair American workers.

Vote "no" on the Roukema amendment, and affirm the dignity of American workers and the concept of joint management-labor cooperation on behalf of a stronger American economic future.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, some of my friends believe this is a debate about fairness, about corporate takeovers, about class warfare. If Members decided that, those Members need not listen; but those willing to listen, listen to this: Half of the plans that have the enormous new burden of paperwork, only have one employee. How is one employee going to elect two trustees? I suppose they can, but if Members care about competitiveness, if Members care about using less paperwork, this plan is a disaster. It is not well-thought-out. If someone had thought about it, they would have exempted employer plans where there is only one employee, and the person is likely to be self-employed. This is only fit for schizophrenic employees, I assume. This plan is a disaster.

Members are talking about 1½ million plans that all have to be reworked. Now, if a Member is an advocate of the bar association, and 1½ million new plans are being filed, Members ought to like this, but if Members care about the cost of plans and the cost of making this country work, Members have to be horrified by this amendment.

Let me make it clear what this does. This requires the election of at least two trustees, even if there is only one employee. It sets the trustee up for a tie. How in the world are we going to settle a tie? The bill does not tell Members. This suggests we will have a deadlock any time an issue comes up, if there is a tie.

It says the Department of Labor can issue regulations. However, ladies and gentlemen, what we have done is plan a disaster. This thing is not well-thought-out, and the fact it has not had full hearings is reflected. One other thing that I hope Members will try and address and think about is the fact that this is unworkable.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I hear a lot on both sides. I am not sure that it does not overstate the issue. Pension funds, after all, are deferred or contributed wages, by the workers, to secure their well-being, after a lifetime of productive work.

I do not know many people that think that workers should not have some say over their funds. That does not seem to be quite as radical a departure from good economics or fiscal prudence as some would have Members believe. Those who argue that it is, have also said that there has been no hearings on this matter. We have had hearings on this. We had hearings on it for years. We had 3 days of hearings in the subcommittee this spring. Of course this matter has been heard.

There are some who say that it would radically distort investment decisions of these pension funds, but the fact is that the trustees would be under the exact fiduciary responsibilities put forward by ERISA that trustees have to be under.

Should workers not have some say in the investment decisions of their pensions? It is a long and well-established precedent that they should have. For decades State pension plans and employer pension plans have had employees as pension plan trustees. That is an old established precedent in the United States. And, by the way, those pension funds have not gone broke. They have a sound record of good invesments and they are very secure today. And, yes, employees, workers, sit at the table to judge how their money shall be used. So I ask my colleagues to set aside what it seems to me are boogymen that have been raised about this issue and just decide in their own minds whether they think workers should have some say in how their very important pension money is going to be used. If we believe they should have a say in it with regard to these pension plans, then I ask the Members to vote against the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] and for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. chairman, may I ask the Chair, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] has 12½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY] has 10½ minutes remaining.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE].

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Roukema amendment which strikes the pension provisions contained in the Visclosky amendment. I oppose the Visclosky amendment with the view that it is not pension reform, but a pension experiment. The Visclosky amendment requires workers to be represented on the boards of trustees of single-employer pension funds. On its face, the amendment would seem to promote sound investments by pension trustees. As commendable as that motive is, the Visclosky amendment in no way protects the interests of these employees. If anything, it inserts a wild card into pension finances which could effect from $1.2 to $2 trillion.

Employees are entitled to the sound investment of their pension funds. Congress has and will continue to protect the pension of our Nation's employees. In fact, a plan's trustees are required by law to exercise the highest standard of investment responsibility. The Visclosky amendment cannot guarantee a higher fiduciary standard because there is no higher standard. Instead, it requires the trustee to represent a constituency, rather than the best interests of all beneficiaries. Moreover, the Visclosky amendment extends fiduciary authority without shifting the financial obligation. No matter what the investment decision, the employer ultimately remains responsible for their employees' pensions. The employee, on the other hand, represents a group which bears none of the financial risk. In the case of a defined benefit plan, the company has guaranteed a specific benefit even if investments turn sour.

What, then, is the purpose of requiring employee involvement in the investment process? According to proponents of the Visclosky amendment, they do not envision far-reaching changes in the placement of most funds. In fact, they assert that multiemployer plans generally enjoy the same investment results as single employer plans. Now I ask you, why are we attempting a radical change in law to fix what is not broken.

No hearings have been held on the possible adverse effects of these changes on pension funds nor the financial market as a whole. Think of it, a change which impacts funds in excess of $1 trillion, and yet no hearings have been held. In this era of fiscal responsibility, we have no idea of the cost of such a change. The Department of Labor will be responsible for the design and implementation of the secret election process for over 700,000 nonunion single employer plans.

The Visclosky amendment adds no protections to the beneficiaries of a single employer pension fund. It does not prevent leveraged buy-outs as the decision to terminate the fund remains with the employer. Furthermore, employers in all likelihood would be more willing to terminate a plan than to hold an organized election.

The Visclosky amendment strains all aspects of labor relations. The amendment requires that which was previously a subject for collective bargaining. In certain cases, it will mandate union representation of nonunion employees and will override the current statutory rights of such employees.

Fellow colleagues, I cannot and do not support such a radical change in ERISA laws. These changes are unwarranted, unjustified and, most important of all, are of unknown consequence to pension beneficiaries. As we learned from the changes in section 89, any change in the structure of an employee benefit plan must be carefully considered before implementation. The Visclosky amendment was not carefully considered nor its impact weighed before its appearance on the floor here today. For these reasons, I seek your support for the Roukema amendment which removes these sections from the budget reconciliation package.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. I rise in opposition to the motion to strike and in support of the so-called Visclosky amendment that would give workers equal representation on the boards of trustees that govern single-employer pension plans. Now we can look at this provision in two ways. On the one hand, many would have us believe that allowing employees a voice in the investment decisions of their pension plan will result in employers terminating those pension plans or workers advocating risky or speculative investments.

I tend to believe, however, that giving workers a voice in their pension plan is not only a question of fundamental fairness but also good business sense.

It is good business sense because it is only prudent for employers to allow employees a voice in the workplace. Through closer cooperation, business and labor will both benefit and the benefit to the economy will be greater productivity and new jobs. There are hundreds of examples of workplaces across this country where a high level of productivity has resulted from employer-employee cooperation. There is no reason to believe that workers and management cannot work together productively in the pension plan management area just as they work together in other aspects of the management of the workplace itself.

And let's be clear about what this provision will not do: it will not give employees control over the formation or termination of pension plans or the distribution of benefits. And like employer representatives on the trustee boards, nothing in this provision would terminate the fiduciary responsibility of the trustees to see that pension funds are invested wisely. In fact, employees have as much or more reason than employers to see that their future pension benefits are invested wisely.

Mr. Chairman, I urge a vote against the motion to strike.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNARD].

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] to strike the Visclosky language on pensions from H.R. 3299.

This addition to H.R. 3299 has very important ramifications and yet has not been the subject of any committee hearing. I believe the seriousness of the changes proposed by the gentleman from Indiana deserve the full scrutiny and hearing process provided for by our committee system. For that reason I alone could support this amendment to strike.

However, I have other problems with Mr. VISCLOSKY's proposal. For example, the bill impose new fees for standard termination and filing of certain reports.

But most troublesome, I think, for all of us, is the requirement for joint representation on single-employer pension boards. While this sounds fair on the face of things, especially considering comparable regulations for multiemployer pensions, it ignores some salient facts.

Multiemployer plans, which are jointly trusteed, generally experience lower rates of investment return than single-employer plans. Since the employer bears all of the investment risk under a defined pension plan, the employer must make up for defined losses by increasing its contributions to the plans. I fear that the significant costs associated with increased contributions would ultimately result in lower retirement benefits or greater reductions in current pay.

While trying to help employees, we could end up hurting them. Because we don't know the answer to this and other questions, I believe the most prudent course would be to delay a decision on the matter until we have had the opportunity for full consideration and debate.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Roukema amendment so that we may have hearings on the necessity and ramifications of pension reform.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN].

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, we hear about those silly, foolish workers. The fundamental assumption behind the arguments for the motion to strike is a paternalistic and condescending one. It essentially says that even though the law requires that plan trustees must act solely in the interest of plan participants and exercise the highest standards of investment responsibility, people chosen by the workers whose money is being put into these plans will elect people who will squander and risk their assets because they are not wise to the ways of the world. Even though these were not the people who were responsible for developing the highest level corporate debt this country has ever known.

I would like to go through the arguments given by the Secretary of Labor in her opposition to this provision in the bill and presumably in support of the motion to strike. She says:

> Requiring single employer plans to be jointly trusteed could substantially reduce pension plan equity holding. This provision could distort investment strategy, lower returns on pension investments, and increase costs of providing pensions.

But it could also do the opposite. It could enhance investment strategies. It could maximize returns on pension investments.

Mr. Chairman, why is the assumption that the workers representatives are not going to pursue their statutory obligation with the same sense of responsibility, obligation and wisdom as the employer-selected trustees?

I would like to suggest that the real underlying reason for opposition to the Visclosky provision was reported very well in the recent issue of Business Week:

> While the potential decline in fund performance is a major concern to managers, what really horrifies them is the possibility of worker encroachment on their decision-making turf. Company pension funds hold 35 percent of all corporate stock and almost always cast their proxies in support of management.

The argument is made that this is something that is subject to collective bargaining. The Secretary argues we do not need this. This would interfere with the collective-bargaining process because joint trusteeship is already subject to bargaining.

First of all, it does not speak to the overwhelming majority of American workers who are not organized. Second, that was not the argument used when there was bipartisan support to pass ERISA, including subjects that could have been dealt with through collective bargaining. That is an argument that, taken to its logical conclusion, we should not be legislating in the area of occupational health and safety standards or the minimum wage laws. The possibility that something is within the collective bargaining process does not mean that it should not be legislated.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER].

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Roukema amendment to strike the so-called Visclosky amendment from the reconciliation bill.

The Visclosky amendment would require all retirement plans to be held in trust by a joint employee-employer board of trustees. This is cause for concern because Congress is displaying once again that it possesses little capacity to effectively govern.

This amendment was adopted on a party-line vote by the Education and Labor Committee after no hearings, little debate and no convincing need for a change in current law.

We have all heard the terrors of section 89. If we leave the Visclosky amendment in place, it will become the section 89 for 1990.

Under the Visclosky amendment, employee rights will be ignored and organized labor will have a new tool to gain control to achieve its goals. In addition, it will require the Department of Labor to conduct secret ballot elections for more than 700,000 noncollectively bargained single-employer plans.

This fundamental change in pension rules is a threat. Surely this issue deserves greater attention than it has received thus far. I strongly urge you to join me in striking this provision from reconciliation.

The reconciliation bill also bans asset reversions to employers upon the termination of pension plans. As a former small businessman, I recognize that this proposal will severely penalize those employers who have successfully funded their plans to meet obligations to retirees. In fact, over the long term, employers would reduce their plan contributions to the minimum level allowed by ERISA funding standards. This type of measure promotes weaker pension funding while increasing the risks inadequately funded pension plans place on employees, retirees, and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

Congressional intervention can only lead to greater regulation and will discourage employers from setting up defined-benefit plans, or for that matter, any plans at all. Employees end up as the victims.

Congress is aiming a loaded gun at the pension system of our Nation. It has already fired several shots and the victim cannot stand much more. With this latest barrage, Congress may just cause the death of the pension system as we know it.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. RHODES].

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, for those of us who do not consider themselves to be experts in the pension field, who do not know defined benefits and defined contributions very well, but who can smell a huge, new bureaucracy being loosed upon the land and who have some general idea that huge bureaucracies generate huge bucks and expenditures, let me just give them a number.

Mr. Chairman, there are 700,000 single employer, nonunion plans registered with the Department of Labor. Every last one of them has to have a Department of Labor certified and supervised election for their board of trustees. If this plan were to be implemented over a reasonable period of time like a year, that would be 2,700 elections a day.

How much would that cost us? Who knows? I can tell you this: We know that last year the National Labor Relations Board supervised 3,000 elections on a budget of $138 million. How much is 700,000 elections going to cost? That seems to answer the question right there.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. KAPTUR].

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the Roukema amendment for three very sensible reasons.

First of all, the proposal by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY], the amendment under consideration, is fair, it is forward-looking, and it will result in higher productivity in our country. In terms of fairness, I fundamentally believe in the principle of joint stewardship—where management and employees hold equal responsibility together for managing the fruits of their own labor. Pension funds now control the stock markets of this Nation. Thus the deferred compensation of workers in the form of retirement funds has really resulted in pension funds becoming the largest source of long-term capital and investment capital in this country, now amounting to over $1 trillion. Over 80 percent of the trades on Wall Street all by institutional investors, most of which are pension funds. It is only fair that those responsible for these earnings in the form of pension funds have joint responsibility for their trusteeship.

So, Mr. Chairman, joint stewardship is fair, it makes sense. The people have earned this money together, management and worker. They should manage it together.

Second, the community that I represent in Ohio's Ninth District can demonstrate an excellent record in the joint trusteeship of multiemployer pension plans. We really have ushered in a new era of management and employee cooperation. In Toledo, these plans have literally been rebuilding our community by investing in office towers, hotels, major construction, and housing.

Mr. Chairman, I invite all of our Members to visit our community and see the magnificent job that these plans have done and, at the same time, earned the highest rates of return. This is because both management and workers share a common interest in sound investment for the benefit of the plans. We should be encouraging our management and workers to help usher in this new era of cooperation and joint stewardship. We should be looking forward, not backward, in our efforts to keep America No. 1 and to help do so by better involving our citizens in this process.

In terms of the criticisms that have been offered here that there is a difference in rates of return between single and multiemployer plans, let me mention that any marginal difference which may exist in such returns is probably due less to the fact that they are single or multiemployer. Rather, it is due to the fact that some industries are concentrated in endeavors where our Nation is facing stiff competition in the international marketplace. Returns reflects productivity and competitiveness. Much of the battles for America's future is being fought in industries requiring infusions of capital now to benefit long-term improvement in productivity down the road. A short-term narrow focus is not good enough any more.

Finally, let me say many single employer plans today have caused upheaval in communities across this country by promoting leveraged buyouts, selling off of divisions, creating unemployment and terminating pension plans. Many single employer plans have really been responsible for the quick-fix solutions that have eked out a short-term profit but cost America long-term benefits. Joint stewardship could help stem this tide of irresponsibility and result in the wiser management of capital for productive investment across this country.

I urge adoption of the Visclosky alternative. It is fair, forward-looking, and can help lead America for an era of higher productivity. It is time.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Roukema amendment to strike from H.R. 3299 the provisions mandating the composition of trustee boards administering single-employer pension plans.

I do regret having to stand in opposition to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY], since I agree that his amendment is based on an appealing concept and is offered with serious good intentions. However, I do have deep concerns about the substance of the amendment and also believe this provision is not the type that belongs in a budget reconciliation bill.

On substance, I am more than a little reluctant to involve the Department of Labor in employee elections concerning some 700,000 different pension plans. I also persist in the belief that the government should be a referee in employer-employee relations, and not weigh in to mandate arrangements for which either side is free to negotiate. The Department of Labor says, for example, that if a pension plan covers any union workers, this bill would require union representation of all employees, including those not part of the bargaining unit.

There is no evidence that this provision would result in better managed pension funds. Actually the empirical evidence is to the contrary. An Employee Benefits Research Institute study showed a full percentage point difference between investment performance, favoring single-employer plans over multiemployer plans—which are required to be under joint trusteeship. Another Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation/Department of Labor study found a 2.4-percent performance gap—10.2 percent to 7.8 percent—meaning single-employer plans outperformed multiemployer plans by more than 20 percent from 1977 to 1983, on average.

I do not cite these figures to indict multiemployer plans or their trustees. I do take this as evidence, however, that this provision tries to fix something that isn't broken. These figures also suggest the need for much study and caution before we overhaul the laws governing pension plans, the Nation's largest source of private capital.

On procedure and timing, I am concerned that this issue has received only incidental consideration as a by-product of hearings on corporate takeovers. There is no urgency associated with this provision that should compel us to include it in reconciliation. A number of legitimate questions have been raised which should be addressed before we vote on such a fundamental change in Federal pension law. I don't think that a mere 60 minutes of debate here on the House floor will suffice to answer the questions many Members have on this issue.

I urge my colleagues to exercise restraint and let a more deliberate legislative process, including full and complete hearings, take place before we significantly remake pension law and labor law and send a potentially disruptive signal to the investment world.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STENHOLM. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] for yielding, and I just want to voice my strong support for the position that he just stated.

Certainly a massive budget reconciliation bill is not the place to be considering changes in the private pension system.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY] which is included in the budget reconciliation bill now being considered.

In recent years companies have been abolishing pension plans and using the excess fund to help finance corporate takeovers and improvements. This practice is wrong. Pension plans represent deferred compensation. In effect workers forgo higher wages and benefits in exchange for future retirement income.

The Visclosky amendment ensures that investments could not be made without the input of employees. That is only fair and equitable. What is wrong with that? Since pension plans provide most workers with their retirement income, it is important for employees to be included in the investment decisions.

Mr. Chairman, the Visclosky amendment is a huge step forward for protecting the rights of workers. I commend my colleague for his work on this proposal and urge that it be included in this bill, and I urge defeat of the Roukema amendment.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON], a member of the committee.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, let me begin by saying that the gentleman from Indiana ought to be complimented for raising this particular issue at this point in time. I think there is something that needs to be done with our pension laws in this country, especially as we are dealing with leveraged buyouts; but this bill does not solve that problem. That is the whole crux of the debate here today.

Unfortunately, a good intention to deal with a real problem has resulted in a new section 89. If we are going to repeal the section 89 that is out there today, let us not in the very same day create a whole new bureaucracy that sends a signal across this country that we are going to eliminate or discourage every new private single employer pension that exists, and that is unfortunately what this legislation, if kept in, will do.

The reality is that there are 1½ million single-employer plans out there, based on the Department of Labor statistics. Whether they like it or not, under this piece of legislation over 700,000 elections are going to be supervised each year just to keep us operating at the present time.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY].

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Chairman, we are coming close to the end of debate, and certainly there has been a lot of hyperbole. As someone who has been identified as the lead gangster, I might want to tone down somewhat the rhetoric.

First of all, what are we voting on? We are voting on an issue of fairness, fairness for workers who have deferred their compensation as a condition of employment. It is their money. They ought to have input in their decision. Management is still part of that decision and it certainly is an incorrect characterization to imply that workers do not remain at risk in defined benefit plans. If the interest income, if the dividend income on defined benefit plans necessitate additional corporate contribution, that could be harmful to employees. They will take that into consideration.

It does go to the question of investment in plant and equipment. It does go to the question of their wages. It does go to the question of the condition of the corporation and its ability to raise money. They will act in a responsible fashion.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Roukema amendment.

I strongly support the Visclosky provision. It makes a necessary adjustment to pension law which assures that those most directly concerned with the security of their pension funds have a say in how they are managed.

Listening to the rhetoric offered by my friends on the other side of the aisle, one would think that the concept that workers should be involved in pension investment decisions was radical or untested. On the contrary, the idea of plan participants serving as trustees on pension boards is a well-established and successful concept.

Both multiemployer plans and many State pension funds have for decades had plan trustees elected from their membership and Western civilization as we know it has not collapsed. In fact, those plans have a solid, proven track record.

Some plans are even governed by a board that is overwhelmingly dominated by participant/trustees. One outstanding example is the Colorado Public Employees Retirement System. On a 16-member board of trustees, 14 are elected by the members of the system and only two represent the State. The Colorado system is an outstanding pension fund, easily comparable to any corporate pension plan as to administration, investment performance, and service to its members.

Another example of the successful performance of participant-trustees is the California Public Employees Retirement System with a 13-member board of trustees, 7 appointed and 6 elected by the membership. Both of those plans cover employees that belong to different groups. Each elects its own representatives. The election process is neither costly, cumbersome, complicated, or contentious. Presumably, as it carries out its responsibility under the provision to prescribe procedural rules governing the election of participant-trustees, the Department of Labor will consult with plans such as these with substantial experience in handling elections.

Pension funds are deferred wages that employees rely on to secure their well-being after a lifetime of productive work. Nobody is more concerned about the performance of a pension fund than the beneficiaries of that fund. Yet currently they have no say in how corporate pension plans are run. The solution is obvious. Give the participants in the fund a voice at the table.

Yesterday my friend from New Jersey, Mrs. ROUKEMA, said she had no idea where Congressman VISCLOSKY got this idea. I was amazed by her statement. The concern that workers have no input into pension investment decision making has been voiced at several hearings over the years and, most specifically, at 3 days of hearings our subcommittee held this past spring. The hearings examined issues related to pension fund investment, with a special focus on the role of pension funds in leveraged buyouts. Several witnesses testified that providing for participant trustees on pension funds was an important means of protecting the pension assets.

Some have tried to cloud the issue of worker representation on joint pension boards by alleging that the provision would mandate union representation for nonunion workers. That is a serious misstatement of the provision. Under the provision, if some or all of the participants are unionized, the union could select the representative(s) for that group of plan participants. If the union waives this right, or if some or all of the participants are nonunion, the plan participants themselves by secret written ballot select their own representative(s). Similar principles would apply for plans covering multiple unions.

Moreover, since the overall number of trustees and composition of the board are design issues, when setting up the plan, an employer could easily provide for pro rata representation of all employee groups on the board.

Some have tried to confuse the issue by arguing that the joint trusteeship requirement would prohibit asset reversions. That is nonsense. The decision to terminate a plan is clearly an employer decision, not a fiduciary decision. Nothing in the Visclosky provision would change that. The provision does not amend any of the current fiduciary rules.

The ERISA fiduciary requirements apply to persons acting in fiduciary capacity performing fiduciary functions. Under sections 402, 403, and 404 of title I of ERISA, the plan's named fiduciary—designated by the employer—has certain rights and responsibilities and may delegate certain of its functions to others—including to trustees.

Fiduciary functions, however, must be distinguished from "settlor"—employer or plan sponsor—functions. Over the years, the Department of Labor has identified certain functions as settlor functions. Nothing in the Visclosky provision would transform traditional employer functions into fiduciary functions over which a joint board would have authority. Under current law, the primary employer functions include: First, the decision to establish or terminate a plan, and second, decisions relating to plan design—that is, who to cover, what the benefit levels are, and so forth. Except to the extent that some settlor functions might independently be subject to collective bargaining, the Visclosky provision would not require any worker input into those settlor decisions.

Many of the arguments raised by the opponents of this provision allege that requiring joint trusteeship will somehow dilute or alter the ERISA requirement that a fiduciary must discharge his or her duties "solely in the interest of the participants and beneficiaries" (section 404(a)(1)).

Opponents of the Visclosky provision also argue that it would require plan trustees to represent separate constituencies with separate interests, thus "politicizing" the process. This, too, is a baseless argument. No change is made in either the "solely in the interest standard," cited above, or in the general requirement that all investments be prudent. Requiring that some of the trustees must be selected by or from the ranks of plan participants does not change in any way the legal duty of trustees under ERISA. Since business is arguing that joint-trusteeship is unnecessary because under current law, employer/trustees faithfully discharge their fiduciary duty to act "solely in the interest of plan trustees and their beneficiaries," why do they think so little of the integrity and ability of their own employees by assuming that participant/trustees will be unable to do the same?

Finally, some have raised the question of the impact of the provision on small business. They say that the Visclosky provision affects all pension plans. That is incorrect. It only affects pension plans that under ERISA are required to place assets in a separate trust. Many small businesses are exempt from that requirement because they are funded entirely by insurance contracts or policies or because they have established simplified employee pension plans or employer-sponsored IRA's. The joint trusteeship requirement would not apply to these plans.

All multiemployer plans and most large State pension funds already provide for significant participant representation on pension boards, requiring joint worker and management trustees on the remainder of pension plans is the logical next step. It is consistent with the plea we hear for greater cooperation between labor and management. It is consistent with our growing need for improved employee participation in workplace decisions. It is also consistent with the democratic principles which underlie labor-management relations. Finally it will help to secure the pension funds on which senior citizens rely.

Our committee has considered the issue and has acted to bring before this body an important reform in pension law. Those who believe that how workers' deferred wages are invested is none of the workers' business will support the Roukema amendment. Those who see this issue for what it is—a matter of fundamental fairness for workers—will oppose the amendment. I strongly urge that you reject the Roukema amendment.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, we have an unusual situation here. We have a statement from the author of the bill that he introduced it in June. We have another statement that some hearings were held in the first quarter of the year, which obviously could not bear on the bill because it had not been introduced yet. We further hear that some witness at the earlier hearing referred to something that may have been covered within the later bill. Then we are told that is a hearing.

So we have the Visclosky amendment before us today. It is an unwanted hitchhiker, an ugly irrelevancy, in the reconciliation bill. It does not belong here. It was adopted without hearings, without debate, without cause, without showing of need, without amendment, and without good sense.

It would, we are assured by the companies who operate and contribute to pensions and by the people who advise pension plan contributors, cause many plans to be terminated and cause many others not to be started. That in turn would cause many Americans not to be covered by pension benefits.

What could be a sillier action on the part of this House than passing a bill that was going to protect people from having pensions? It passes all understanding that we should even be considering this matter today.

We are told that multiemployer plans have employer trustees, as indeed they do. It has been shown here today that those plans have a much lower return.

I happen to have served as the chairman of a multiemployer pension trustee group, and I can tell you that on my board we often deadlocked, and I believe our returns were less than could have been achieved. The employer representatives on our board usually insisted that we put the money in the Central States Teamsters fund. I think most of you know about the under water real estate bought in Florida, the Nevada pool tables and so on, that caused that plan to come into great difficulty.

The Visclosky amendment would therefore protect many Americans right out of their pensions. You remember when we adopted ERISA. We had a huge flight from pension plans. The reason is that pension plans are voluntary. Employers startup pension plans because they want them, because they think they are pretty good, but if there is a reason not to have them, they get out of them or they do not start them. If plans terminated because of ERISA, we are certainly going to lose many of them as a result of the Visclosky amendment.

Because pension plans are voluntary, we can start them, or continue them, or fold them up. As long as employers make all the contributions, take all the risks, particularly in a defined benefit plan, there is no reason for them to feel that they should share the investment decisions with other representatives.

Now, if they decide they want employer trustees, they can do so. Under the rules that exist today, they can voluntarily accept that kind of trusteeship.

One of our Members stood up and said that this is opening up the system. It is not opening up the system. The system is open today. This closes the system. It mandates a certain type of representation on the board.

Mr. Chairman, I would repeat that only healthy plans can be terminated under existing law. The Visclosky amendment will, therefore, cause healthy plans to be terminated. That will give us a survival of the sickest plans, and so the PBGC will come under pressure. It will have to raise fees from companies who cannot pay it.

□ 1550

If the Members want to reduce pension coverage, they should support Visclosky. These who want to preserve pension coverage should vote for Roukema.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinios [Mr. CRANE].

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, over the next few days, we will be considering what is probably the most important piece of legislation that we will see this year. Unfortunately, the budget reconciliation bill has extraneous amendments that could have a potentially devastating effect on the pension laws of this country. Corporations are the backbone of the free-market economy. The compensation they provide to employees is not only in the form of a paycheck. In addition to compensation, corporations often provide medical and dental coverage, educational assistance, day care, and most importantly a pension for the later years.

The pension plan amendments proposed by the Education and Labor Committee include several egregious provisions. Included in these amendments are the elimination of pension asset reversions, joint labor-management control of pension plans, participant right to sue under the Internal Revenue Code, and exit/user fees. Three corporate constituents of mine, including Eaton Corp., Northrop, and the biggest employer in my district, Motorola, have discussed with me at length the problems associated with these pension proposals. Below is a brief look at these four issues and the negative impact these changes would have on corporations. The inclusion of these amendments would seriously jeopardize the corporation pension plan system and hurt those individuals who the creators of these amendments are trying to save. It is time that the Congress take a step back and let the free-market system work and allow corporations the ability to provide beneficial pensions to deserving and loyal employees. I ask my fellow colleagues to understand the following provisions and oppose any changes to corporate pension plans, and support the motion by the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

TERMINATION OF PENSION REVERSIONS

This amendment to the reconciliation bill would prohibit an employer from terminating a defined benefit plan unless the employer first provides additional, unearned benefits to active and former plan participants and their beneficiaries. These new mandated benefits are in addition to the earned benefits that the employer has actually promised to provide.

The bill also provides that, before an employer may recover excess assets from a given plan, all other unrelated plans maintained by the employer and its affiliates must be brought up to a funded level sufficient to pay all liabilities to participants and beneficiaries. Unrelated plan funding is triggered regardless of whether the funding of the unrelated plan is dictated by union agreements, government contract restrictions, or Internal Revenue Code limits on the tax deductibility of contributions.

The bill determines the longstanding presumption that, because an employer backs up the pension plan promise and bears all the risk of the plan's investment experience, assets in excess of what is necessary to pay the plan's bill is a back-door effort to mandate cost-of-living increases for all retirees and beneficiaries, which were neither promised nor earned and are to the detriment, in many cases, of active employees.

By mandating new pension benefits which have been promised or earned, this amendment will deter sound funding, reduce employees' retirement security, discourage the formation and expansion of new defined benefit plans, and subject the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation to substantial new financial hazards and will result in many pension funds reducing their exposure in the equity markets.

JOINT LABOR-MANAGEMENT CONTROL OF PENSION PLANS

The Visclosky amendment, recently introduced and approved without the benefit of hearings, would require joint labor-management control over all single employer pension plans and would have a profound impact on the balance of power between unions and management. Such control would give unions substantial influence over the investment of pension assets, benefit design, and plan administration while leaving employers with the liability for maintaining adequate funding. To the extent that the bill ultimately provides organized labor with control over investment decisions, it would also provide them with substantial influence in business management.

PARTICIPANT RIGHT TO SUE UNDER IRC

The Education and Labor Committee also approved a proposal that would permit a participant the right to sue under ERISA to enforce plan qualification requirements of the Internal Revenue Code. As a result, employers could no longer count on uniform application of the rules across the country or, possibly even within its own operations if a single employee demanded settlement of his or her claim. Moreover, it would make more difficult IRS efforts to ensure uniform compliance with the rule in a manner that provided relief for all the employees in a plan. This proposal would permit participant suits on such complex issues as the Internal Revenue Code's coverage, separate line of business, leased employee, nondiscrimination and integration rules.

EXIT AND USER FEES

The committee's bill would also subject plans to exit fees of $200 per participant on termination of a plan. User fees would also be levied at the time of filing an annual report, summary plan description or material modifications, or notice of a qualified transfer of excess assets and include defined benefit and defined contribution plans, profit sharing plans, ESOP's, KEOGH's, and other plans. The fees are levied on a sliding scale based on the number of participants; the highest fee is $500 per filing in the House bill and $1,000 in the Senate version. The rationale for the fees is that the Department of Labor has failed to provide adequate information about plans and the fees are dedicated to increased enforcement of title I. This is clearly a tax levied against corporations.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS].

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Roukema amendment.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman. I am in support of the Visclosky provision, which would require equal employee and management representation on the board of trustees for single-employer pension plans.

I think this provision provides for simple fairness. Pensions are funded by deferred wages.

Pension benefits are not simply a gift from the employer, but are earned by employees through the years of hard work. Therefore, they should have the right to determine how their pension plans are managed.

To suggest that employees should not be provided equal representation is really to suggest that they are incapable of making such investment decisions. It is to suggest that they cannot grasp the complexity of investment decisionmaking. Nothing could be further from the truth. According to a 1988 study conducted by the consulting firm of Martin E. Segal, the funded status of multiemployer plans, which have been jointly trusted since the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act of 1947, is excellent. According to the report, 78 percent of the multiemployer plans are fully funded for their vested benefits in 1988. I am aware of no evidence to suggest that joint trusteeship of single-employer pension plans will not allow for just as effective administration. Workers have demonstrated that they are very capable.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the motion to strike, and for the rights of workers.

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Chairman, I believe that workers have a right to help determine how their pensions are being managed.

I believe we should give employees who participate in single-employer pension plans the same rights we have given workers who are covered under multiemployer plans.

I believe that if you give workers the chance to become involved in deciding how their pension funds are invested they will make the right choices.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the mail I have been getting from business groups.

I do not believe that employees will recommend bad financial decisions simply because they may not have had prior experience with fund management.

It's their money. They'll watch it very carefully.

Mr. Chairman, before we gave the vote to women—before we gave it to black Americans—there were probably people who said they should not be allowed to vote because they would not vote correctly.

Time has proven those critics incorrect, and time will prove that workers can be excellent managers of their retirement funds. For these and many other reasons, I urge all my colleagues to oppose the Roukema amendment.

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to explain why I am voting to strike from the omnibus budget reconciliation bill the provision, offered in committee by Congressman PETER VISCLOSKY, which deals with equal representation on single-employer pension plan boards.

My decision to vote to strike the Visclosky amendment is based primarily on procedural grounds. We need to stop and ask what this provision is doing in the budget reconciliation bill at all. The purpose of an omnibus budget reconcilation bill is to change spending and revenues laws to comply with the congressional budget resolution. The Visclosky amendment is a change in policy; it has nothing to do with Federal spending or revenue raising.

I certainly support what I understand the intentions of the Visclosky amendment to be. The increased use of pension funds to finance mergers and other acquisitions is a very real and very serious problem. We need to look at the role of pension plans in such transactions, and we need to make sure employee benefits are properly managed and employee interests protected.

I know that a number of hearings have been held on this larger issue, and some good legislation introduced. But this provision would do more than just give workers a voice in how their retirement funds are invested. It would dramatically alter single-employer pension plan laws, without the benefit of focused hearings or full public debate. There are just too many unanswered questions with this provision that should be fully considered before action is taken. And they should be answered by way of the regular legislative process.

For example, I would question whether a blanket requirement on all single-employer pension plans is really in our best interest. The fact that workers and employers have had joint trusteeship on multiemployer plans does not by itself warrant forcing the same system on all single-employer plans. Some more discrete standards or criteria may be advised here. In some cases, where workers have desired joint employer/employee benefit boards, they have negotiated an agreement on their own without any need for the Federal Government stepping in with blanket legislation.

I would urge my colleagues to limit the reconciliation bill to the spending and revenue matters that have to be included in it, and to forgo addressing unrelated policy questions like pension reform.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 250, noes 173, not voting 9, as follows:

Messrs. CROCKETT, FOGLIETTA, GONZALEZ, WILSON, CARDIN, HOYER, McMILLEN of Maryland, and BUSTAMANTE changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. RICHARDSON, JENKINS, and BILBRAY changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 2, printed in section 2 of the House Report 101-261.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DORGAN OF NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota: In title XI of the bill, strike parts IV and V of subtitle C.

In title XI of the bill, strike part I of subtitle C and insert the following:

PART I—REPEAL OF SECTION 89 NONDISCRIMINATION RULES

SEC. 11301. REPEAL OF SECTION 89.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 89 (relating to benefits provided under certain discriminatory employee benefit plans) is hereby repealed.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part II of subchapter B of chapter 1 is amended by striking the item relating to section 89.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect as if included in section 1151 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

SEC. 11302. REINSTATEMENT OF PRE-1986 ACT NONDISCRIMINATION RULES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) Each provision of law amended by subsection (b), (c), (d)(1), or (g) of section 1151 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 is amended to read as if the amendments made by such subsection had not been enacted.

(2) Each provision of law amended by paragraph (22), (27), or (31) of section 1011B(a) of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 is amended to read as if the amendments made by such paragraph had not been enacted.

(3) Subparagraph (A) of section 125(g)(3) (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986) is amended by striking "subparagraph (B) of section 410(b)(1)" and inserting "section 410(b)(2)(A)(i)".

(4) Section 162(1)(2) is amended by striking subparagraph (B) and redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B).

(5) Subparagraph (C) of section 401(a)(9) is amended—

(A) by striking "(as defined in section 89(i)(4))", and

(B) by adding at the end the following: "For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'church plan' means a plan maintained by a church for church employees, and the term 'church' means any church (as defined in section 3121(w)(3)(A)) or qualified church-controlled organization (as defined in section 3121(w)(3)(B))."

(B) Paragraph (1) of section 414(r) is amended by striking "sections 89 and" and inserting "section".

(C) Paragraph (2) of section 414(t) is amended by striking "89,".

(7) Sections 3021(c) and 6070 of the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988 are hereby repealed.

(b) EXCEPTIONS.—

(1)(A) Paragraph (7) of section 79(d) (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Trade Reform Act of 1986) is amended to read as follows:

"(7) EXEMPTION FOR CHURCH PLANS.—This subsection shall not apply to any plan maintained by a church for church employees. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'church' means any church (as defined in section 3121(w)(3)(A)) or qualified church-controlled organization (as defined in section 3121(w)(3)(B))."

(B) Unless the employer otherwise elects, the reference to section 79(d) in section 223(d)(2) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 shall be treated as a reference to such section as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

(2) Paragraph (2) of section 125(d) (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) DEFERRED COMPENSATION PLANS EXCLUDED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL. The term 'cafeteria plan' does not include any plan which provides for deferred compensation.

"(B) EXCEPTION FOR CASH AND DEFERRED ARRANGEMENTS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to a profit-sharing or stock bonus plan or rural electric cooperative plan (within the meaning of section 401(k)(7) which includes a qualified cash or deferred arrangement (as defined in section 401(k)(2)) to the extent of amounts which a covered employee may elect to have the employer pay as contributions to a trust under such plan on behalf of the employee.

"(C) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN PLANS MAINTAINED BY EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to a plan maintained by an eductional organization described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) to the extent of amounts which a covered employee may elect to have the employer pay as contributions for post-retirement group life insurance if—

"(i) all contributions for such insurance must be made before retirement, and

"(ii) such life insurance does not have a cash surrender value at any time.

For purposes of section 79, any life insurance described in the preceding sentence shall be treated as group-term life insurance."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this seciton shall take effect as if included in section 1151 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

SEC. 11303. OTHER PROVISIONS RELATING TO NONTAXABLE BENEFITS.

(a) DEPENDENT CARE ASSISTANCE.—Paragraph (1) of section 129(d) (defining dependent care assistance program) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence:

"If any plan described in subparagraph (A), fails to meet the requirements referred to in subparagraph (B), notwithstanding such failure, such plan shall be treated as a dependent care assistance program in the case of employees who are not highly compensated employees."

(b) APPLICATION OF LINE OF BUSINESS TEST FOR PERIOD BEFORE GUIDELINES ISSUED.—In the case of any plan year beginning on or before the date the Secretary of the Treasury (or the delegate of the Secretary) issues guidelines under section 414(r)(2)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (and begins issuing determination letters with respect to such section), an employer meeting the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 414(r)(2) of such Code with respect to a line of business may treat it as a separate line of business if the employer reasonably determines it to be separate.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 1988.

(2) The provisions of subsection (c) shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 1986.

Conform the table of contents for title XI accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman form Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, today I offer an amendment on behalf of myself, Mr. WATKINS from Oklahoma, Mr. LAFALCE from New York, Mr. SLATTERY from Kansas, and Mr. PENNY from Minnesota.

The amendment is to repeal a provision in the 1986 tax law called section 89. Section 89 contains the so-called nondiscrimination rules for health insurance plans offered by American businesses.

In fact, the section says if you are going to deduct as a business expense the health insurance costs, then you have a responsibility to be nondiscriminatory in the offering of those benefits to your employees. The suggestion for nondiscrimination rules came to us from former Treasury Secretary Donald Regan.

Frankly, on its face, it is not a bad idea. But this germ of a good idea has become an infection of complexity in the Tax Code.

This good idea resulted in this: This document represents the rules and regulations published by the Treasury Department to implement this little idea called nondiscrimination. This is nearly 200 pages of regulations for American business, big and small, to try and sift through to understand what section 89 really means.

Accountants do not understand it, lawyers do not understand it, and consultants do not understand it. Yet we expect the American small businessman to understand it It cannot be done. It will not work.

There are times when things that ought to be done simply are too complicated to put into practice. This is one of those instances, in my judgment.

Once the American business community became aware of section 89 there was a literal firestorm of protest.

Most of us understand that when we receive a firestorm of protests from around the country occasionally, it is from some perceived hysteria about a plan that they do not quite understand, and other times it is grounded in real substance. In this instance, I think when the business community took a look at what they were hit with, a couple of hundred pages of rules and regulations, they understood the complexity of it, I think they understood that this had to be repealed.

Frankly, it is our responsibility and our job, to try to see if we can provide more incentives and greater incentives for more insurance in this country. We have 37 million people walking around in America without health insurance. But if you impose this on American businesses, particularly small- to medium-sized businesses, they have told me this is going to persuade them to withdraw their insurance coverage altogether because they cannot comply with this kind of complexity.

Section 89, in my judgment, moves in the opposite direction of the kind of incentive we ought to be providing. That is the reason I am offering today an amendment that would repeal section 89.

Let me be clear for the House of Representatives what I am doing with this amendment: I am repealing section 89 and going back prior to the 1986 law. When section 89 was imposed in the code in 1986 it withdrew from the code the broad discrimination rules that existed, nondiscrimination rules that existed prior to 1986. Those were noncontroversial. Those were well accepted and they provoked no difficulty of any kind.

When section 89 was imposed, those were taken out of the code. I would go back with this amendment prior to 1986 as if section 89 had never been imposed, and reinstate what existed in prior law, prior to 1986.

That is what my amendment represents. I hope the Members of this House will see fit to support it.

I might add that the organizations such as Small Business Legislative Council, National Federation of Independent Business, and others support this amendment today, and a broad majority, I think, of Democrats and Republicans who want to get this issue behind us will support it as well.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, Congress passed the section 89 provision in 1986, and we did it in good faith, with good intent. We simply said there should be no discrimination in these kinds of health benefit programs. We have the same kind of test for other kinds of benefits, such as pensions.

Now the gentleman from North Dakota was a part of our committee, and we voted for the principle underlying section 89, I believe, unanimously. We put it into effect because we simply said there should be no discrimination. Now, we have to admit that upon examination we have found out that the rules and regulations to implement this policy have become more complicated, too much so, and we begin to hear from all the small businesses all over the country. In good faith, we met, and we tried to correct that but to still maintain the principle that highly compensated employees should not be treated better than rank-and-file employees.

We made a new version of it, which simplified the qualification tests and which would have been easier to comply with than the bill we passed in 1986. We did that for the Members who would be responding to the criticism and because we recognized that some changes should be made. Congress had been flooded with objections from some organizations that they had decided, no, we do not want to improve and correct anything, we have to have outright repeal.

We also passed now in the Committee on Ways and Means portion of reconciliation, another version. We simply said that there cannot be discrimination in the very top echelons of a plan maintained by professional service organizations such as doctors or lawyers or engineers. That is in reconciliation, and I submit to Members that is a much more simple version. The Committee on Ways and Means has given Members two versions to implement the nondiscrimination policy and we are willing to continue to work on it if necessary.

But, if Members vote for outright repeal, as most Members may, then Members are saying again, "You can have discrimination." Surely, we do not intend that. That should not be our intent. We ought to say in these kinds of plans there should be no discrimination. That is fair.

Now, our committee had tried, in two instances already, to come up with a workable version on section 89. So if a Member votes for just outright repeal, as strong as the urge is because of the opposition Members have received from small businesses and from others that are not so small, Members are saying, "I endorse discrimination." Members may think that we can look at it the next session, and I hope we would if it is repealed. But the best thing to do is to keep the law on the books now and try to work it out this session, rather than just repeal the entire thing. I hope the repeal would not be the course to follow.

I think that the temptation is strong to say, "Well, let us just start from scratch," like some Members want to do on catastrophic health. We are legislators and ought to try to find out what is a better way to handle it rather than to repeal the nondiscrimination rules.

With good intent, we have offered different versions. We are still willing to do more, perhaps in a conference, but if Members choose an outright repeal, they are saying, "I am for allowing discrimination to continue," and surely we do not think that. As legislators, I think we ought to find an answer to this perplexing problem, and try to yield to the objections and concerns as much as we can, but to keep something on the books. I hope that the House then would not vote for outright repeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] has consumed 4½ minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois has consumed 4 minutes.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the time has come to repeal section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code.

My distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. CONTE, Mr. DORGAN, and I rise today to offer an amendment to the budget reconciliation bill, H.R. 3299. This amendment will give the House of Representatives, including the 317 of my colleagues who cosponsored H.R. 634—legislation to repeal section 89—the long-awaited opportunity to strip from the books one of the most confusing, complex and counterproductive measures ever enacted.

As you well know, section 89 poses serious compliance problems for small business owners. Before you can comply with section 89, you've got to hire someone who actually understands it. Then you've got to gather extensive information about your benefit package and subject the plan to complicated nondiscrimination tests to avoid tax penalties. Put yourselves in the shoes of a small business owner for a moment. How do you comply with a law like this? Certainly not without costly outside advice. Unfortunately, many small business owners have simply opted to cancel their health insurance plans.

Remember, Mr. Chairman, it took the Treasury Department several months after section 89 was supposed to go into effect to come out with incomplete regulations that even the accountants and attorneys could not understand.

Besides the direct effect on the time and resources of small businesses, there are other negative effects as well. The Institute for Research on the Economics of Taxation estimated that section 89 would result in an estimated $4 billion in compliance costs. This added labor cost would result in a loss of about 89,000 jobs.

Have we seen any evidence, from the Department of Treasury or elsewhere, that small business owners discriminate among employees in offering health insurance? No, we have not. Have any hearings been held to investigate discrimination in fringe benefits? No, they have not. Has anyone in the U.S. House of Representatives, or the U.S. Senate for that matter, risen in support of section 89? No, they have not. Mr. Chairman, section 89 is a solution in search of a problem.

Small business are already burdened by excessive regulation. Why subject them to further restrictions on their ability to provide adequate and affordable health insurance plans to their employees?

The health care crisis in our Nation is indeed a severe one. It therefore calls for constructive solutions, not increased restrictions on the business community's ability to provide health insurance to their employees. In fact, in a recent National Federation of Independent Business survey, 71 percent of small business owners believe that every American has a right to basic health care. But, that same survey found that 89 percent of these business owners find health insurance becoming prohibitively expensive. We need to repeal these restrictive rules on small business health insurance plans and replace them with an incentive for offering health insurance—100 percent deductibility for self-employed business owners.

We have witnessed a variety of proposals to "reform" section 89. Yet with each change, the problem grows more confusing and more complex.

Mr. Chairman, this is simply a good idea gone awry. The purported goal of expanding health care coverage is a good one; however, in practice section 89 has proved unworkable and counterproductive.

In my office, the calls and letters opposing section 89 have poured in from Oklahoma small businesses. I want the opportunity to tell those folks we've finally repealed section 89.

If we do not take this opportunity today to repeal section 89 and "son of section 89"—Sec. 106(b)—our Nation's small business community will, once again, be subject to needless restrictions on their ability to offer their employees health insurance.

I would also like to acknowledge the outstanding work of the National Federation of Independent Business [NFIB] in this effort to repeal section 89. As leaders of the Repeal Section 89 Committee, the NFIB has coordinated the repeal movement, and served their small business owners well in this battle.

Mr. Chairman, the outpouring of opposition on this matter has been nothing short of overwhelming. Before us today is a legislative vehicle that can rid us of this nagging issue once and for all. I urge you and the Members of the House to support this amendment to finally repeal section 89.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to oppose the amendment offered by my good friend Mr. DORGAN.

I wholeheartedly agree with the sentiments behind this amendment.

I disagree that repeal is the way to proceed. There is no Member of this House who is more committed than me to responding to the legitimate complaints of businesses trying to comply with present law section 89. For months, I have been meeting with representatives of various businesses, both in Michigan and in Washington, to better understand the specific complaints and to help shape an answer. As a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, I have worked closely with the chairman and the other members to construct an effective answer.

There is no doubt that existing law is too complex, too burdensome, and too costly to implement.

At the same time, I believe that the concept of nondiscrimination and the policy embodied in section 89 should not be abandoned.

The tax expenditures for nontaxed health benefits next year alone will top $38 billion. This makes health care the largest tax subsidized fringe benefit after pensions.

Nondiscrimination rules have applied for years to pension benefits. The principle is simple: If the American taxpayer is going to provide a subsidy for a benefit plan, these taxpayers have a right to require that this plan provide benefits to more than just a handful of highly paid individuals.

The pension nondiscrimination rules have evolved through trial and error. When first instituted, they were too complex, and Congress had to revise them. But over time, employers have accepted these revised rules, and rank and file workers have received bigger pension benefits as a result.

Section 89 should be reformed by streamlining, carefully constructing, and narrowly drawing rules to prevent truly egregious abuses of the tax subsidy for health care.

The provisions in the reconciliation bill, while not perfect, go a long way toward this ideal. The rewritten rules in the bill are simple; they are easy to understand and easy to satisfy. For most employers, there is only one rule: an employer can't maintain an abusive "executives' only" plan. That is, a plan cannot make coverage available exclusively to highly paid individuals and still receive a tax subsidy.

In contrast to the complicated mechanical tests of present law, the bill provides some simple safe harbors to give employers guidance. Of course, employers do not have to satisfy the safe harbors. Instead, they may choose to demonstrate compliance by showing by facts and circumstances that their plans make coverage available to a reasonably broad group, and not merely to high paid executives.

A second rule is added for professional service corporations. It adds a simple requirement that health benefits be not merely available, but are actually elected by at least some nonhighly paid employees.

I would urge my colleagues to take a minute before they vote and consider what a complete repeal of section 89 would mean.

Repeal will mean that businesses which provide health insurance to all their employees will be treated under the law identically as their competitors that only provide insurance to top management.

Repeal will mean a step backward in our efforts to expand health insurance coverage at a time when 37 million people, many who are families with young children, have no health coverage. If we are unable to expand coverage through nondiscrimination rules, businesses may well find themselves facing even more difficult and expensive choices.

Repeal will reopen the debate on whether all health insurance should be tax exempt. In 1985, President Reagan and the Treasury Department proposed taxing a portion of employer provided health insurance as part of their tax reform plans. These proposals were dropped after business and labor agreed to work out a system of nondiscrimination rules that became section 89. As we continue to face persistent massive deficits, I fear that the Congress may start looking at tax expenditures that are completely untargeted. At nearly $40 billion a year, health insurance might be a tempting target.

In sum, the rules in the reconciliation bill while not perfect are simple, basic tests to prohibit unfair use of the tax expenditure for health plans. In the end, total repeal will not be good for business, especially those who strive to provide needed health coverage to all their regular employees, not just to the highly paid.

I urge the defeat of the amendment.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment now under consideration and I say it is about time. Since day one I have vigorously opposed section 89. In January, I was the first original cosponsor of legislation designed to repeal it. In July, I successfully fought for a 1-year freeze on the implementation of section 89. And just last week, as all America knows, I went before the Rules Committee to offer my amendment for the total repeal of section 89 and son of section 89, the so-called modified repeal. It is reassuring to see that my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee agree to repeal and finally clean up their mess. The only question America has is why did it take them so long?

Section 89 and son of section 89 were legislative experiments gone berserk. It was unscientific, unprofessional back room tinkering that produced a legislative frankenstein, complete with a bolt through the head, that threatened to rampage through America's hard earned benefits plans. From day one I have asked where is the documentation that a problem existed? Where is the documentation that section 89 would reduce the number of the uninsured? There is none and America's employers are up in arms. What kind of anguish have we put them through? How much have they expended in man-hours and dollars to try and comply? And how many employees were threatened with loss of benefits because of this craziness? Finally, did section 89 bring credit to this great institution? The answer is a resounding no. Section 89 is a national embarrassment. About the only people who benefited from it appear to be two consultants who will shortly be out of business.

The good people of America have held their nose over this stench for 9 long months. Members of this side of the aisle have tried on a number of occasions to have a straight up and down recorded vote on section 89 only to fall prey to facile parliamentary maneuvers. Now we can finally do what our constituents want us to do—repeal section 89. Never have I received so many angry letters as I have on section 89—over 200 letters. But I can sleep at night because my conscience is clear. I fought it from day one. Now I urge all my colleagues to cast the vote we have all worked so hard for.

WHY SECTION 89 SHOULD BE REPEALED

Mr. Chairman, I am outraged by how far we have strayed from a legislative process which ensures that laws benefiting the greatest number of our countrymen are enacted. Of course, I am referring to the dangerous road leading us to the notorious section 89. I would like to take a few moments to review the legislative history of section 89 and then explain why I offered an amendment to budget reconciliation with my distinguished colleague, Congressman WATKINS, to repeal section 89 outright.

HISTORY OF LEGISLATION

The origin of section 89 is difficult to trace these days because no one will admit to having authored the provision. Some in Congress are blaming the Reagan administration while others are pointing their finger at members of the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee who advocated this law in conference committee. Apparently, in November 1984, a tax document called Treasury I, suggested a cap on tax-free benefits. Nondiscrimination as a motivation was mentioned in passing. In 1985, Treasury I led to Treasury II, which included nondiscrimination rules, as well as a proposal that workers pay taxes on a small amount of fringe benefits.

Two veteran staffers, specialists in benefits law, Kent Mason and Harry Conaway, apparently used Treasury I and Treasury II as a basis for including section 89 in the 1989 tax-reform proposal. One sidelight to this entire affair, as reported by the Wall Street Journal, is that Mr. Mason and Mr. Conaway are now working as consultants for firms which interpret section 89 for businesses. In the end, House Ways and Means Chairman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI and then-Senate Finance Chairman BOB PACKWOOD included section 89 in the final version of the 1986 Tax Reform Act.

Moreover, it is my understanding that during consideration of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 no hearings were held in the tax-writing committees in either body which specifically focused on section 89. There was no attempt to determine what problem, if any, really existed. There was no attempt to fashion a solution to any specifics. Section 89 was just added to the Tax Code.

DESCRIPTION OF SECTION 89

What is section 89? Though most everyone knows the politics behind this convoluted piece of legislation, few truly understand the complicated tests which compose the basis for it. That's the whole problem with section 89—no one understands it, least of all small business owners who will be hit the hardest if it is enacted. In essence, section 89 requires employers to apply an intricate series of tests to their benefit plans. These tests attempt to measure whether employer-sponsored benefits are fairly distributed to both higher and lower paid employees. If a particular benefit plan fails the section 89 tests, higher paid employees are taxed on benefits that exceed the section 89 limits. The excess value or premium appears on the employee's W-2 form.

There are essentially three major tests which businesses must pass to comply with the law. The first is the 50-percent test which requires that for each benefit offered, lower paid workers must make up at least half of those employees eligible to participate. The second test states that at least 90 percent of an employer's lower paid workers must be eligible for benefits at least half as valuable as those available to executives. The last 75 percent test requires employers to offer benefits to lower paid workers the average value of which is at least 75 percent of the average value of those given to highly paid workers.

While the goal of section 89 is to increase coverage to lower paid workers and their families, its effect has been just the opposite. The complexity of the section 89 rules, combined with the lack of adequate regulatory guidance, will drive many employers to simplify their benefit programs to ease their compliance burdens or drop their programs completely. If a business owner stops short of dropping his or her benefit packages likely changes will include eliminating subsidized spouse and dependant health coverages, reducing available benefit options, and limiting cafeteria plan choices.

REPEAL SECTION 89 EFFORT AND THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF INDEPENDENT BUSINESS

Congressman JOHN LAFALCE has led the way in championing the repeal of section 89 movement by sponsoring his bill, H.R. 634. I was the first original cosponsor of H.R. 634, and since that time I have been in the forefront of the congressional repeal effort. Already, H.R. 634 has attracted 318 cosponsors.

Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss if I did not also commend the National Federation of Independent Business [NFIB] for leading this massive effort to repeal section 89. At the beginning of this fight Business Week reported, "A coalition of 33 lobbying groups, led by the NFIB, is calling on small business owners to flood Congress with letters protesting section 89." Even my friend JOHN LAFALCE has been quoted as saying, "NFIB was first to bring this issue to my attention and has used its resources to help me demonstrate how onerous section 89 is for small business."

NFIB has successfully used its growing grassroots to lobby Congress through a unique combination of letters, phone calls, personal visits back in the home district and good old-fashioned office to office visits here in Washington. The day has come when small business owners are becoming a powerful lobbying force on Capitol Hill. In fact, up until now, historically, small businesses have been the loser in legislative battles. Now, thanks to NFIB, small business has begun to translate its numerical strength into action with a growing number of legislative victories.

Founded nearly a half-century ago in 1943, NFIB was created to give small and independent businesses a voice in governmental decisionmaking. Today, the organization remains true to its charter of advancing small business owners' concerns among State and Federal legislators. Advocating outright repeal of section 89 is just one example of their commitment to small business. NFIB is now the Nation's largest advocacy organization representing small and independent businesses, with a membership of more than 570,000 business owners. NFIB is a melting pot of commercial enterprise: high-technology manufacturers and family farmers, neighborhood retailers and service companies. NFIB, I salute you for your outstanding efforts protecting the interests of small business owners, particularly concerning this onerous provision of the Tax Code—section 89.

DELAY OF SECTION 89

On July 26, the House Appropriations Committee passed the Treasury, Postal Service, and related agencies appropriations bill (H.R. 2989) which included an amendment authored by Congressman TOM DELAY, which effectively prevents the Treasury Department from providing funds for 1 year to enforce section 89. The final vote was 29-26 in favor of the amendment. Following the vote in the House Appropriations Committee, the Rules Committee on July 27 agreed to allow Congressman DELAY's request for a waiver against making tax policy on an appropriations bill, effectively protecting the section 89 provision.

NFIB worked hard to educate members of the House Appropriations Committee before they voted to delay implementation of section 89. In my position as ranking minority member on the House Appropriations Committee I spoke out in opposition to section 89 in favor of sustaining the rule. During my statement, I noted that employers in Massachusetts are hopping mad about section 89. They want total repeal and that's why, again, I signed on as the first original cosponsor of the legislation to repeal this law.

ROSTENKOWSKI'S LEGISLATION, H.R. 1864

Several modifications of section 89 have been introduced along the way in an attempt to soften the blow to the business community. These measures have all been unacceptable because they assume employee discrimination exists. This has never been proven by any studies or other supporting data. The first measure introduced by Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI, H.R. 1864, was completely unworkable for small business owners for several reasons. First, under the chairman's proposal a highly compensated employee would be defined as a 5-percent owner or those making more than $54,000 annually. This definition would include every small business owner in the country. In addition, the chairman's proposal requires that if a small business owner employs 20 or fewer employees, he or she must offer a health insurance plan that is available to 100 percent of his or her eligible employees. This is an inflexible plan which prevents small business employers and their employees from negotiating benefit packages that best meet the needs of the employee.

Mr. Chairman, the Ways and Means held hearings on H.R. 1864 earlier this year and many issues were raised. We appreciate the sincere attempts by my colleagues to reform section 89. But reform is not enough. Every time a reform is suggested, new problems appear. Repeal is the only legitimate option.

"SON OF SECTION 89"

The latest section 89 proposal offered by the chairman has been appropriately named "son of section 89." While section 89 is repealed by the chairman, he inserts 89 modification language into at least nine areas of the Internal Revenue Code. The legislative language for repeal of section 89 is over 30 pages long. This is even before the IRS begins to issue final regulations on qualification tests and compliance tests. Under this proposal, the definition of a highly compensated employee [HCE] contained within the 89 modification still means that every small business owner in the Nation will be automatically included in the HCE category and subject to any possible penalties of noncompliance. Further, under the chairman's newest proposal, if an employer offers special health benefits to one highly compensated employee, that employer must offer the same benefit under the same terms to at least one nonhighly compensated employee. This forces employers to choose among their nonhighly compensated employees, which could lead to charges of discrimination and extensive litigation.

THE DEPARTMENT OF TREASURY INVOLVEMENT

Even the administration's response to section 89 has become an argument for its outright repeal. Though the law went into effect on January 1, 1989, the Treasury Department did not issue its first set of 185 pages of regulations until March, more than 2 months after the law took effect. Most recently, the Department of Treasury agreed to delay implementation of section 89 regulations first to October 1. Then it just recently delayed enforcement until December 1.

THE FUTURE

Mr. Chairman, small business owners across this country are anxious for Congress to repeal section 89. The time has come for us to act decisively and that is why I introduced my amendment to budget reconciliation with Congressman WATKINS to repeal section 89 in its entirety. Section 89 and all of the subsequent modifications are solutions in search of a problem. This onerous law will only make it more difficult for small business to offer health benefits to their employees. Outright repeal is the only solution to end the regulatory nightmare for small business.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Dorgan amendment.

First, let us get the facts straight. Section 89, contrary to what the Wall Street Journal contends, did not come from the tax staff, but from the Treasury Department. Second, section 89 does not force employers to provide benefits, but simply says that to the extent an employer chooses to provide benefits, they must be provided on a nondiscriminatory basis.

Now I know that we have all heard that section 89 is too complicated. And it was, which is precisely why we on the Ways and Means Committee revised it, not once but three times, in response to just those concerns. We enacted a series of safe harbors and simplifications last year in the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988.

The chairman then introduced H.R. 1864 which totally revamped section 89. The committee then held hearings and heard from over 30 witnesses, the majority of whom did not advocate repeal, but agreed with the chairman's bill.

Finally, continuing concerns led the committee to approve the absolute bare bones nondiscrimination rules that you have before you today. Both of these revisions had broad based business support including that of the Small Business Legislative Council and National Small Business United.

So it can not be said that the Committee on Ways and Means has not been responsive on section 89.

I know we are going to lose this vote. I have no doubt in my mind. However, I want my colleagues to know exactly what they are voting for.

If we repeal section 89, we are telling American employers that the Tax Code will subsidize discrimination—that they can give themselves, their executives and their families health care, and that we do not care whether the secretary, the janitor and their families have coverage or not.

If employers only want to provide benefits for their highly paid workers and their families while abandoning the average working family, that is fine, but it shouldn't be subsidized by the Tax Code.

All section 89 tried to do was to say to employers to the extent you provide benefits, provide them on a nondiscriminatory basis. And we didn't even ask employers to pick up the whole tab for the benefits—just not to discriminate. I frankly do not think that is too much to ask for a $38 billion tax subsidy.

But the problem is that all of us do not care whether average American families have access to health care. And despite the claims that will be made by some here today, there is discrimination out there. Just look at the statistics on the 37 million Americans with no health insurance. A majority of these individuals are workers or family members in households in which at least one person is employed. Seventy percent are in families where at least one person worked at least part time.

Section 89, as reported by the committee, was a way to help the average American family have access to health care without costing the Government a dime and without imposing burdensome regulations on business.

We may abandon these families today, but I can guarantee you that at some point we are going to have to come to terms with the problems of American working families who lack health insurance, and with the discrimination that does exist in the business community.

May I say as I end that section 89 as reported by the committee was a way to help the average American family have access to health care without costing the Government a red dime and without imposing burdensome regulations on business. We may, and may I say, and it is going to happen, we may abandon these people today, but I can guarantee at some point that we are going to have to come to terms with the problems of American working families who lack health care, and with discrimination we are going to have to say we had a chance, we went back, we admitted we were wrong, it was too complicated, but we began by saying, "No discrimination in health care plans," and where are we today? Repeal, but we are going to regret it.

Mr. Chairman, I have never ever knowingly voted for discrimination in my life, and I have a lot of feeling that a lot of my colleagues today do not know that is what is happening. I think it is too bad, but the facts have to be stated.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY].

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Dorgan amendment, an amendment that will relieve businesses of a needless mountain of burdensome and complex regulations.

As we already know, nearly 75 percent of the House support flat repeal of section 89.

Section 89 assumes all businesses are guilty of discrimination and must prove their innocence before being proven guilty. It burdens employers with an unjustified amount of complex regulations—regulations so complicated and expensive to comply with that some business owners have told me that they may have to drop health benefits altogether. This regulation is a legislative nightmare—a very expensive nightmare.

The Institute for Research on the Economics of Taxation, or IRET, has estimated that, due to its complexities, section 89 will impose compliance costs of over $4 billion in 1990. And who loses in this situation? The employee.

It is estimated that section 89 will add $4 billion to the cost of labor in 1990 alone and, consequently, reduce the overall level of employment by some 89,000 jobs.

The reduction in the work force will only hurt the economic balance in this Nation. By increasing the cost of production throughout the economy, section 89 will result in a loss of about $2.6 billion in GNP in 1990. Further, as a result of the reduction of output and losses in employment, the United States will lose an estimated $800 million in tax revenues in 1990.

You don't need to be an expert on tax law to realize that this provision is bad for our economy, bad for business, and most importantly, bad for all hard-working Americans. This anticompetitive provision needs to be stricken from the books. Help preserve the welfare of our small business community and protect the well-being of our Nation's work force.

Support the Dorgan amendment to flat out repeal this legislative nightmare.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, if I could, I would like to personalize this debate.

As we debate this issue here today, my brother-in-law lays in the hospital back in Wisconsin for this 44-year-old young man last Friday suffered a stroke. He has three children, and he is a partner in a small business. The reality is that he and his partner some years ago made the decision to provide a benefit plan that protected the two partners in case of disability, major illiness or death so that the company could survive. Under the rules of section 89 that program, that benefit plan, and in this case that business would be ruled illegal. We today are going to eliminate these section 89 rules and regulations because it has failed to take into consideration the realities of normal business life and family protection for people like my brother-in-law.

Mr. Chairman, every one of us in this House, or at least many of us today, will join NFIB in repealing section 89. But for me, "Bruce, this one's for you."

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I propose a toast here today to the small business man of America who brought it forcefully to the attention of the Members of this House that section 89 must be repealed. I propose a toast to the accountant for the small business man of America who brought it to the attention of the small business man that he, the accountant, could not grapple successfully with the complexities of section 89. I propose a toast to all the Members of the House who responded handsomely to the outcry of the small business man and his accountant to bring this moment to bear here in the House of Representatives. I propose a toast to the eventual outcome of this debate and the repeal of section 89.

Mr. Chairman, let us all rejoice and repeal.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of Mr. DORGAN'S amendment calling for a complete repeal of section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code. The American small business community has been carrying the onerous burdens of this tax provision long enough, and now is the time from Congress to correct this misguided law.

The real tragedy of section 89 is that the provision may well end up hurting the very people that it was designed to help. In an effort to ensure better benefits to workers, section 89 may be ensuring that fewer companies offer any benefits at all for fear of noncompliance with the complicated regulations. I firmly believe that no amount of change is going to prevent compliance with section 89 from resulting in a greater number of uninsured American workers. Further, the cost of complying with the provisions of section 89 in 1990 is estimated to add $4 billion to the cost of labor in 1990. More expensive labor means fewer jobs, and America cannot afford to lose any more jobs.

Over 300 of our collegues have cosponsored Congressman LAFALCE's bill to repeal section 89. In addition, Treasury Secretary Brady has announced two separate delays in the beginning date for testing for compliance with section 89, while in the Treasury, Postal Service and General Government appropriations bill for fiscal year 1990, the House voted to prohibit the Treasury from spending any of its appropriated funds on enforcing section 89 requirements. The need for repeal is clear. I urge my colleagues to recognize this need, and to vote for Mr. DORGAN's amendment to repeal section 89.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. IRELAND].

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the repeal of section 89, and in doing so I would like to spend and devote some special tribute to my colleagues, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], the gentleman form Oklahoma [Mr. WATKINS], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], and particularly the gentleman from Massachusetts has worked for these many years for the American small business community.

Mr. Chairman, reports have indicated that, if section 89 were allowed to be implemented, it would reduce the gross national product by $2.6 billion, eliminate 89,000 jobs, and cause a net loss to the Government in taxes of $800 million. America's employers support the total repeal of section 89, and it is evident that their voices are being heard by the 317 Members of this body that have cosponsored this legislation.

In passing, Mr. Chairman, I would remind my colleagues that, if the IRS were subject to the Regulatory Flexibility Act, as are other agencies of our Government, we would not have the auto tag mess, the W-2 form mess and section 89 mess.

Mr. Chairman, I support the bill.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], and I rise in strong support of his motion to repeal section 89.

First, let me pay tribute to my chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] who I believe has worked sincerely to try and simplify this measure, and my support of the Dorgan amendment is in no way meant as criticism of his sincere efforts to try to reconcile what is an enormous problem. By voting for the Dorgan amendment we repeal hundreds of pages of unneeded statutes and regulations, and that is good. By voting for the Dorgan amendment we save the American public billions of dollars in useless paperwork, and that is good. By voting for the Dorgan amendment we save thousands of health plans that would have been dropped without it.

Mr. Chairman, this is good legislation, and we ought to vote for it, but let us remember that there is a reason to allow flexibility in the offering of health care plans.

I ask my colleagues, "If your spouse already is covered, why should you have to take your fringe benefits in those areas?"

Repealing section 89 is fair as well, and I think what we do today that is most important is we send a message to the American people that we are not going to try and regulate the minute details of their daily lives, and that is good, too.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Dorgan and Conte amendment, and I would like to especially thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for his continued work in getting us to this vote today.

We now have a historic opportunity to vote up or down on true repeal of section 89.

Despite the sincere efforts of the Committee on Ways and Means to provide relief for the complex and confusing mix of rules on section 89, they have substituted four pages of new language dealing with health benefit regulations for nondiscrimination rules.

Mr. Chairman, that is not repeal. That is further complication. This new measure remains inflexible. Small employers and their employees should be able to negotiate benefit packages that best meet the needs of employees.

The answer is simple. The answer is complete repeal, and once again, Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the chairmen, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for bringing us to their point.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, let me be clear for the Members of this House. A vote on this amendment is not a vote to repeal section 89 and a vote therefore for discrimination. This is not a vote for discrimination. This is in my judgment a triumph of common sense over sophisticated theory. Sophisticated theory is wonderful. It is embodied in 200 pages of rules and regulations, but I am willing to bet all the money I have, and it is not much, that there is not one Member of this House, not one, that understands all these rules and regulations, and yet we would want our constituents to do that.

Mr. Chairman, this vote to repeal section 89 is a triumph of common sense, that is what it is about. It is not about discrimination.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER].

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

I rise in strong support of the Dorgan-Conte amendment, an amendment on behalf of common sense in American business and American tax policy.

It is a widely held belief in Congress that on occasion the U.S. Tax Code can and should be used as an instrument of social engineering. In many cases, when properly implemented, targeted tax policy has proven to provide beneficial social results. The key to using the Tax Code for broad social purposes is ensuring that policies are properly implemented. Clearly section 89 was not.

I laud the intention of section 89 which was to prevent benefit plan discrimination against low-wage employees. But this piece of social engineering took on a life of its own, imposing a burden vastly out of proportion to the goal. Small businesses and nonprofits such as colleges and universities have already shelled out thousands of dollars each in consulting fees for tax experts and consultants in a struggle to comply with the complexity of the law. Even the smallest firms could pay as much as $5,000.

Experts estimate the total cost of compliance between $1 billion to $5 billion, far higher than the revenues to be raised by section 89.

Besides the cost, section 89 causes a number of other problems. Cafeteria-style health plans are jeopardized because of the sheer difficulty involved in proving that the different benefits chosen by individual employees are not discriminatory. And ironically, at a time when many Americans cannot afford health insurance, section 89 is giving business a potent reason to stop subsidizing employee health plans.

Employers across America went into a state of euphoria 2 weeks ago when it was reported that Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI changed his position on this issue and supported repeal. The euphoria was short-lived once they read the fine print of this so-called repeal. The Wall Street Journal called the Rostenkowski repeal "Son of Section 89," and pointed out that sections of the new proposal were more onerous than the original.

But small businesses across the country led by the National Federation of Independent Business [NFIB] were ever-vigilant and adamant in their press for repeal. Our American enterprises have enough trouble trying to keep up with foreign competition without having to handle an additional burden of an overregulatory Congress performing social engineering at their and American workers' expense.

I urge my colleagues to support the Dorgan-Conte amendment for full repeal of section 89.

Let's let America get to work on meeting the demands of the competition and set aside the onerous and gratuitous demands put forth in section 89.

Let's get rid of this nightmare.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Dorgan amendment, although I have little illusion how the vote on the amendment is going to go.

I firmly believe that repeal of this basic health care protection for rank-and-file workers is an enormous mistake that will be long regretted. No one is more aware than I that the rules of section 89 under present law are burdensome and complex. Although some newspapers have attributed section 89 to my staff, I want to clearly state that section 89 was originated by the Reagan Treasury Department. Let me be clear on another point: I make no defense of the provisions of present law. That is why I have worked in good faith for the last 6 months with the members of the Committee on Ways and Means and the administration to simplify the rules.

In place of section 89, the Ways and Means Committee agreed to a set of simple rules to prohibit only the most egregious abuses of discrimination against rank-and-file workers. The provisions adopted by the committee—with the administration's support and, I thought, on a bipartisan basis—would simply prohibit "executive-only" health plans created by owners and highly paid managers who give themselves Cadillac health coverage, and give absolutely nothing to their rank-and-file employees. In addition, the bill would prohibit discriminatory health plans maintained by professional service organizations; that is, doctors, lawyers, and other highly paid professionals.

These rules prohibit only the most blatantly discriminatory health plans that were brought to the committee's attention by the administration. But even these simple rules—designed to deal only with abuse cases—do not satisfy the repeal advocates.

If all these rules are repealed, let's be very clear on what you are doing. You are no longer showing concern with complexity, but rather you are encouraging discrimination against rank-and-file workers. There's no other way around it. This is no longer a debate about complexity—full repeal with nothing to replace will result in discrimination, pure and simple.

Nondiscrimination rules have a simple purpose; they ensure that employee benefits are not subsidized by the Tax Code if these benefits are enjoyed only by an employer's top-paid employees. To vote for complete repeal of these rules today is to vote in favor of a $38 billion tax subsidy paid for by all American taxpayers but which only benefits those with the highest income.

Next year alone, the tax expenditure for employer-provided health care will exceed $38 billion. Let me repeat that—$38 billion. If we repeal all nondiscrimination rules, there will be absolutely no constraints on how employers may use this tax subsidy. If an executive gives himself and his vice president health coverage, and nobody else; if law partners give themselves health coverage and none to their secretaries; if a doctor covers himself and not his nurse—these health plans will be perfectly all right under the Tax Code, and fully subsidized by all taxpayers. I find that policy totally indefensible—but that's exactly what you are determined to do today. If you repeal all nondiscrimination rules, how can you justify to the American taxpayer a tax subsidy of $38 billion to support health coverage only for highly paid executives to the exclusion of the rank and file? Maybe you can—but I can't.

I firmly believe that repeal of these nondiscrimination rules will not make the fact of inadequate health coverage for American workers go away. Today we spend $38 billion a year to subsidize health insurance for the highest paid; some day—and I hope it is soon—we will have to figure out how to cover everybody else—37 million hard-working, rank-and-file Americans with no coverage at all. When that day arrives, I will proudly provide my strong support for the promotion of broader health coverage for hard-working Americans.

Mr. Chairman, we all know how the vote will go today. The Ways and Means Committee's good faith effort to simplify the rules—however hard we tried—was never good enough for those few with a blind determination for repeal. Well, today they will have their day—they have this House in full retreat. Section 89 may go away—but the issue of fundamental health care protection for rank-and-file Americans will not—we'll be back to fight another day. I look forward to working with responsible business groups. Such as the National Small Business United, the Small Business Legislative Council, and the Association of Wholesaler-Distributors, as well as the "Section 89" Coalition, to develop at the earliest legislative opportunity, a simple, workable set of nondiscrimination rules—fair to both employee and employers of all sizes.

This is nothing but a tax subsidy paid for by middle- and low-income taxpayers for the benefit of highly paid management. That is plainly wrong—and we will be back to correct it.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of the committee chairman on this particular issue, and urge defeat of the Dorgan amendment.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my good friend, Representative BYRON DORGAN, which would repeal section 89 and strike the new health benefit nondiscrimination rules that H.R. 2399 proposes as a replacement for section 89 of the Tax Code.

Section 89 has been a nightmare for American business. This year, I have received over 5,250 calls and letters from Kansans regarding section 89, and not one of them wanted to let me know that they like it the way we enacted it. Before we rush in and approve another version of rules intended to prevent discrimination in the provision of employee benefits, we should carefully define any problem that exists and move carefully to develop legislation that pinpoints real problems, rather than casting a net that sweeps in employers who make health benefits available to broad groups of employees, without discriminating in favor of owners and managers.

While the new employee benefit rules proposed in H.R. 3299 are an improvement over the provisions of section 89, they still require employers to engage in unnecessary analysis and recordkeeping. Congress should not be imposing additional requirements on businesses, particularly on small businesses which are ill-equipped to deal with additional paperwork burdens. These nondiscrimination rules actually may be counterproductive: Employers may respond to the requirements by deciding not to offer any health benefits at all, rather than go through the analysis required to prove that their plan is not in violation.

I am an original cosponsor of H.R. 634, legislation introduced by the distinguished chairman of the Small Business Committee, JOHN LAFALCE, which calls for the repeal of section 89, and I would like to take this opportunity to commend Chairman LAFALCE for the leadership he has demonstrated on this issue since public concern first arose over it. I have been a staunch supporter of repeal of section 89 throughout the 101st Congress, and I urge my colleagues to take this opportunity to respond to the very real and sincerely felt concerns of businesses across America, both large and small, by voting to repeal section 89, and take a step back from further promulgation of nondiscrimination rules until we have a clearer sense of what problems, if any, exist in this area, I hope my colleagues will join with me in supporting the Dorgan amendment.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFALCE. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

I would like to just briefly comment on the remarks of the chairman. I think he is absolutely correct. The die has been set on this particular issue, and I think the gentleman is also correct in saying that we will be back to fight another day. I think we should wipe out discrimination where we see it; however, I would strongly urge passage of this amendment. It is most important that we get rid of this section 89 and start over again. I have a great deal of confidence in the Ways and Means Committee, of which I am a member, and chairman and the ranking member, to see that we do go forward and come up with a better bill.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, in February of this year I introduced H.R. 634, a bill to repeal section 89. As of today, there are now a total of 320 sponsors of my bill. Approximately 50 percent of those sponsors are Democrats, and approximately 50 percent Republicans. It has been a bipartisan effort. The effort has been supported not simply by business organizations. The effort also has been supported by labor organizations representing their rank and file members.

Why have virtually all groups in America supported repeal of section 89? Because the Reagan administration and the Congress made an honest mistake. Section 89 proceeded on the assumption that all employers in America were guilty of discrimination. The law, section 89, asssumed that the Federal Government was discriminating, that State governments were discriminating, that local governments and school boards were discriminating, that every nonprofit organization in America was discriminating.

Second, after assuming there was discrimination on the part of every employer, the law imposed a burden of proof on those employers to prove that they were not discriminating. These were two absolutely unreasonable steps, but then, further, in order for these employers to prove that they were not guilty of discrimination, they were told they would have to go through a mammoth data collection effort incurring tremendous expenses. And they would not have to do this for just one occasion. They would have to go through this mammoth data collection effort annually. Every single year they would have to prove they were not discriminating.

Further, in proving that they were not discriminating, they could not offer evidence as to the design of their plans. They could not offer evidence as to their intent. They could not offer evidence that they were offering the same basic plan to all employees. No, there had to be a certain quality of result rather than opportunity. It was, in short, the worst of all worlds, and we set out to repeal it. We set out to repeal it against strong opposition, too, because we were told that under no circumstances could there be repeal, that we would be met with adamant opposition.

Then the Committee on Ways and Means began deliberating on the issue, and the Committee on Ways and Means took steps, and each step was a step in the right direction. But unfortunately while each step was a step in the right direction, they did not quite go far enough early enough. Also, unfortunately, there were efforts to repeal section 89 that were inappropriate and made it more difficult to proceed appropriately.

For example, there was an effort to defeat the previous question on the urgent supplemental appropriations bill. Even if the previous question were defeated, an amendment to repeal section 89 would have been ruled out of order, and I therefore opposed that inappropriate effort. Unfortunately, it was further complicated when newspapers such as the Wall Street Journal attempted to demagog the issue and criticized those who voted for the previous question, saying that they supported repeal and then, hypocritically, voted against repeal. Nothing could be further from the truth.

There were other inappropriate efforts, too, that I opposed, such as discharge petitions, because I thought it appropriate to let the Committee on Ways and Means proceed in a responsible fashion. It was not until last Thursday that the latest effort, and there were about five separate efforts, became available. I must say that I think the Committee on Ways and Means proceeded in good faith and, in their latest version, produced a responsible product. They, in fact, did in their final version of the reconciliation bill come forth with repeal of section 89, and in addition to repeal of section 89, also amended section 106 in an attempt to deal with their perceived problem of discrimination.

Some would argue that that effort was "too little, too late." I would not. I would argue, though, that regrettably it came too late. Had that effort come 2 months or so earlier, I think we then could have hammered out the technical difficulties that still remain with the amendment to section 106, and we might have avoided this floor confrontation, something that I at all times wanted to avoid.

Mr. Chairman, there are still problems with the section 89 provisions in the reconciliation bill. There is a necessity, I think, to prove to the world that the Congress can correct mistakes once those mistakes are recognized. I think a clean and simple repeal is therefore necessary. I think it is also going to be necessary to deal with two separate problems, one of which the reconciliation bill attempts to deal with, one of which it does not. These are the problems of excessive fringe benefits and the problems of discrimination.

The amendments to section 106, as I read them, do not deal with the problem of excessive benefits. President Reagan, in his 1984 tax reform proposal, would have dealt with that problem. However, there was too much opposition, both from labor and business.

The problem of discrimination will still remain, although I think that the number of instances of unfair discrimination is relatively small. It seems to me that, first, we ought to establish exactly what the extent of unfair discrimination is, and then we should work, collectively, to fashion an appropriate remedy, rather than simply being handed something at the last minute, as was done last week.

In closing, I want to praise so many groups. I want to praise the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means for his good-faith efforts. I want to praise labor and business organizations. I want to praise the groups that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means mentioned, the National Small Business United, the Small Business Legislative Council and others, and I think special praise must be given to the National Federation of Independent Business. I understand the chairman has his difficulties with that organization, but they were primary the moving force for repeal of section 89, from the beginning to the end.

However, I will say this, too, that NFIB suggested to me, informally, and unofficially, that they would be able to support some efforts to deal with both unfair discrimination and excessive benefits. If the Dorgan/LaFalce amendment is accepted, and I hope and expect it will be—indeed, I think it must be—it is my intent in the next session to work on the problem of the taxation of excessive benefits, to work on the problem of unfair discrimination, and to work on the problem of availability of health insurance for all Americans.

It is my hope that all those organizations that allied with me in the effort to repeal section 89 will also ally with me in my good-faith efforts to deal with the problem of excessive benefits, of unfair discrimination, and of the unavailability of health insurance for all Americans, and that the Committee on Ways and Means will respond cooperatively to such collective efforts.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFALCE. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I, too, would like to add one more commendation to the gentleman in the well for his work on this issue. I rise in strong support of the Dorgan amendment and urge its approval.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to urge my colleagues to support the Dorgan amendment to repeal section 89. As we all know, section 89 was added to the Internal Revenue Code by the Tax Reform Act of 1986—which, by the way, this Member opposed—a 925-page bill comprising literally hundreds of provisions.

Section 89's ostensible purpose was to require more uniform coverage of more employees when employers provide tax-exempt benefits, such as health and life insurance. However, this law is so complex that only a relatively few benefits experts understand it.

How complex is secton 89? Originally, it was supposed to go into effect on January 1 of this year. It is so complicated that the Internal Revenue Service didn't even finish its 250 pages of regulations—explaining section 89 and how to comply with it—until April. Even then, these regulations created little illumination for the average business person.

Section 89 was intended to guarantee that employee fringe benefits were provided on a fair, nondiscriminatory basis. But the section 89 rules are so hard to follow and understand that many workers could suddenly find the IRS thinking they owe taxes on employer-provided benefits everyone thought were tax free.

In fact, the $200 million a year section 89 was projected to raise for the Federal treasury would have come mostly from small employers terminating their tax-exempt employee benefit plans and "cashing out" those benefits in the form of taxable income to employees.

Members of the House have come to understand this problem. I was an original cosponsor of H.R. 634, the leading bill for repeal, which ultimately attracted more than two-thirds of the House as cosponsors. I commend the chairman of the Small Business Committee, JOHN LAFALCE, for his foresight and leadership on that bill. I was glad to see that, on July 25, the House voted, in the Treasury-Postal Service appropriations, to prohibit the use of funds to implement or enforce section 89.

The Treasury Department has understood the problem. Because it's not fair to expect employers to comply with a law before the IRS can even explain it to them, they have said they would not enforce compliance with the law until at least December 1 of this year.

And I want to commend the leadership and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee for their agreement that the House should have the opportunity to work its will on this issue. Section 89 needs to be repealed. I acknowledge that the committee approved section 89 with the best of motives and I have confidence in their expertise as they continue to work toward a leaner, cleaner, nondiscrimination policy after repeal of section 89 is completed.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise and request against repeal of the section 89, not based on race, but based on class as has been stated, and I am in full support of the position taken by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means against this repeal.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. MACHTLEY].

Mr. MACHTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Dorgan amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Dorgan amendment and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks. The outcry over section 89 is justified, and I am pleased to see that real progress has been made to curtail this messy tax regulation.

Section 89 has created more problems than it is worth because it is a preposterous creation. Imagine a tax regulation that even the IRS officials cannot figure out how to decipher! I am sure that anyone who has ever filed their taxes, or read even more complicated IRS regulations explaining tax procedures, thought that nothing more confusing could ever be codified into law. But, section 89 has pulled a rabbit out of a hat and achieved exactly that—a regulation which exceeds the understanding of its own IRS creators.

I am all for the basic tenets behind section 89. That is why I support the pre-1986 nondiscrimination provisions of the Tax Code, which the Dorgan amendment would return us to. The "son of section 89" created by the Ways and Means Committee would do little to curb this confusion, and I am certain that the owners of small businesses in my congressional district agree. I commend the efforts of my colleague from North Dakota, and urge all members to support his needed amendment.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Chairman, today we have an opportunity to end an administrative nightmare for small businesses. We have an opportunity to provide small business employees with increased security about their health plans. We have a chance to repeal section 89.

Section 89 started out as a provision of the 1986 Tax Code with two very simple and worthy objectives. First, it aimed to eliminate the favorable tax treatment of discriminatory health benefits packages. And second, it aimed to provide increased incentives for employee provided health care coverage.

Yet as section 89 made its way through the Congress and the bureaucracy, it turned into an impractical, unmagageable tangle of rules, regulations and requirements. Needless to say, section 89 does not fulfill either of it's original goals.

Compliance costs for this measure are estimated at more than $4 billion. The Internal Revenue Service estimates that section 89 will generate more than 9 million hours of paperwork for employers. And, finally, Mr. Chairman, it is estimated that the additional cost of labor caused by section 89 will eliminate more than 80,000 jobs.

Employers are going to be more tempted to simply drop their health plans altogether. These regulations are so complicated that it took the IRS 6 months to develop them—the Federal Government's trained tax professionals labored for 6 months.

This is not good government. Businesses in my district are furious and they have every right to be. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment to strike section 89 from the books. It's time to clean up this mess once and for all.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN]. As the vice chairman of the Small Business Committee, I want to express my strongest opposition to section 89 and urge my colleagues to vote in favor of repealing this onerous provision. In fact, I was pleased to cosponsor, with the distinguished chairman of the Small Business Committee, Congressman JOHN LAFALCE, the original legislation that would repeal section 89. That bill, which now has 318 cosponsors, is substantially embodied in the amendment before us today.

Earlier this year, the Small Business Committee held hearings on the deleterious impact of section 89. We heard small business trade associations, municipal employee organizations, educational institutions, and many others, tell how section 89, if not repealed, would cripple their operations. And, we have all heard from our constituents on this matter. The outcry has been overwhelming. I assure my colleagues that the small business men and women of this Nation are watching today to see if we have been listening to them and taking their concerns seriously.

Section 89 is so burdensome and unmanageable, that the Internal Revenue Service has postponed its implementation on several occasions. Originally, the IRS stated that this provision would mean an extra 9 million hours in paperwork for the businesses of this Nation. That figure has since been revised to at least 36 million hours and many believe that this figure is still too low. Similarly, it was estimated that enactment of section 89 would result in an additional $72 million in taxes flowing into the Federal Treasury. However, it is now believed that this provision will cause a $2.6 billion reduction in our gross national product in 1990 and nearly $45 billion between 1990 and 2000. This reduction translates into a loss of $13.5 billion in taxes over the next 10 years. Thus, far from being a revenue raiser, section 89 would be a great revenue loser.

It has been shown in study after study that America's small businesses are the chief producer of new jobs in this country. In fact, nearly 60 percent of all the jobs created in this decade have come from small firms. Many of these businesses make just enough in profits to meet their payroll. Provisions such as section 89, which hit small firms much harder than large companies, could cost this Nation thousands of jobs and hundreds of small business closings. In fact, one recent study has estimated that nearly 700,000 jobs will be lost over the next 10 years if this provision is not repealed. That is a price this country truly cannot afford to pay. I urge my colleagues to vote to repeal section 89.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Dorgan amendment to repeal section 89 in its entirety. All of us have heard about the regulatory nighmares that businesses of this country will encounter trying to comply with section 89, the tax change instituted by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. At the time that that act was passed, I felt there were a number of ill conceived provisions, section 89 being foremost, and therefore voted against it. Section 89 is so complex that, though well intended, it would have devastating effects on the business community. The provision was designed to eliminate discrimination in health and life insurance programs provided by employers. Unfortunately section 89 will probably have exactly the opposite effect, by causing many employers to lose their existing health and life insurance benefits and by preventing many others from obtaining them. As a member of the House Appropriations Committee, I supported an amendment to the fiscal year 1990 Treasury appropriations bill which denies funding to the Department of Treasury for the purpose of enforcing this tax provision. Several different House bills have been introduced to modify or eliminate section 89, but up to this point the full House of Representatives has not been given the opportunity to act on them. Finally, today is the day in which we will have the chance to repeal this burdensome tax provision. Do the responsible thing, support the repeal amendment.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee for making a sincere attempt to address the costly and burdensome provisions of section 89. Unfortunately, I do not believe the modifications contained in this reconciliation bill go far enough to prevent what will certainly be a regulatory nightmare should section 89 go into effect.

While I support the goal of nondiscrimination and ensuring broad coverage, I am concerned that the costs and bureaucratic burdens placed on small firms could force many of them to drop their health insurance plans. With an estimated 37 million uninsured Americans, section 89 could make a serious problem even worse.

Small businesses are already faced with many paperwork and tax burdens. Section 89 is another example of short-sighted Federal involvement in the day-to-day operations of American business. In my view, Congress should focus on efforts to make health insurance coverage affordable and reduce Government requirements. This would help to achieve the goal of expanding employee benefits without imposing onerous new burdens on small business.

I urge my colleagues to support an outright repeal of section 89 by supporting the Dorgan amendment.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the amendment proposed by my colleague Mr. DORGAN, which would repeal section 89 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Earlier this year I worked hard as a member of the Appropriations Committee to prohibit the Treasury Department or the Internal Revenue Service from using funds to enforce section 89. But this was just a first step. Now we must take the final step and repeal this provision. It has been estimated that compliance with section 89 would cost American businesses $4 billion in 1990 alone. This translates into a potential loss of 89,000 jobs for American workers. The impact would be particularly acute on part-time workers.

There was never any guarantee that section 89 ever would have made health insurance and other benefits more widely available to workers. Indeed, section 89 is too confusing, too complex and too costly to have ever held out any hope of helping those workers it was said it would protect.

Some have argued that the Budget reconciliation bill accomplishes the repeal which I seek, and on the face of things, that would seem to be true. However, the Ways and Means Committee inserted modifications which could very well get us back to square one. The legislative language affects at least nine areas of the Internal Revenue Code and runs over 30 pages long. The modifications would also revisit a problem section 89 presented—while they are to take effect on January 1, 1990, the IRS would be given 6 months to write the regulations. It is not fair to expect businesses to comply with a law before regulations are issued. Also, and perhaps most significant, the Ways and Means language does not clarify the treatment of part-time employees.

Section 89 was not a good proposal which merely needed fine-tuning. It was a bad proposal which needs to be eliminated. This amendment will accomplish that goal. I support it, and urge my colleagues to join me in doing so.

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Dorgan-Conte amendment to repeal section 89.

"The road to hell is paved with good intentions", so runs the cliche'd old addage, and there is no better illustration of this point than Congress' attempt to ensure that everyone had an equal opportunity for health insurance. Once again, Congress recognized an inequity in the system and wasted no time in throwing the baby out with the bathwater.

This is by no means a new phenomenon; indeed we have been doing "too much good" for years by opening such Pandora's boxes as catastrophic health insurance. Section 89 is a particularly good example, since it is not only insufficient to its own ends but detrimental to the cause it was designed to help.

The paperwork necessary to verify section 89 compliance is so inundating that few businesses in particular are drowning in the red tape spawned by this "simple" stipulation. More frightening is the fact that many small businesses are finding it infeasible to maintain their health benefits program, and are rescinding them altogether. In trying to encourage employee health benefits, Congress has threatened their very existence.

There are some lessons that Congress is very slow to learn; foremost among these is the fact that there are many problems legislation does not cure. Looking at the effects of this initiative one would be inclined to wonder if Congress would try to help a thirsty man by drowning him.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that Congress sees the moral of this story and repudiates the idea that we can create a perfect world if we pass enough laws. Section 89 is yet another good intention on the road to hell; let's not take another step in that direction: repeal section 89.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of repealing section 89. This section of the 1986 "Tax Confusion Act" has wreaked havoc on the American small businessmen, by forcing them to comply with section 89 regulations at great expense. As a result, many small businessmen threatened to drop employee benefits rather than comply with these onerous regulations.

In May, Congress had a chance to end the section 89 nightmare by supporting a motion by my good friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. GEKAS, repealing section 89. However, the Democratic leadership did not allow a vote on this commonsense motion. But this vote today represents a positive move toward fixing the problems the liberals created for the American people when they instituted the 1986 Tax Reform Act.

I was an early cosponsor of legislation to repeal section 89, which has support from over 300 Members of Congress who realized the problems of section 89. I was also pleased that the House earlier this summer voted overwhelmingly to cut the funding for the Internal Revenue Service to implement or enforce section 89 regulations.

The intent of section 89 was a dubious one. Two liberal tax writers on the House Ways and Means Committee devised section 89 and installed it into the 1986 Tax Reform Act. Mr. Chairman, these individuals are now benefiting from this by working in the private sector as consultants helping businesses abide by section 89 regulations. These former staffers created a complicated, bureaucratic monster which they only understand.

These former staffers may have had good intentions, but they still ignored several issues. First, section 89 is so complicated that it took the Internal Revenue Service a considerable amount of time before issuing the final compliance regulations. Second, workers often negotiate health and insurance benefits creating dissimilarities between employee contracts. Finally, perks are used to reward outstanding individual performance.

By supporting the repeal of this chicanery, we will create a better environment for businesses and workers. Now, small businesses will be able to continue providing vital benefits to their employees. We must not subject the business world to more onerous, unnecessary Government regulations. I encourage my colleagues to vote for the amendment offered by Representative BYRON DORGAN.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 390, noes 36, not voting 6, as follows:

□ 1730

Messrs. CLAY, SAVAGE, STOKES, and TOWNS changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. MARTINEZ, UDALL, and MINETA changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider Amendment No. 3 printed in section 2 of House Report 101-261.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ANDERSON

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: In section 11502 of the bill, strike subsection (c).

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes in support of his amendment, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 30 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the reconciliation bill includes two provisions on aviation taxes: one to suspend the tax trigger; the other to place the resulting revenues in the general fund instead of the aviation trust fund.

While our committee does not agree with the suspension, it is the latter—the diversion of aviation taxes from the trust fund to the general fund—that we're opposing in this amendment.

We do so for a number of reasons.

First, it would seriously jeopardize aviation tax moneys that are urgently needed to meet capital development projects. For example, the FAA estimates that approximately $85 billion will be needed for airport development and air traffic control modernization over the next 10 years to ensure safety, to increase capacity, and to expand the system to meet passenger and air traffic demands.

If the Ways and Means provision becomes law there will be less funding for aviation. Projects will fall by the wayside; congestion will be a common occurrence, and the safety of our airways will be at a greater risk. Put simply, we have tremendous aviation needs and our meeting them will be impeded if the amendment is defeated.

The second factor, and a very important fact I hope our colleagues realize, is that the diversion which is so damaging to our aviation system is just not necessarily for Ways and Means to meet its revenue requirements. The added revenues from suspending the tax trigger will be credited toward the committee's target whether these revenues are placed in the trust fund or the general fund. That has been confirmed by both the Budget Committee and the Congressional Budget Office, and I invite all our colleagues to stop by and pick up copies of letters supporting the fact that my amendment is absolutely revenue neutral.

The third factor important to note is that if this diversion is allowed to happen it could be the beginning of the end for other user fee programs.

For example, what about Social Security?

Do you want Social Security taxes used to fund defense programs? Do you want Social Security revenues applied to deficit reduction?

What about the highway trust fund? Do you want to jeopardize future funding of highway projects in your district?

These are only a few examples. There are others.

The important point is that if you are concerned, take notice. The provision in this bill is bad for aviation today, and dangerous as a precedent down the road. It is an effort to test the waters. First, the Aviation Trust Fund and then what?

Protect Social Security.

Protect unemployment compensation.

Protect black lung.

Protect civil service retirement.

Protect Foreign Service retirement.

Protect the aviation trust fund.

Protect the highway trust fund.

Vote "aye" on my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COUGHLIN].

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, it is with some reluctance that I rise to oppose my friend and colleagues on the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. However, my colleagues, we have got to be willing to have user financing of our aviation system. We have that in our highway system. It is totally user financed. Our aviation system is not user financed. We have got to be willing to have the aviation trust fund pay its fair share of the cost of operating our air traffic system. The cost of air traffic controllers is just as much a part of the cost of operating our system as is the cost of building and maintaining airports, or improving our radar or our computers.

We have not been stingy with the Federal Aviation Administration and our aviation system. Spending has increased 121 percent since 1982. That is more than the increase in spending for our Department of Defense. It is not a lack of funding that has held up new airport construction or modernization of our air traffic control system. Capital spending has gone up in this period by 300 percent. Seventy-five percent of FAA funding is supposed to come from the trust fund, but because of the accounting gimmicks, in fact only 56 percent has, in fact, come from the trust fund. General taxpayers have subsidized aviation users by some $5.3 billion since 1983. The Committee on Ways and Means' provision is a one-time reimbursement of less than $1 billion of that $5.3 billion.

Now, statements have been made that the accumulation in the trust fund means that users have paid more in taxes than they have received in benefits. Exactly, exactly the opposite is the case. From 1982 to 1989, $20 billion has been collected by the FAA, and we have spent $39 billion.

The rest has been spent by a subsidy from the general taxpayers. We have got to be willing to use that trust fund for the purpose for which it was designed, and that is to pay for the aviation system.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment would destroy that. It is important that we defeat the amendment and stick with the proposal made by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT].

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this amendment.

The point that must be emphasized is that this amendment is revenue neutral. Adoption of this amendment will not add 1 cent to the Federal deficit or reduce the revenue coming into the Federal Treasury.

This debate is not about the deficit. Rather, it is about where the money paid by aviation users should go. Right now, when you buy an airline ticket, 8 percent of the cost of that ticket goes into the aviation trust fund. When a private pilot buys a gallon of fuel for his plane, 12 cents goes into that same aviation trust fund.

Since the trust fund was created in 1970, all ticket taxes, fuel taxes, and other aviation user fees have gone entirely into the aviation trust fund. But a provision in this bill now would change that. It would take half of the revenue collected by aviation user fees and place it in the general fund. This is unprecedented and unnecessary. Congress should not permit it.

This amendment would eliminate this diversion from the trust fund. It would ensure that the taxes paid by airline passengers and other aviation users continue to go into the aviation trust fund.

Let me say once again that whether you take the aviation tax revenues and put them in the trust fund or put them in the general fund, it won't make any difference at all from the standpoint of the Federal deficit. We have letters to that effect from both the Budget Committee chairman and the CBO Director.

But there is an important principle involved here. That is that aviation user fees should be spent on aviation improvements. This is a principle that holds true for other trust funds as well. The money collected for those funds should be spent for the purposes for which they were collected. They should not be diverted to the general fund.

If you have any other trust funds that you care about, whether they be aviation, highway, social security or whatever, you should be concerned about the diversion provision in this bill. You should be supporting this amendment. Because if you do not you may find that there will be raids on other trust funds as well until the whole concept of a dedicated user-supported trust fund has been destroyed.

I urge my colleagues to take a careful look at what is being done here and vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this is not a very difficult issue. The issue here is that over the years the Appropriations Committee has not appropriated sufficient moneys. The result is that the authorizing committee has dipped into general funds in order to support aviation and the airways and the airports of this country.

That does not make any sense, especially when the trust fund is increasing. The Committee on Ways and Means took off the trigger this year. When we did that, in effect we raised the revenues. More money is going to come in than anybody here anticipated, so we took some of that money and paid back the general fund.

It is not complicated; it is very simple. The concept is that the users of this country ought to be paying for the cost of the airports and the airways. The Members who offer this amendment apparently do not believe that.

Mr. Chairman, what we did in the Ways and Means Committee is something that everybody in this Chamber ought to support. It is simple, and it is right.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY].

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I take the floor to strongly endorse the Anderson amendment. I think the provisions contained in the Reconciliation Act provide a terrible precedent. We have a tremendous need for investment in our infrastructure in America.

The Chicago Federal Reserve in a study indicated that during the 1950's we invested 2.2 percent of our gross national product in infrastructure, and we had a high rate of productivity growth. During the decade of the 1980's we invested four-tenths of 1 percent in infrastructure, and we have had a significant decline in productivity.

Mr. Chairman, I urge all my colleagues to insure that the funds collected for the trust fund go to the trust fund and in this case go for infrastructure development of our airport and aviation system. I strongly support the Anderson amendment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

We have heard a lot of rhetoric today about trust funds and "keeping faith with the users," and how we must protect aviation user interests.

But we have not heard from these Members about protecting another group of taxpayers—the general taxpayers—the working families of America, the single mothers, the elderly, and many others in society who cannot afford to fly that often. No one seems to care about breaching faith with the general taxpayers who have been subsidizing aviation users for the last 9 years to the tune of $5.3 billion.

I think most Members who do not follow aviation closely will be shocked to realize that aviation users have paid for only 56 percent of total FAA expenses over the last decade. For example, the general taxpayers—not aviation users—pay the bulk of the expenses for air traffic controllers or airline inspectors. That's simply not fair.

Why isn't this share higher? Because the game has been rigged in favor of the aviation users to the detriment of the less-affluent families in this country who pay into the general fund.

When the last aviation bill was passed, the Congress, the aviation community, and the administration all agreed that the users ought to pay roughly 75 percent of the FAA's costs. But, unfortunately, obscure accounting rules buried in authorizing statutes have had the effect of substantially and artificially lowering the aviation users' share of FAA expenses from 75 percent to only 56 percent.

That 19 percent difference is not cut from the FAA's budget. It is simply replaced with general fund dollars. And it adds up to an incredible subsidy—over $5.3 billion since 1982. Those aren't my figures, or even the Appropriations Committee's figures, they are the calculations of the neutral Congressional Budget Office.

As chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee, I see this inequity first hand. Every year we provide very large increases in FAA spending—up 121 percent over the last 9 years—yet in each of those years the aviation trust fund balance goes up. Why? Because the general taxpayers have paid for a large part of the FAA buildup instead of the aviation users. And that is simply not fair.

If there is any raiding going on, it is the general fund that has been raided—not the aviation trust fund.

The Ways and Means bill recognizes this fact—and stops the hemorrhage for 1 year. It's a simple straightforward provision. It retains $992 million of aviation excise tax receipts in the general fund instead of paying them into the trust fund. This is roughly equal the subsidy the general taxpayers would otherwise provide the aviation users in fiscal year 1990. The remaining $2.9 billion that is collected will flow into the trust fund as is normal course.

It is not the end of the world for the trust funds, it does not create Earth-shattering precedents. It will not bankrupt the trust fund. It will not increase airline ticket prices.

It will send a message to the authorizing committee that we expect the working men and women of this country who pay their income taxes—many of whom do not have the luxury of flying regularly—to be treated fairly. It does send a message that we want the authorizing committee to see to it that aviation users pay their fair share of FAA expenses—not more than their fair share and not less.

Mr. Chairman, although it is an over-used cliche, it is appropriate in this case—we need to get back to a "level playing field" when it comes to aviation financing. The Ways and Means bill accomplishes this for fiscal year 1990.

I strongly urge my colleagues to defeat this amendment.

Do working families fly?

Of course some do. But the latest available data from DOT shows that, in 1987, only 30 percent of all adults flew. That means 70 percent did not.

Furthermore, the income scale of an individual tracks closely with the likelihood of that individual using air transportation. The higher your income, the more likely you are to have flown. In 1987, only 17 percent of those earning under $15,000 flew. Only 27 percent of those making under $25,000 flew in 1987. By contrast, 63 percent of those earning $50,000 or more flew in 1987, and 97 percent of those earning over $50,000 have flown at least once in their lifetime.

This is common wisdom. The aviation users are the more wealthy members of our society. And the working men and women who pay into the general fund and who cannot afford to fly should not be subsidizing them.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CARR].

Mr. CARR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Anderson amendment, and I do not do so lightly. My esteemed chairman of the Subcommittee on Transportation and Appropriations laid out his reasons for opposing the amendment, but I think a lot of my colleagues know that the trust fund must remain inviolate and that this is, in fact, converting a user fee into a general tax.

Make no mistake about it, particularly for those who have read the President's lips and follow him, this is a new tax, and they will not want to support it. It takes the trust fund dedicated users fees and creates a general fund tax out of them. The trust fund is needed. We can argue, and I argue with my good friends on the Committee on Public Works and Transportation all the time, about why we have a surplus and what we ought to do with it, but I can tell my colleagues that I am united with them in opposing this particular provision of the reconciliation bill.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard some talk about why the trust fund ought to be supporting FAA operations. That has been an historical argument as well. Most of us who have supported the trust fund support it on the basis that it is a user fee for capital improvements. Most of us do not like the idea that any money is taken out of the trust fund and spent for FAA operations.

There has been over a period of time some compromises in that regard. Those compromises have been hammered out in authorization legislation, some of which I have not always agreed with, but the Committee on Public Works and Transportation in the authorization language has designated which portion of the trust fund should go to operations.

Mr. Chairman, this is an end run on that authorization, and I urge the support of the Anderson amendment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Anderson amendment. The central issue here is: What is the appropriate share between user financing and general financing, and it should be permanently resolved by the Congress.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, we are not going to resolve it today, so this is a temporary action. That is the reason I think the body should oppose the Anderson amendment.

At the moment there is a surplus in the airport and highway trust fund of over $6.5 billion. Of that, three-fourths is surplus due to the fact that the general taxpayers have paid $5.3 billion of FAA operating costs since 1982. The provisions in the reconciliation bill will reimburse general taxpayers for funds they have paid to insure safety in our skies including funds for air traffic controllers. Even after the reimbursement to the general fund, aviation users will only pay one-half of the cost of insuring safe air travel in fiscal year 1990, and it is my belief that next year there could be as much as a 15-percent increase in grants for airport improvements and funding to improve FAA facilities and equipment, and I believe that this is due to Ways and Means provision in the reconciliation bill which says that aviation users will pay a greater share of the cost.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHUSTER].

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I say to my colleagues, "If you buy the argument that we should raid the aviation trust fund to provide to pay for government safety operations, then get ready to buy the argument that we should raid the highway trust fund to pay for highway police on our highways across this country because it is just as logical an argument, and it is just a misguided argument. If you want to destroy America's transportation future, the way to do it is to raid the aviation trust fund today, and then 6 months from now raid the highway trust fund."

Mr. Chairman, we have not built a new airport in this country in over a decade, yet we have more than doubled air travel: 460 million passengers last year.

I say to my colleagues, "If you want to keep the skies safe and if you want to provide your constituents with efficient service, then let's spend this money to modernize our aviation system, spend this money on new airports, and new runways, and new terminals and new gates."

Mr. Chairman, let us not raid the aviation trust fund. Let us not break faith with the American public.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY].

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is not rocket science. Everyone understands pretty much the issues here. It is pretty clear that the aviation users should pay their fair share of FAA expenses.

Does anybody disagree with that, that the trust fund has been paid for over by the general public, people who do not fly, 56 percent of FAA costs since fiscal year 1981? No one disagrees with that. That the CBO says that the general taxpayers, as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has said, have overpaid $5.3 billion? We do not destroy the trust fund. We would like to see the trust fund used for the purpose that it was designed for, air safety. We preserve that principle.

However, Mr. Chairman, I would add that, if we vote for the Anderson amendment, what we will be doing is ignoring the fact that the air traveling public is responsible for the FAA and this trust fund.

So I ask my colleagues: Please recognize the sound principle that the trust fund should be used for this purpose, that ordinary men and women who work and who do not fly should not be paying for this. It is that simple. Vote against the Anderson amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, there are serious problems involving air safety in America, and in my judgment the Ways and Means provisions are not consistent with these problems.

Mr. Chairman, let us just look at what has happened in the last year and a half. A United DC-10 crashes over Iowa, probably caused by aging aircraft and aging engines that the FAA ought to be working on. A USAir airplane crashes just last week at LaGuardia Airport, perhaps caused by human factors in the cockpit that the FAA ought to be working on. A UTA DC-10 and a PanAm 747 are crashed as a result of terrorism, and we last week worked on problems dealing with that. A Delta L-1011 crashed at Dallas last year because of improper weather equipment riding into a thunderstorm.

Mr. Chairman, deregulation has changed the whole way we fly in this country, and the airport trust fund is our foundation, our bulwark to deal with air safety issues. The Anderson amendment is an air safety amendment. To oppose it would send a signal to our constituents who fly and who pay the bills that padding the budget deficit ledger is more important than insuring the safety of the flying public. The dollars in the Committee on Ways and Means that they proposed to divert are not even earmarked for aviation purposes so they can go to any operations in this country having nothing to do with air safety.

Now, it is bad enough that the FAA allows available trust fund monies to sit idle. It is almost criminal that that happens, but it would also be criminal for this body to altogether divert monies away from the trust fund.

I urge you, for the safety of the flying public in this country, to vote for the Anderson amendment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY].

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, let us take the emotion out of this. We are not talking with the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] and his amendment that we are not going to build more airports. He is not going to provide more safety. He is not going to do the things that the gentlemen before me were talking about. That is not the issue here.

The issue is that you cannot have it both ways. You cannot spend money out of the trust fund and spend money out of the general fund. That is basically the issue.

If you believe in user pay for the aviation system of our country, then you must defeat the Anderson amendment, because what we are talking about is fairness. What we are talking about here is putting money out of the trust fund back in and reimbursing the general taxpayer here, and that is basically the issue.

Now, the accounting is very complicated. The accounting is very difficult to explain in 2 minutes, but please consider that this is a one-time shot that the Ways and Means Committee is proposing. It is not an institutional thing that they are doing. We can address all these other problems later, but the general taxpayer has been subsidizing our aviation system, and I think that the users, those who pay taxes that go into the trust fund, ought to reimburse some of those general taxpayers' moneys.

People who do not fly have been paying for a lot of our aviation system. Some of my colleagues on the Public Works Committee claim that the aviation trust fund is being unfairly raided. I respectfully disagree. If any fund has been pillaged, it is the general fund that has been so significantly subsidizing the aviation trust fund.

The amount of funds this bill proposes to retain in the general fund is not quite $1 billion. That is approximately the amount the general taxpayers would otherwise give to the flying public for fiscal year 1990.

This proposal will not disrupt the aviation trust fund. It will still collect approximately $3 billion.

I hope my colleague will oppose the Anderson amendment. The luxury of flying and its resulting expenses should be borne by those who are fortunate enough to fly. It should not continue to burden working Americans with unfair subsidization.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER].

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, the Public Works Committee has tried over the years to get these trust funds taken off budget, because we recognize the money that is raised for these trust funds cannot be spent for purposes other than for which they are collected.

The Appropriations Committee and the Ways and Means Committee have always resisted that, and now we see why, because what is being proposed here is to divert, indeed I would say steal, $1 billion out of a trust fund that is dedicated for a specific purpose, and apply it for purposes other than the purpose for which it is collected.

Let me stress, that is not an intramural spat. This is not just a spat between the Public Works Committee and the Ways and Means Committee or the Appropriations Committee. If this amendment does not pass, it has the potential of affecting nearly every Member in the House.

Mr. Chairman, we have an enormous need to increase the capacity of our airports. A billion dollars, I assure you, will pay for a lot of runways, a lot of taxiways, a lot of airport improvements throughout this country.

Now, the fact is, Mr. Chairman, the argument that the funds should be totally financed, or the FAA should be totally financed out of the highway trust fund has been rejected in the past. What is being tried here is to make a major policy change from what we had in the past and say, "OK, we are not going to recognize the inviolability of the trust fund."

The diversion is also entirely unnecessary, as has been pointed out in the past. So you have to ask yourself, what is the intention of the authors of this amendment? Once those funds are taken out of the trust fund, we cannot be assured they are going to be spent for aviation. They say that they will be spent for aviation, but there is no guarantee that that is going to be the case. Once they are in the general revenue, they can be used for any purpose whatsoever.

Mr. Chairman, this represents a raid. It represents a change in policy that has no hearings, no consideration by the authorizing committee. It should be rejected and the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] should be approved.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, this debate is an accountant's dream. We have been tossing back and forth terminology from one side of the aisle to the other relating to the accounting of the aviation trust fund. Some Members have tried to inject into this debate the whole question of air safety. It may have some bearing on the debate, but quite honestly, I believe we are dealing more basically with an accounting question, and perhaps to get down to basics, a jurisdictional question. That is the reason it has become such a contentious issue. Let me try to put a few basic facts before you. The basics are these: Airline passengers in America pay 8 cents on every dollar that they pay for an airline ticket. The 8 cents they pay, or the 8 percent, goes into the aviation trust fund. The idea behind the fund was to use that money not only for the construction of airports, but also for the maintenance of the support services for aviation. Now, that makes sense. The passengers are paying for what they receive.

If you thought that the ticket tax, however, paid for all the expenses of maintaining the support services for U.S. aviation, I can understand why you would be upset with the idea of taking money out of that trust fund and using it for any other purpose, but the ticket tax that is collected from the passengers pays barely half the cost of keeping our aviation system modern and fully staffed.

Now, the taxpayers of this country have been subsidizing air travel from its inception. I do not have any quarrel with that. Take a look at the various modes of transportation in America. The fact is we subsidize each and every one of them, but since 1982 general taxpayers have paid into the aviation system more than $5.3 billion in subsidies, subsidies to keep air service safe and to keep it efficient.

This transfer of $1 billion from the trust fund back to the Treasury is just a payback of a part of it, less than 20 percent of it.

The question we must ask is whether that is fair or wise policy. I think it is, for the following reason:

This reconciliation bill is no picnic. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has had a very difficult time coming up with the money to deal with our deficit. I think he has come up with a fair transfer, and I think it one that we can live with. This transfer is not going to shortchange any airport construction. It is not going to shortchange air safety. It is in fact an effort to continue to have our Federal Treasury as solvent as we can get it, to keep the subsidy going toward aviation.

Many have spoken about our obligation to the aviation trust fund, but let us be fair. The aviation interests have received a generous subsidy from the Treasury. It is not unfair to ask for this transfer to deal with our serious deficit.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DEFAZIO].

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Chairman, my colleague who preceded me in the well talked about a transfer of funds, just a billion dollar transfer of funds from the aviation trust fund, $1 billion of unmet needs for air traffic safety, for airport capacity, just take the billion dollars and transfer it over somewhere into the general fund for unspecified purposes. What other trust fund will be next? What other unmet need will go unresolved by the Federal Government, the Federal highway trust fund? We are already, of course, using Social Security funds to make a deficit look smaller and borrowing the money back.

Mr. Chairman, we all fly a lot in this House. Many of us have had hair raising experiences. Think of the horror of the passengers in that minute or those seconds after the impact in midair as the plane starts to fall toward Earth.

If we take this billion dollars today and we take another billion dollars next year and we do not get the updated air traffic control system we need and we do not get the runway improvements and capacity improvements we need, it might be your plane or a loved one's plane that goes down in the future after a midair impact.

Vote "yes" on the Anderson amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. Bosco].

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Chairman, I have noticed that many of the opponents to the Anderson amendment are now saying that the accounting is complicated on this, but they can explain their case. In fact, one of the speakers just said the accounting was complicated, and he could not explain it in 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I would submit that today and in the days to come we are repealing a lot of things that the accounting was complicated on, and I would advise all of the Members that before they go off and spend airport trust funds in the general fund they had better be sure they can explain it to the American people in 2 minutes.

The fact is we ask airline ticket buyers to contribute to our airport infrastructure. We do not ask them for $1 billion that is poured into the General Treasury of the United States to be used for virtually any purpose that the Government wants it to be used for. I say that we have not built an airport in this country since 1974. We have our work cut out for us.

Use the trust fund money for trust fund purposes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

The gentleman from Oregon and the gentleman from California himself has indicated that this money that is being removed, a billion dollars, would have been used for necessary airport expenses. Could the gentleman from California enlighten me as to what the needs were that were unmet last year and how much money was in the airport trust fund last year, the year before, the year before that, the year before that?

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of California. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Chairman, one thing that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] pointed out is the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, in trying to build airports, in trying to improve the infrastructure of our country's air transportation system, has begged the Congress to take these funds off budget, but because of Gramm-Rudman and the other legerdemain that we have around here we have not been willing to expend those funds.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Reclaiming my time, the only thing to do with the trust fund is to take it off budget so somebody can use it for other purposes rather than repaying the general fund for a significant portion of the subsidy that has been supplied to the FAA which is used by the airlines.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PACKARD].

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, I cannot believe the argument of those opposing this amendment. The only argument that I have heard is that the taxpayers are now subsidizing the aviation needs of this country.

The Committee on Public Works and Transportation, and maybe others of this Congress, have called upon the Committee on Ways and Means and the Congress for years to take the aviation trust fund moneys off budget so that they can be used for aviation purposes, and aviation purposes only. That is the reason they are collected and the only reason for which they are collected.

But these committees, and the money committees and other Members of the Congress have resisted the taking of these funds off budget. They now want to take the trust funds out of the trust and spend them elsewhere.

Our committee has called for the use of these funds, much-needed funds for aviation purposes, but the money committees want to use them for other purposes. The only way they can do this is to keep them in the trust fund and then take them out into the general purposes. We cannot have it both ways. We cannot prevent the trust funds from being used for aviation purposes and then complain that the general funds have to be used to subsidize aviation purposes.

Aviation trust funds will be now, and then highway trust funds will be next, and then Social Security trust funds will follow. All trust funds would be imperiled.

Mr. Chairman, I call upon my colleagues to support the Anderson amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN].

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as a former member of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation I rise in support of the Anderson amendment. I believe, for two reasons, that it is important that we continue to target aviation tax moneys to the aviation trust fund.

First, these moneys are badly needed in order to assure that critical modernization programs move forward. The continued safety of the traveling public depends upon airport and air traffic control modernization programs funded out of the aviation trust. I would caution that when we compromise the trust, we compromise public confidence in the entire air transportation system.

Second, I believe strongly that if we allow the transfer of aviation tax moneys to the general fund we establish a dangerous precedent and we call into question the integrity of other trust funds.

If we break faith today with the aviation users who have contributed to this fund to insure a safe and efficient aviation system, would we be more likely to break faith tomorrow with those Americans whose taxes have supported the highway trust fund? Let us leave no doubt: Support the Public Works Committee amendment and preserve the integrity of the aviation trust fund.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, it would seem that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation is presenting a solid phalanx of support for the Anderson amendment.

I think it would be well for the body to consider what the Secretary of Transportation has to say on the subject. He writes to the Honorable THOMAS FOLEY in a letter that I will put into the RECORD at the appropriate time, and this is his last paragraph:

I am committed to meeting aviation capital needs. I believe that aviation users are truly dependent on the men and women of the FAA who control aircraft and maintain air traffic equipment. I ask your support of the Ways and Means Committee's effort to ensure continuation of aviation user fees. I look forward to working with you and the Committee on Ways and Means and Public Works and Transportation in the next year as we try to find more permanent solutions to these problems.

THE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION
Washington, D.C. 20590, September 26, 1989

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The House Ways and Means Committee has proposed, as part of its plan to raise $5.3 billion in revenues through reconciliation, to suspend for one year the aviation tax trigger. The trigger, which was included in aviation legislation enacted in 1987, threatens to reduce aviation revenues by $1.2 billion in 1990. The Committee is also proposing to retain about one billion dollars in aviation user fees in the general fund. That may appear to be a diversion of aviation user fees for non-aviation purposes, but, in fact, it is the only way to ensure that the fees will be used now for aviation purposes. These fees could be used by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) to pay the salaries of the people who are responsible for safety of the system, such as air traffic controllers.

We support the Committee's proposal because we strongly favor user financing of the aviation system and believe that an adequate source of dedicated revenues is critical to meeting future aviation needs.

There are many misconceptions about aviation financing and the Aviation trust Fund. Many users believe that aviation spending has not been a priority to the Administration or to the Congress. In fact, the FAA budget has more than doubled between FY 1982 and FY 1989, increasing from $3.1 billion to $6.4 billion. Capital spending alone has increased by almost 300 percent during that period. The Administration has requested $7.4 billion for FY 1990, another significant increase. Many users also believe that they have paid more in taxes than they have received in benefits. In fact, the reverse is true. Between 1982 and 1989, $20 billion was collected in trust fund revenues, but a total of $39 billion in Federal funds has been made available to the FAA.

While FAA's operating expenses, such as salaries for air traffic controllers, are an eligible use of trust fund resources, a provision in existing law limits the extent of that eligibility. By retaining a portion of the fees to be collected next year in the general fund, the Ways and Means Committee provision would fund more of FAA's critical safety personnel from aviation user fees.

I am firmly committed to meeting aviation capital needs. I also believe that avaiation users are truly dependent on the men and women of the FAA who control aircraft and maintain air traffic equipment. I ask your support of the Ways and Means Commitee's efforts to ensure continuation of aviation user fees. I look forward to working with you and the Committees on Ways and Means and Public Works and Transportation in the next year as we try to find more permanent solutions to these problems.

Sincerely,

Samuel K. Skinner.

Secretary Skinner does not support the Anderson amendment. He supports the Committee on Ways and Means. Why? It is simply not enough for the Committee on Public Works and Transportation to say, "If you had taken us off budget, we could have spent more money." Any committee in this House could spend a lot more money if we let them off the budget.

The problem is that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation has not been able to convince the appropriators to spend out of what they consider to be too large a pot. The result is that the money has piled up in there.

The Committee on Ways and Means, in response to the request of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, offered them the trigger which was supposed to stimulate more spending for capital account. It did not work, so we have the option of throwing away the trigger and letting money pile up in the account or seeing if the money would be good for aircraft safety.

The Secretary assured us that the money could be used for the FAA which was already being subsidized by the general taxpayers for the use of air travelers. That is not fair, I am told by the Department of Transportation and by the Committee on the Budget. The user benefits have exceeded user fees between 1982 and 1989 to the total of about 2 to 1. Tax receipts from the aircraft users, $20 billion; Federal spending for the FAA and safety, about $39 billion.

The Committee on Ways and Means decided, after talking to Secretary Skinner and to Director Darman, that we would take the advice of our Committee on Appropriations and the administration and provide that the money could be spent for aircraft safety.

□ 1820

The Committee on Public Works and Transportation offers us the option of putting the money back in the trust fund where it will continue not to be spent. We are offering an option to put it out there where the FAA can use it and make air travel more safe.

It seems to me that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation is valuing turf over safety, and I do not think that makes a lot of sense.

After talking to Secretary Skinner I talked again, as a member of the Budget Committee, to the Director of Management and Budget and queried him on the administration's position. He said that it was definitely a matter of great importance to him. He supported the Committee on Ways and Means' position and urged me and members of my committee, if we valued the budget process and wanted to keep aircraft safety going that we should vote against the Anderson amendment, and that is what I can report to the House on the administration's position and the position of the Committee on Ways and Means. We were looking for a way to preserve the revenues and yet to let them be used for aircraft safety. We did not need to raid anybody's trust fund.

Unfortunately, the money has piled up in the trust fund. We have done everything that people asked of us, and now we ask that Members reject the Anderson amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. ROE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me the 2 minutes and strongly rise in support of the Anderson amendment.

I would say to every Member in this House, Democrat or Republican, shame, shame, shame, because the reason that we are not able to do the infrastructure work in this country is not because the Appropriations Committee has not provided the money. We have had the opportunity there. It is called a trust fund.

Trust means to me that the money is kept in trust for the purpose intended. We voted for that, all of us did, and we voted to set up trust funds that provided the resources for the people of this country. This is not a question of shifting money around.

Fundamentally what we are coming back and saying, and hear me, we are using the trust fund to shield the deficit. Shame on Congress. Shame on Congress. Shame on Congress.

Face up to it. That is what the issue is about, and in effect here is one step somebody is trying to take at this point to say we will not do that anymore now, we will take the first step, we will take the first $1 billion and put that $1 billion into the general treasury, and tomorrow we will take the second $1 billion and put that in.

But the fact fundamentally remains that the trust funds are held in trust in the name of the people of the country, and that is the bill that Congress passed, and you are attempting to divert away the funds that the people were allocated for the purpose intended. That is the truth, and that is the issue we have to deal with.

This is the wrong time to do this. This is not a jurisdictional fight whatsoever. It simply comes back and says that the future capital of the infrastructure of this country is involved in this debate. It is not that simple, and once we start to divert those funds we break trust with the American people, and that is the reason fundamentally I support the Anderson amendment over anything else that is before us today.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER.]

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me and only want to corroborate and reiterate what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] said. This money that is being spent, No. 1, is being spent for safety, and safety on airline traffic is as important as building runways. I do not think any of us can deny that.

It is being spent for a purpose for which it was collected, which is to make the airports safer.

But second, Gramm-Rudman makes tough choices. We have to face up to that, all of us in this body, and they are not going to get easier. I for one would rather see the trust funds put off budget, and one day I believe we will do that. But they are not off budget today.

A deal was made in order to implement the budget summit agreement, a compromise, and now the Committee on Ways and Means is going to stand full force behind that compromise. It may not be totally acceptable to everyone in this body, but it is the only way we can go at this point and measure up to our responsibilities under the budget agreement.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BORSKI].

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Anderson amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join with the distinguished chairman of the Public Works Committee in support of his amendment and in support of his strong commitment to ensuring that the future of American air travel will not be held hostage by budget tricks or short-term thinking.

I would urge my colleagues to remember the purpose of a trust fund.

It is to endow a vital activity with the resources needed to ensure its future.

Diverting funds from a trust fund for immediate emergencies ensures that when the future arrives, when the rainy day comes, we will be unprepared.

This proposal would divert funds which could modernize our air traffic control system; fund the capital developments which will allow our airports to expand and better serve American travelers and businesses; and provide the maintenance which is vital to the safety and security of every traveler.

Don't be mistaken by the fact that huge surpluses have built up in the fund.

Those surpluses exist not because they are not sorely needed for our air infrastructure, but because they are victim of an administration budget trick.

Building up the airport trust fund with one set of budget tricks to keep the deficit seeming smaller and then using another budget stratagem to take the money, does not live up to the idea of a trust fund, and does not serve the public interest.

The CBO and the House Budget Committee have issued opinions stating that the added revenues from suspending the tax trigger will count toward the $5 billion no matter which fund these moneys go to.

So let's keep them where they belong, in the airport trust fund.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Anderson amendment, showing that when we already have the funds, we are still worthy of the trust which accompanies them.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA].

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, first of all I rise in very strong support of the amendment offered by our fine colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON], the chairman of our House Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

For 8 years I had the privilege of serving as the chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee for the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation. If there was anything I ever heard every Monday when Members returned to this Chamber it was, "Mineta, the plane was delayed." So we tried in 1982 and 1987 to make sure that the aviation user fees that were being collected were going to be used for safety and capacity improvement purposes. So for that reason I included in 1982 and 1987 a penalty clause to make sure that these were being used for capital improvement purposes, and second, that if 85 percent of the moneys that were appropriated or authorized under law were not being used for aviation purposes, then the aviation taxes would go down, because it makes no sense to collect taxes against the users and continue to have that aviation trust fund increase in size without having that money being used for safety and capacity purposes.

So this year we have done that. We have come to that point where the Appropriations Committee did not appropriate 85 percent, and the tax trigger takes place in January 1990.

I understand why the Committee on Ways and Means does not want to lose this revenue. But what they are doing is, by subterfuge, stealing money, putting it into the general fund by saying we will keep collecting the taxes, but the 50 percent that we would otherwise have collected we will remove from the aviation trust fund, and leave in the general fund, and to me that is not a correct way to do it.

Please support the Anderson amendment in order to keep the safety and capacity moneys for aviation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 23 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, let me just say first of all that I appreciate very much the chairman yielding me this time, and I rise with sadness to take a position of asking for a yes vote on the Anderson amendment. I am sad because in this case I clearly am disagreeing with the administration. I prefer not to disagree with the administration, although earlier today when I voted to repeal section 89, along with most of my colleagues, I recognized that the adminstration was not particularly happy with that vote either. I think there are times when we are elected as Members of the House to decide for ourselves what we think is right.

I also sympathize with the pressures on the Committee on Ways and Means and the pressures on the Appropriations Committee. The fact is that trying to meet the Gramm-Rudman target and trying to work our way toward a balanced budget is very, very difficult. I can appreciate the temptation of the aviation trust fund and the money which is sitting there, which looks like it might be available. But I think there are a couple of very key questions we have to ask.

First, we made a pact with the taxpayers when we said we were going to set up a trust fund. The whole concept of calling it a trust fund was to suggest that even though politicians are often tempted, on this particular occasion with this particular user fee they could count on us to spend it the way we promised.

How did we promise to spend it? We promised to spend it on building more airports, which we need. We promised to spend it on putting new computers in the air traffic control system, which we need.

□ 1830

We promised to spend it on advances in radars, in particular on new experimental radars that would enable us to fly aircraft in and around microbursts without crashes, which we need. And we said if you will let us raise this user fee we promise you that.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, you know what the real issue here is? It's who's going go pay for FAA operations, the people who fly or the people who don't? If my friends who support this amendment think that the general taxpayer should continue to dig into his pocket to subsidize frequent flyers, then I humbly suggest they consider their priorities.

We established the aviation trust fund to make the user pay for the cost of building, maintaining, and operating our aviation system. The general taxpayer, who gets some indirect benefit, would only pay a small portion of the expense. But over the last 8 years, the general taxpayer, the little guy who doesn't fly, has overpaid the system by more than $5 billion. Who is being taken for a ride?

Shame on the Public Works Committee gouging the little taxpayer like that; shame on you.

How much longer are we going to make the little guy foot the bill? I say its time to make the fat cats start paying their fair share.

The Anderson amendment says just the opposite. Keep the status quo, make the little guy dole out the subsidy. I don't think that's very fair. The amendment would make the little guy pay almost $1 billion more than he should for FAA operations in fiscal year 1990.

The provision in the reconciliation bill would make the aviation user pay that share. I think the choice is clear, and I urge my colleagues to do the right thing: Oppose the amendment.

I am glad to be with DANNY ROSTENSKOWSKI on this.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CLEMENT].

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of an amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the Public Works Committee, GLENN ANDERSON, to strike a provision in the Ways and Means' title that would divert almost $1 billion in aviation user taxes from the aviation trust fund to the general fund.

The Ways and Means proposal could have an adverse effect on Nashville International Airport as well as airports across the country. The aviation tax moneys which the Ways and Means proposal would place in the general fund are badly needed to meet the capital development needs funded by the airport and airway trust fund.

For instance, $2 billion a year will be required annually to continue the FAA's air traffic control modernization program. Furthermore, the FAA will need $3 billion to $3.5 billion per year just to sustain modernization projects already committed to and in the delivery pipeline.

Finally, placing aviation user taxes in the general fund is a violation of the basic principle underlying these dedicated user fees. When the aviation trust fund was established in 1970, it was a basic principle of the trust fund program that user fees collected would be spent only for the aviation programs funded out of the trust fund. The user fees were not to go into the general fund where they can be spent for any Government program. The Ways and Means proposal to place user fees in the general fund is a breach of faith with aviation users.

This is not just a budget issue. It's an issue of public safety and aviation efficiency. I urge all of my colleagues to support the Anderson amendment to ensure that aviation user fee revenues go into the trust fund.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN].

Mr. MCEWEN. I thank the chairman.

As that old philosopher Yogi Berra said, "This is the most unheard thing I have ever heard of."

I do not know how you do this with a straight face. This is a $900 million pickpocket. This is flat-out stealing. This comes in and says we are going to take money out of the trust fund and use it for food stamps and there is no guarantee that it will not be used for that.

You remember when Chairman Jim Howard stood on this floor on a motion to recommit and begged the House to use that money for construction of airports. Not one single airport has been built in 15 years, only one runway in the last 10; the traveling public has doubled air transportation in the last 10 years and now because we have not spent it they are going to use it for other purposes.

Shame on you.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, the budget summit has nothing to do with this issue. It did not address this at all. The transfer does not deal with the deficit.

Leaving the money in the aviation trust fund accomplishes everything Ways and Means needs to do. They get credit for a billion dollars. Why play this little charade, this little game of transferring money around? There is no assurance in what the Ways and Means Committee has done that one penny of this money is going to be spent or airport improvements, not a single one.

The issue inside these walls is committee jurisdiction; I want to tell you, my friends, the issue outside this Chamber is airport improvements, building airports, making the air traffic control system safe. Keeping the $900 million in the trust fund will build airports, will keep aviation safe, it will put air traffic control equipment in place to cover the radar that we need at airports. We need runway extensions, runway resurfacing and crosswind runways and parking aprons. Putting this money in the general fund is not going to build them.

There are $7 billion worth of airport improvement projects pending with the FAA right now, a whole list of them which came down here. If you have an airport in your district it is in this list right here.

If you want to go back home and explain to the people why you put money into the general fund and took it out of the aviation trust fund, come and take a look at this stack, $3.1 billion worth of projects right here.

You are going to take it out of your future; you are cheating yourself; you are cheating air travelers. Yes, there is a provision in law that says some of the money from the aviation tax could be used for operation and maintenance, after the law has been complied with, after the amount authorized for airport improvements and facilities and improvements have been spent for the purposes for which intended.

Spend those moneys; then what is left over can be spent on operation and maintenance.

Why is Secretary Skinner supporting the Ways and Means Committee? Simply because the Office of Management and Budget told him to do so. His heart is not there, believe me. Your heart should not be there either.

Vote for the Public Works Committee, vote for the Anderson amendment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Anderson amendment.

Members of Congress are probably among the most frequent flyers and users of the National aviation system. Those of us who fly to and from our districts each week are well aware of the agitation and frustration of air travel. There is an obvious need for improvements to the air travel system. And those improvements need to be financed. The critical financing issue is: Who should pay—general taxpayers or aviation users? These issues have been the subject of congressional debate for many years. Throughout all the debate, one message is clear—our airports and our entire airway system need funding, and a reduction in aviation taxes will not get us any closer to meeting these essential needs.

The Ways and Means Committee's provision in the reconciliation bill to which Mr. ANDERSON objects, is not intended to permanently resolve the issue of the $6 billion trust fund surplus. Rather we have attempted to provide an incentive for increased aviation spending. The reconciliation bill provides for a 1-year suspension in the tax trigger and allows the general fund to retain a portion of the aviation tax revenues with the expectation that such action will result in increased trust fund spending in fiscal year 1990. The provision responds to the concerns raised that aviation users, who finance only 50 percent of the FAA budget, should pay a greater share of the costs of FAA operations. Adoption of this provision in the reconciliation bill encouraged the Committee on Appropriations to report legislation which will increase spending for our airports and FAA facilities by close to 15 percent in fiscal year 1990. Even after the general fund is reimbursed with a portion of the trust fund revenues, American taxpayers will still support close to 30 percent of the FAA budget.

Finally, I want to remind you of what is not included in the Ways and Means Committee's reconciliation bill. We have not extended the aviation-related excise taxes past their scheduled 1990 expiration. This was done so that Congress could find a more permanent solution next year to the needs of our Nation's aviation system.

Along with the leadership of the Appropriations Committee and the administration, I strongly urge my colleagues to oppose the Anderson amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, let me emphasize the following: first, the diversion of the trust fund money to the general fund is wrong. It is bad public policy; it is counterproductive; it puts our airways at a greater peril; it jeopardizes aviation projects; it will make airport congestion a common occurence; and it is a threat to Social Security and other user-fee programs. I urge an aye vote on my amendment.

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the Anderson amendment.

As a pilot myself—and a strong supporter of aviation—I have long been concerned that the current on-budget position of the aviation trust fund would cause a temptation to dip into the trust fund. Sure enough, my worst fears have been realized.

This bill would divert almost $1 billion from the aviation trust fund to the general fund.

I am strongly opposed to this action. This notion threatens the basic concept of the aviation trust fund, and therefore all of our Nation's trust funds.

Even more important, this would be a breach of faith with millions of aviation users.

Yes we must balance the budget. However, we must not balance the budget by going back on past promises.

Everytime an American buys a plane ticket or flies his own plane, he or she pays into this trust fund through an excise tax which is meant to be used only for airport improvement and safety. This money should be spent this way, and needs to be spent this way.

If we take the trust fund off-budget, we can be assured that this money will be spent for the safety and welfare of the flying public.

These funds were meant to benefit the flying public who contributed the money—they were not meant to be just another way of hiding the true deficit.

In addition, what kind of precedent are we setting? We currently have several trust funds which are on-budget. If we start dipping into one, who is to say we must leave others, such as the Social Security trust fund alone?

Simply put, this limited amount of sleight of hand budget reduction is not worth the amount of trust that the public will lose in their Government. It's picking the pocket of the aircraft user. I heard today that there is a surplus in the trust account. This is fallicious if the trust fund was used properly—commercial and general aviators would be safer today.

Again, I congratulate the gentleman, Mr. ANDERSON, chairman of the Public Works Committee for offering this bipartisan amendment and I strongly urge its adoption.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON and to protect the integrity of user fee financing. Diverting almost $1 billion from the airport and airway trust fund into the Treasury's general revenue fund is a breach of contract faith with the aviation passengers and pilots who have been paying into the fund since 1970. Further, it also sets a dangerous precedent that could lead to damaging the integrity of other user funded trust funds such as the highway trust fund.

Every day the need for continuing improvements in air traffic and airport safety becomes more apparent and more critical. The taxes that aviation users pay into the trust fund are dedicated to improving and modernizing the air transportation system. If air travel is to remain safe, the FAA is going to have to spend billions of dollars over the next 10 years on improvements to airports and air traffic control systems. The money to pay for these improvements must not come out of the pockets of the American taxpayer. Instead, they should be paid for by those who will benefit from them—the aviation user. In order to meet these needs, the airport and airway trust fund must remain healthy and intact.

Almost 250 of our colleagues have joined me in cosponsoring House Resolution 41, expressing the sense of Congress that Federal gasoline taxes should not be raised in order to reduce the Federal deficit. I ask all of my colleagues who support that resolution to look very carefully at this proposed diversion of funds. Only aviation users pay into the aviation trust fund, and no one group of Americans should bear an unfair tax burden in the national effort to reduce the dangerous Federal deficit. I urge my colleagues to support Mr. ANDERSON's amendment, and to keep the trust in the airport and airway trust fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 305, noes 116, not voting 11, as follows:

□ 1900

Mr. TRAXLER changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. RAHALL changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the budget reconciliation bill for fiscal year 1990—except for its provisions on capital gains rates. I urge the incorporation of the Democratic alternative into the legislation before us.

Let me first leave aside the capital gains provisions and comment on the bulk of the budget reconciliation bill. It would reduce the Federal budget deficit in constructive, responsible ways.

The Ways and Means Committee was directed by the Budget Committee to draw up legislation that would narrow the deficit by $5.3 billion. That aim was set up in the budget agreement between the White House and the Congress last April. They worked out this goal as a way of reducing the Federal budget deficit.

Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI and the Ways and Means Committee succeeded in meeting this goal.

In addition, the budget reconciliation package contains several important and useful improvements of the tax law. Among these are a child care package; a compromise on the Medicare catastrophic health coverage program; and repeal of the section 89 antidiscrimination rules that govern fringe benefit plans.

It also includes a proposal to simplify the corporate minimum tax; a permanent extension of the 3-percent Federal excise tax on telephone bills; accelerated collection of the 8-percent Federal excise tax on airline tickets; and new restrictions on real estate owners' practice of exchanging properties in no-cash deals that are not now subject to tax.

The reconciliation package also would extend five temporary tax provisions, and make three others permanent.

They include a provision allowing employees to exclude from their taxable income up to $5,250 in educational assistance provided by their employer.

There is a 2-year extension of the targeted-jobs tax credit for employers who hire individuals in centain targeted groups.

There is an extension of the authority for State and local governments to issue tax-exempt mortgage bonds and mortgage credit certificates, and to issue small-issue manufacturing bonds.

Also, the legislation would make permanent the 20-percent tax credit for increases in research expenditures.

I would like to expand on the impact that the reconciliation package woud have on health care. Historically, reconciliation and health care policy have shared a strong link. This year, that tradition continues with the Ways and Means Committee making several changes in Medicare policy on hospitals and physician payments.

Under Medicare part A, the hospital portion of the program, the committee proposed savings that can be achieved with slight reductions of the inflation update factor. Hospitals located in innercity or rural areas, as well as those that serve a disproportionately large share of indigent patients, would enjoy an increased adjusted inflation rate.

Medicare part B—the part that covers physicians and outpatient care—was closely examined and revamped. In particular, the reconciliation package includes modifications that would significantly change the way physicians are reimbursed.

Drawing from the work of the well-respected Physician Payment Review Commission, the Ways and Means Committee approved replacing the current customary, prevailing and reasonable reimbursement system with resource-based relative value scale. In addition to establishing a new fee schedule, the reconciliation package includes limits on extra billings by physicians along with expenditure targets that are designed to prevent physicians from increasing the volume of their service.

In July of last year, Medicare expanded benefits to include coverage for catastrophic expenses. The financing of the new benefits proved to be extremely controversial. In response to the opponents of the expansion, the Ways and Means Committee went back and reworked the original plan.

The resulting reform would reduce supplemental premium rates by one-half and allow enrollees to opt out of the physician and outpatient benefits. The reduced supplemental premium rates would provide substantial relief to middle-class retirees.

The committee considered and rejected a number of alternatives to the supplemental premium. Alternatives included increasing the FICA tax rate for employers and employees, increased tobacco and alcohol taxes, and requirements that State and local employees should pay the Medicare portion of the FICA tax.

The committee also considered and rejected outright repeal of the program. Repeal would not only have denied necessary benefits to Medicare users—it also would have increased the deficit by an estimated $5 billion in the next fiscal year.

In the end, the health care provisions are a solid part of the total.

The greatest flaw in the budget reconciliation package as it exists now is the provision to reduce the capital gains rate.

The Jenkins plan would allow the exclusion of 30 percent of a capital gain from taxable income, and it would apply to assets held for longer than a year and disposed of between September 14 of this year and the end of 1991.

I am opposed to it, primarily for two reasons.

The first is its distributional effects. It would give disproportionate benefits to upper income taxpayers. Those with incomes over $100,000 would receive 80 percent of the tax savings from reducing the capital gains rate.

The second is its effect on the budget deficit. The Joint Committee on Taxation projects that in the short term, it could raise some revenue and reduce the deficit slightly. But beginning in 1993, it would produce revenue losses of $5 billion per year. This contrasts dramatically with the Democratic alternative, which would be revenue-neutral through 1994.

Fortunately, the Democratic leadership has drafted an excellent alternative.

It would strike the Jenkins proposal. Instead, it would create a 28-percent maximum rate on capital gains. It would expand IRA's so that everyone who is not now eligible for fully deductible IRA's would be able to deduct 50 percent of their IRA contributions. And it would eliminate the 33-percent bubble, which was certainly one of the oddest features of the 1986 Tax Reform Act.

When that bill was passed, it provided that the top rate would rise from 28 percent to 33 percent as middle-income taxpayers became more affluent, but it would drop back to 28 percent on incomes that were still higher.

The dollar figures were indexed to account for inflation—so the way it stands now, a family of four pays 33 percent on taxable income beyond $74,850 and continues doing so on each additional dollar until income exceeds $200,120. But each additional dollar after that is taxed at 28 percent.

The Democratic leadership plan would eliminate that bubble. It would replace it with a third tax bracket with an explicit 33-percent rate on incomes in excess of the bubble.

The budget reconciliation package is, with one glaring exception, a carefully crafted, well-balanced piece of legislation that would build in useful ways on the foundations set out in the 1986 Tax Reform Act, and it would reduce the Federal budget deficit.

The Democratic alternative would eliminate the only great flaw in the budget reconciliation package—the capital gains reduction proposal—and would also give much-needed tax relief to America's middle class by expanding IRA's.

Taken in tandem, these measures would be very good for the country and the economy. I urge my colleagues to support both of them.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the Ways and Means Committee for raising the outside earnings limitation for Social Security recipients. Changing the earnings test is fair and makes good economic sense. The legislation proposed under budget reconciliation, however, does not go far enough in rectifying this injustice against seniors who desire to work but are penalized for doing so. When seniors are taxed $1 for every $2 earned under current limitations, we deprive ourselves from added tax revenue and endowing our older Americans with a sense that they can still be a contributing member of this society. The proposed limitation does not go far enough in fulfilling the purpose of Social Security as a supplemental retirement pension.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, I have been working for an elimination of the outside earnings limitation for a number of years. The earnings limitation originated with every good intention. Social Security is a partial retirement program meant to cushion a senior's lost earnings. The earnings limitation encouraged senior workers to fully retire, thereby making room for younger workers, at a time when 50 workers were supporting every beneficiary. Although the Social Security Program is still a partial retirement plan, one quarter of all retired people depend on Social Security for 90 percent of their income. In addition, demographics have changed, leaving only three workers to support each beneficiary.

The earnings limitation imposes a great burden on those older Americans with the greatest need—those who have had a career of low earnings and who did not qualify for employer pensions. Many seniors need extra money to supplement their Social Security benefits. Others may simply want to continue working because they want to keep busy. The earnings limitation almost forces these people into full retirement. Let me suggest that the earnings limitation is one of the few remaining—though indirect—mandatory retirement policies imposed by the Federal Government. And this policy affects a significant number of elderly. Last year, 1 million people had their benefits reduced because of the test; 1 million lost their benefits entirely; and labor economists estimate that the test deters another 1 million from working. This, at the same time analysts predict a labor shortage in the 1990's.

Social Security is not a welfare program. And yet, we treat it that way with the earnings test. Under a pension, an individual gets a specific amount that does not change because of other activities or income. Under Social Security, benefits are reduced for those who planned well or want to keep working. I think we are sending the wrong message to today's workers. We say: Plan ahead; Social Security is a partial retirement plan. And yet our policies say: Don't plan ahead; rely totally on Social Security. We must not lock our elderly into one retirement plan of questionable solvency. We must give them incentives to save, and repeal the disincentives to earn.

Eliminating the earnings test makes sense for senior citizens and for Social Security. According to Social Security actuaries, eliminating the earnings test, in addition to planned changes in the delayed retirement credit, would actually produce a long-term savings to the trust funds. It is difficult to estimate the cost in the short term, as it is uncertain how many elderly would return to the workforce, resulting in more revenues from Federal income taxes, payroll taxes, and taxation of benefits. But one thing is certain: Elimination of the earnings test will not hurt the trust funds in the long or short term. Benefits will not be affected and the solvency of the trust funds will remain strong.

Mr. Chairman, let us work to eliminate this restriction on older Americans for their sake and for the good of the economy. The proposed increase on earnings limitation is not nearly the level which is necessary.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. FEIGHAN] having assumed the chair, Mr. MAVROULES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3299) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1990, had come to no resolution thereon.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, because of a serious illness in my family, I requested and received a leave of absence so that I could return to California, September 27.

Had I been present during the debate and votes on amendments to H.R. 3299, the Budget Reconciliation Act, I would have voted "aye" on the Roukema amendment (Roll No. 249), to strike the Visclosky amendment. As a cosponsor of H.R. 634, I would have voted "aye" on the Dorgan amendment (Roll No. 250), to completely eliminate section 89 from the Tax Code. And in support of airport improvement and aviation safety, I would have voted "aye" on the Anderson amendment (Roll No. 251), to protect the integrity of the aviation trust fund.

HOPE'S ONLY MESSENGER

(Mr. VALENTINE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my gratification to Burroughs Wellcome Co., to make its anti-AIDS drug, known as AZT or retrovir, more accessible to AIDS victims.

More than 90,000 Americans have been diagnosed with AIDS and 50,000 have died of it. The Center for Disease Control estimates that between 750,000 and 1.5 million Americans are infected with the virus. This disease, which is so infectious and fatal, has baffled scientists since its discovery. There is no known cure, but thanks to Burroughs Wellcome, there is a treatment.

Burroughs Wellcome, which is a research-based pharmaceutical company located in the Second Congressional District of North Carolina, has been in the forefront of AIDS research from the beginning. The company began studying AZT as a potential human antibacterial agent in 1981, before AIDS was even identified. In the summer of 1984, the drug company began an AIDS research program to find chemical compounds that would be effective against the disease. By the next year, AZT had been identified as a possible treatment for AIDS, and Burroughs Wellcome began a collaborative study to assess AZT's safety and tolerance in humans.

When the drug was first found to be effective in September 1986, the company provided AZT, free of charge to 5,000 patients through a treatment program for a 6-month period. Since then Burroughs Wellcome has given away from one-third to one-fourth of the amount of AZT—totaling about 1 ton—that it manufactures each year. To make the drug even more available to AIDS patients, in 1987 the company lowered its price by 20 percent. Just last week it lowered the price by 20 percent again.

Mr. Speaker, Burroughs Wellcome has made a huge commitment, both in research hours and dollars, to the fight against AIDS. All available evidence that I have seen shows that the company has gone to great lengths to make the drug as available to as many AIDS patients as possible.

I understand that there is a move to force the company to reduce its price even further and to disregard the company's need to retain money for future research costs.

There are even some talking about the drastic step of overriding the company's patents. This would certainly have a serious and negative effect on pharmaceutical research and, in the long term, could cost many lives.

I submit an editorial from the Durham Morning Herald to be included in the RECORD. This editorial sets forth the issues clearly. I commend it to your attention.

[From the Durham (NC) Morning Herald, Sept. 21, 1989]

HOPE'S ONLY MESSENGER

Burroughs Wellcome Co. has lowered by 20 percent the price of its drug to combat the AIDS virus, which is indeed good news for people who have the life-threatening disease or are susceptible to it.

While recent campaigns against Burroughs Wellcome may have had a role in the timing of the price decrease, we suspect that the situation is similar to what it was in 1987, when Burroughs Wellcome lowered its price by 20 percent. Increased sales, ability to acquire necessary ingredients at lower cost and more efficient manufacturing allowed both decreases without requiring the company to jeopardize its financial base.

With the added approval of AZT for use in treating people who carry the AIDS virus but have not suffered the effects of the disease, Burroughs Wellcome now faces the opportunity to have enormously expanded sales. Perhaps, as production of AZT continues, the price can be reduced further. This is the way market drives costs of almost any product.

But there are pressures on Burroughs Wellcome to use another model. The people who oppose the high cost of AZT are now saying that Burroughs Wellcome has a responsibility to reduce the cost without regard to the company's need to maintain profitability and a high level of research. This argument suggests that Burroughs Wellcome's social responsibility is greater than its economic vitality. It ignores the principle that social responsibility is dependent on economic vitality.

Even lawyers for the Public Health Service and congressional committees are considering the draconian step of using an 80-year-old law in which government could ignore Burroughs Wellcome's patent rights and have the drug manufactured at a lower cost by another company.

For drug companies and other industries, that would be a virtual declaration of war by the government. Patents are rights that should be inviolable. The chilling effect of transgressing that right would not reduce drug or product costs; rather, it would chase research and manufacturing to areas of the world where the companies could create and manufacture products without fear that their rights would be stolen. Patent violation by the government could virtually destroy the U.S. drug industry and, in turn, be a devastating blow to patients.

It should be kept in mind that Burroughs Wellcome has a corporate policy that is exceptionally charitable. Well over 10 percent of the company's profits are distributed to charity. Organizations concerned about the welfare of AIDS patients are entitled to seek some of those charitable gifts.

In the meantime, Burroughs Wellcome has three responsibilities: 1) not to overprice AZT just to gain unconscionable profits and 2) to continue to invest in research for drugs that might be even more effective than AZT and 3) to ensure that their stockholders, the risk-takers, get a reasonable return from their investments. Burroughs Wellcome should not become the scapegoat. It did not create the AIDS epidemic. So far, it has provided the best hope to thousands of patients who are able to live nearly normal lives with AIDS.

It should be unthinkable that government would even consider destroying the messengers of that hope.

BANNING DRIFTNETTING IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC

(Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues the progress that is being made in the fight against driftnetting—the practice of marine ecocide on the high seas—in the Pacific region.

Last week it was reported in the New York Times (Wednesday, September 20, 1989, edition) that Japan, one of two countries that presently persists in raiding the waters of the South Pacific by driftnetting, has agreed to reduce by two-thirds, the size of the driftnet fleet deployed last season. This is indeed encouraging news, especially when viewed against the recalcitrance Japan initially exhibited, along with Taiwan, when meeting this summer with the Forum Fishery Agency [FFA] and Pacific regional officials.

The FFA and the South Pacific Forum, an organization representing the 15 nations of the Pacific region in July this year issued the "Tarawa Declaration," which calls for an immediate elimination and ban of driftnet fishing in the region. Despite the international outcry that this ecologically destructive fishing practice has raised—especially with regard to the threatened decimation of the valuable albacore fishery, the lifeblood of many South Pacific economies—Japan and Taiwan have indicated their intention to ignore the driftnet ban and to continue pillaging the marine resources of the Pacific region.

Japan's recently announced action to reduce its driftnet fleet is to be commended as a step in the right direction. To constitute an act of real substance, however, there must be guarantees that those Japanese vessels allowed to fish, be limited also in the length of driftnets employed. The nets routinely used in the South Pacific have been up to 30 miles in length and 30 feet in depth. Reports have documented, however, that driftnets extending 60-70 miles or longer may have been employed on occasion. Obviously, limitation of the number of driftnet boats is meaningless if there is no restriction on the length of the nets employed. What is to stop a crew from fishing a curtain of death stretching 100 miles? Japan, if she is indeed acting in good faith in the Pacific, must also make assurances about driftnet length restrictions.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud Japan's decision, although she ultimately should stop driftnetting altogether. I also call on the nation of Taiwan, which deploys the vast majority of the driftnet fishing vessels in the South Pacific, to follow Japan's lead in reducing her fleet size and restricting net length.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge my colleagues to support legislation to be introduced very shortly that will bring about a timely elimination of driftnetting—a most inhumane method of fishing that is indiscriminately destroying the marine resources of the Pacific region, and potentially other areas of the world as well.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the New York Times article to be made part of the RECORD.

[From the New York Times, Sept. 20, 1989]

JAPAN TO LIMIT SHIPS WITH HUGE NETS

(By David E. Sanger)

TOKYO, Sept. 19.—Under pressure from the Western allies and South Pacific nations, Japan said today that it would cut by two-thirds the number of fishing boats permitted to deploy giant drift nets that sweep up large amounts of ocean life, including sea birds, seals and dolphins.

The action was Japan's first major concession in an increasingly bitter international dispute over the use of the nets, which have become a favorite tool of Japanese fishing fleets. Environmentalists, scientists and fishermen with small businesses have contended that the 30-mile-long nets devastate some species and threaten the food chain in the deep ocean.

Two months ago, 15 nations in the South Pacific demanded that Japan and Taiwan cease the practice, saying it was "indiscriminate, irresponsible and destructive."

Japan's action seems unlikely to end sharp criticism of its fishing practices and accusations that it is slow to act on environmental issues. Japanese officials said today that they would not decide whether to ban the nets until a long study of the effect of theirs is completed.

BAN ON IVORY IMPORTS

Nonetheless, starting in December, the beginning of the fishing season, Japanese officials said they would limit the number of boats using the nets in the South Pacific to 20. That is about the number sent out in 1987. Last year, the drift-net fleet swelled to more than 60 boats. By some accounts, those boats caught 10,000 tons of tuna, or twice as much as New Zealand caught and 20 times more than Australia.

Acting on another major environmental issue, Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry said that starting Wednesday, it would ban imports of virtually all types of ivory. Japan announced sharp restrictions on ivory imports in June, but officials said they had evidence of a huge flow of ivory into the country in the days before the restrictions went into effect.

In the days leading up to the new restrictions, 20 to 30 tons of ivory was skipped into Japan, mostly from Hong Kong, according to officials at the ministry. Japan has imported 100 tons of ivory this year, for use in products ranging from signature stamps to piano keyboards. One hundred tons were imported in all of 1988, and officials said they feared the number would rise further if they did not take quick action.

Under Japan's three-month-old rules, imports directly from African countries are still permitted, though not from third countries. The new rules ban even direct imports.

THREAT TO BIRDS AND SEA MAMMALS

Drift nets have become increasingly popular among Japan's fishermen—along with those from South Korea and Taiwan—because they can trap a large amount of fish with relatively small fishing crews. The nets are cast in the evening when fish rise to the surface. The nets sometimes stretch more than twice the length of the island of Manhattan and as deep as 40 feet. When they are retrieved in the morning, fishing experts say, birds and sea mammals are often caught in the fine mesh and die trying to escape. Others are mutilated or killed by fishermen trying to untangle them from the nets.

As a result, some in the United States have threatened to invoke a 1987 law that would put an embargo on the fishery products of Japan if drift netting continued unabated.

The Japanese Government has insisted that the damage caused by the drift nets has yet to be proved.

U.S. SAYS PROTESTS WILL CONTINUE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—American officials welcomed Japan's announcement today but said American protests against Japanese drift netting would continue.

"It's a positive step," a State Department official said. "But it's not going to ease opposition on drift netting. People are really incensed about this thing."

The official said the United States was concerned primarily with Japanese drift netting in the North Pacific and had limited its activity in the South Pacific to supporting protests by South Pacific nations.

THE PROPOSED REDUCTION IN THE CAPITAL GAINS TAX RATE

(Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the opponents of this reduction who say that this is an extension of so-called Reaganomics, that we are now in our 82d straight month of economic expansion due mostly to tax cuts instituted in the early 1980's. And it is not just the rich who are enjoying the fruits of lower unemployment and low inflation. All Americans, and especially the middle class, benefit from economic growth. And the reason we have this sustained growth is simple: we have lowered taxes.

Small businesses also need this reduction in the capital gains rate. They need to attract capital investments into small, risky ventures and need partial relief when the business is closed or sold. A capital gains differential, particularly one with long holding periods and an adjustment for inflation, helps to attract capital for small firms which, in turn, creates more jobs and sustains the economic expansion in this country.

Now my question to my liberal colleagues is this: Why would you want once again to increase taxes rather than cut them when history has shown that lower taxes promote economic growth and high taxes stunt it? I think this is a question you should address now, so that the American people know once and for all which philosophy favors prosperity and which philosophy does not.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter at this point in the RECORD an editorial by Bill Wild of the Dayton Daily News. Mr. Wild quite aptly points out that it is not the rich that benefit from a capital gains cut, but people who make less than $50,000 a year. He goes on to quote Alan Reynolds, chief economist for Polyeconomics, who says that if we lowered the rate even further, to say, 15 percent, we would shave at least $20 billion or more of the deficit in the "out" years.

It is these statistics from which opponents of the capital gains reduction can run, but from which they cannot hide. Reducing this tax helps all Americans and I urge my colleagues to support continued economic growth in this country and vote for the Jenkins/Archer capital gains reduction.

Mr. Speaker, I include with my remarks an editorial from the Dayton (OH) Daily News of September 20, 1989, as follows:

[From the Dayton Daily News, Sept. 20, 1989]

"SOAK THE RICH" PITCH SENDING DEMOCRATS TO THE SHOWERS

Those rich senior citizens who were once thought easy pickings for an unfair "catastrophic health care" tax are banging congressional dunderheads in Washington just as the debate heats up over lowering the capital gains tax, what the Democrats call "a tax break for the rich."

Don't the Democrats and their media mouthpieces ever learn?

Most of the senior citizens who are livid over the catastrophic health care surtax are also veterans of the capital gains wringer. They know what it means for federal and state tax collectors to reward a lifetime of frugality and fiscal responsibility with a bill for the "government's share" of your "good fortune."

To their credit, some Democrats in Congress are making it possible to even have the capital gains debate. But they are the naughty Democrats, the boll weevils of old, who sneak around helping the rich when other Democrats are loyally spending money on new schemes to help the poor.

Such schemes used to be called patronage, but times change.

It ought not to be hard for politicians—even in Washington—to understand the pernicious relationship between their catastrophic health care mistake last year and their current resistance to a lower capital gains tax. Most Republicians who were a party to the health care gaffe have admitted that they and President Reagan were wrong. Some Democrats are coming around to that slowly, but most can't understand that their capital gains stance is a kick in the shins to the same constituency.

Something like a fifth of the dollar volume of capital gains realized by taxpayers annually is to people with ordinary incomes of under $10,000. That, at least, is the best guess of former Treasury Assistant Secretary Paul Craig Roberts, now a syndicated columnist. In fact, almost half of the gains go to all families with incomes no higher than $50,000 a year.

That is a major non-rich constituency that may not feel put-upon all at once like those taxed for catastrophic health care, but still understands the unfairness of it all when selling a small business or a long-time residence or cashing in mutual fund investments from many years. The same constituency may also be chafing under another tax burden—the confiscatory taxes senior retirees pay if they earn more than $8,880 in salary while drawing Social Security.

When you come right down to it, even the best income statistics are distorted by the fact that someone in the $100,000 to $150,000 income bracket may actually be in it only that year—because of capital gains. One year you're "rich" according to the Democrats. The next year you're back to church mouse status.

It isn't my job to convert the Democratic leadership in Washington to my view, but you'd think the rank-and-file would be sending a message. If so, not many leaders are hearing it. The official Democratic position is that the Reagan tax cuts were "bad" and "caused the deficit." Therefore, what must be "good" would be higher taxes to "balance the budget." But there is hardly anyone who believes that the budget will be balanced if we increase taxes to give Congress more money to play with.

Republicans have been successful by adopting a populist agenda which says, in effect, if the government won't discipline itself to balance the budget, at least we should help out ordinary citizens by cutting taxes. Government revenues at every level have benefited from the resulting prosperity. Every segment of society has benefited too, but you'd never know it by listening to Democrats. They are on a crusade against "the rich" and seem to think that a lovely little class war would be just wonderful.

But even as they have blathered about "rich investors," a consensus has been forming on the common sense of a capital gains tax at a substantially lower rate than ordinary income taxes—in fact, maybe even no capital gains tax at all as in a number of other major industrial nations. Here's why.

Norman B. Ture of the Institute for Research on the Economics of Taxation has preached that a "capital gain" is an asset's increase in market value. Such assets are purchased largely with after-tax income. Then what the asset produces, such as stock dividends, is taxed as realized. "Taxing the capital gain that is realized when the asset is sold," he said, "amounts to adding a layer of income tax on the same income."

A relatively high capital gains tax discourages venture capital investments and interest in growth stocks. It encourages substitutions of debt for equity to take advantage of tax write-offs and the like. This is one reason for leveraged buyouts and junk bonds. In short, high capital gains taxes help encourage the kind of economic behavior that is most deplored by those who adamantly oppose a lower tax.

Capital losses in ordinary income are limited to $3,000, an obvious unfairness when gains can be taxed to infinity. Taking risks is penalized, but "risk capital" is what a dynamic economy most needs.

Alan Reynolds, chief economist for Polyeconomics, Inc., of Morristown, N.J., believes that there are many "dynamic effects" from a capital gains tax cut that haven't been effectively analyzed. In addition to direct benefits for a wide range of citizens who hardly qualify as the idle rich, there would be a move away from tax-exempt bonds and housing and toward investment activities generating jobs and new tax revenues. In fact, he predicts a 15 percent capital gains rate would "shave at least $20 billion from the federal deficit, and even more in later years."

Maybe. Maybe not. But everything except the politics of envy points toward giving such tax experiments a chance and ending such absurdities as trying to tell senior citizens that higher taxes will make them feel better.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the subject of the special order today by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FEIGHAN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

REASSIGNMENT OF SPECIAL ORDER TIME

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON] may be permitted to take the special order of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON ECONOMIC AND COMMERCIAL LAW OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO SIT DURING 5-MINUTE RULE TOMORROW

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Economic and Commercial Law of the Committee on the Judiciary may be permitted to sit tomorrow while the House is reading under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

FHA IS IN TROUBLE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, often when we have a chance to take out these special orders it is to talk about something that is thrilling, of interest to all of us, and, more often than not, it seems to be good news which people have. However, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, this evening I have some rather sad news to convey in my very brief 5 minutes.

Today, Mr. Speaker, another bombshell landed on the steps of the U.S. Congress. It is a financial bombshell like those that we have been receiving on a semiconsistent basis over the past several years.

In testimony this morning before the Senate Subcommittee on Housing and Urban Affairs the General Accounting Office presented its results of a long-awaited financial audit of the FHA for 1988.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a strong proponent of FHA over the years. I have supported our goal of making it permanent. I coauthored an amendment along with two of my California colleagues on the other side of the aisle, one in the Senate, to increase the high cost area from $90,000 to $101,250 because I thought that was important at the time, but I am very saddened to hear of the news which came out today.

According to the GAO the FHA's financial statement shows losses of $4.2 billion in fiscal year 1988. That is right; $4.2 billion is the size of FHA's loss.

The audit also found that the Government's equity has sunk to a deficit; I repeat, a deficit, Mr. Speaker, of $2.9 billion at the end of the fiscal year.

The news of FHA's financial condition comes only 2 months after Congress enacted an unprecedented $160 billion bailout of another financial insurance fund, that of course being the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

What is even more troubling about this though, Mr. Speaker, is that Congress is close to enacting legislation that could actually exacerbate FHA's situation and move it further in the direction of demise.

Last week our colleagues in the other body voted to increase from $101,250 to almost $125,000 the ceiling on mortgages insured by the FHA in high cost areas. This increase was included, Mr. Speaker, as part of the fiscal year 1990 VA, HUD, and independent agencies appropriation bill.

Mr. Speaker, if the Senate amendment becomes law, it could have serious repercussions on the financial solvency of FHA, as I was saying. Given the program's low-down-payment requirements and the riskier nature, the loan portfolio, the FHA will be exposed to substantially greater loses in the future.

Even without an increase in the loan limits, Mr. Speaker, FHA's financial problems are expected to get worse. According to GAO, and I quote, "Numerous investigations of alleged fraud, embezzlement, and other illegal acts are currently underway and it is not possible to determine the extent of losses that could ultimately be sustained by FHA as a result of these alleged improprieties."

The GAO, Mr. Speaker, went on to say, and I quote, "Basic management weaknesses must be corrected if future losses are to be brought under control."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is imprudent to put billions of additional tax dollars at risk by expanding FHA before the agency's financial and management problems are fully addressed.

□ 1910

Millions of low- and moderate-income Americans depend on FHA to provide mortgage financing that is not available in the conventional mortgage market. The FHA Program is too important to allow these serious financial problems to be ignored.

Mr. Speaker, I again want to reiterate my support for the program, but we have got to move ahead with it in a very careful way.

Mr. Speaker, I will insert in the RECORD at this point an article from yesterday's Wall Street Journal which suggests further reasons why an increase in those FHA loan limits would be a mistake at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the Chair and my colleagues for listening to this. I hope next time I take out a special order it will be to provide better news to our colleagues.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Sept. 26, 1989]

THE HOUSING MARKET IS A BIGGER MESS THAN YOU THINK

(By George Melloan)

Housing is very much in the news these days. First there was the discovery that influence peddlers had penetrated HUD. The true man-bites-dog story would have been news that there were no longer influence peddlers loitering around this big subsidy mill, but Congress gave a good imitation of outrage.

The outrage was mainly for the press. In substantive terms, Congress isn't mad at HUD at all. Early this month the Senate voted to expand the powers of a key HUD enterprise, the Federal Housing Administration. Under the National Affordable Housing Act, a wide-ranging bill designed by Senators Cranston and D'Amato, the FHA will be able to guarantee home mortgages up to just under $125,000, a 25% boost from the present maximum.

The FHA is currently suffering from a large negative cash flow, reserves are shrinking and its inventory of foreclosed houses is climbing, which one might expect to give the legislators pause. But this sad state of affairs is being used as an argument for, not against, expanding FHA insurance powers. It is asserted that the Cranston-D'Amato bill will allow the FHA to spread its risks by insuring higher-priced real estate.

They'd better be right, because Uncle Sam doesn't need yet another boost for his traffic in distressed real estate. The one it got last month with the passage of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act—better known as the thrift bailout bill—will do quite nicely. The new law created Resolution Trust Corp. (RTC) to take over the assets of crashed savings and loans and try to dispose of them. How much housing and other developed real estate might that be? Well, no one knows for sure but estimates range from $100 billion to $200 billion. To give some idea of magnitude, the total of all home mortgages written in the U.S. last year by the thrift industry was $240 billion.

If any of this gives the impression that federal housing policies are in disarray, it should. While the federal government becomes an ever larger holder of distressed property, the ability of young families to acquire decent housing has been shrinking. Further, wide disparities exist in housing costs from region to region of the U.S.

Politicians have found a new public cause in the "homeless," but the "homeless," by and large, are an altogether different problem, having to do with a troubling pathology of mental illness and addiction that dumps unfortunates on city streets. Yet the "homeless" issue finds resonance among healthy people, simply because of things that are wrong with the housing market.

Citing one example of real estate market disparities, Ira Gribin, president of the National Association of Realtors, notes that a house costing $25,000 in rural Oklahoma could go for 10 times that in Encino, Calif., where he lives. NAR statistics show that the median price for an existing home in the Northeast is $147,000, just double the $73,500 of the Midwest. In the West the median is $138,200 and in the South it is $88,200.

Mr. Gribin and the NAR, not surprisingly, are among the backers of the Cranston-D'Amato bill, which also has numerous other provisions supposedly designed to make housing more "affordable." He supports the argument that a higher loan ceiling will make the FHA healthier, asserting that risks are lower on more expensive houses. "The FHA is being shut out of the very market that will spread its risk," he argues.

Regional disparities in home prices also are cited as arguments for higher FHA mortgage ceilings, on grounds that higher ceilings are needed in higher-cost areas. But it can be argued as well that more liberal terms, by raising demand in areas where housing supplies are tight, will only further widen the price disparities. Indeed, the regional disparities that have developed in the housing market since 1980 probably owe something to a law that year keying FHA maximums to the median home price in an area.

The true villains in high-cost areas are factors restricting the housing supply. Rent controls have destroyed a large chunk of New York City's housing stock, putting price pressure on available housing throughout the metropolitan region. In such areas, young people seeking rental housing are, in effect, subsidizing older residents who are on the rent-control gravy train. Forced to pay high rents, these young people find it hard to save a down payment for home or co-op purchases. To get a test of the impact of rent controls, take a look at the price of real estate in the Chicago metropolitan area, where rent controls are not a factor, as compared with New York or Washington. They are substantially lower.

Suburban areas meanwhile fight back against the demand pressure caused by a flight from rent-control cities with higher zoning requirements and more red tape for developers. In Orange County, Calif., it has been estimated that red-tape delays raise construction financing and other expenses so much that a builder can spend $40,000 on a house before he ever drives a nail.

Distressed housing is becoming a very large burden for taxpayers. Critics of the Cranston-D'Amato bill, who not surprisingly include private mortgage insurers, argue that the FHA is heading for a bust just as big or bigger than the one that demolished the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. (FSLIC). A recent Heritage Foundation study by Ronald Utt notes that a FHA down-payment requirement of only 3% often leaves the FHA with a mortgage guarantee larger than the value of the house, particularly in depressed markets. That invites the householder who runs into financial reverses to simply walk away, since he has no significant equity to lose.

Which brings us back to the RTC and its task of disposing of all that foreclosed housing acquired from insolvent thrifts. If it simply "dumps" the housing in those depressed markets where a glut exists, Congress will be getting anguished phone calls from local real estate interests. Mr. Gribin's Realtors are 800,000 strong, a significant political force. Look for the RTC to incur some substantial costs in carrying its real estate inventory and trying to maintain the properties as it steers clear of complaints from local interests about its disposal programs.

The federal inventory does little for most house hunters for the simple reason that housing is not portable. A surplus in Dallas or Denver doesn't lower prices in New Jersey or Southern California. Those high prices, by raising living costs and property taxes, factor back into construction costs. You have to pay workers more in places where it costs more to live.

In short, the problems of federal housing policy are deepening. The thrift bust itself, in essence, had its origins in efforts by Congress to foster home ownership. While that is certainly a worthwhile social goal, the methods employed to achieve it have left a great deal to be desired. The critics of the Cranston-D'Amato bill are fully justified by past events in worrying about this further effort to federalize the housing market. "Affordable housing" is certainly something we all want, but housing is going to be a lot less affordable for a lot of people if they find themselves paying ever higher taxes to remedy housing-policy mistakes.

I HOPE PRESIDENT BUSH AND DRUG CZAR BENNETT ARE LISTENING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. KAPTUR] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I hope that President Bush is listening this evening, and also William Bennett, the gentleman that he has put in charge of this so-called war on drugs in the United States. I would like to say to both of them that fighting this all-out war on drugs with slingshots is not enough.

I was so disappointed in the President's message on drugs because he offered no immediate relief to communities like my own.

In his message, he did not say anything about making available Federal properties nor vacant military bases nor other facilities to relieve the critical overcrowding that faces us in our prisons and jails. That is our greatest first obstacle in getting offenders off the streets.

Just in my home county, our jail capacity is 296 persons. In July this summer, that rose to over 370, and in August the jail took an all-time high of over 500 prisoners.

Ninety-five percent of these people are awaiting trial and prosecution.

In addition to that, well over half of them have substance abuse problems.

This country cannot wait for the few new prisons that the President says will be built a few years from now in order to solve this particular problem, because those responsible for selling, using, and distributing cocaine, crack, and other illegal drugs, are getting away with murder every day, and they know it.

The Executive order that the President has signed in conjunction with his message called "Report of the President of the United States, An Alternative Use of Military Facilities," is supposed to make military facilities available to relieve local jails; but in the President's order accompanying this report, he gives his own commission a year from this month, a year from September 1989, we will not hear from them again until 1990 in the fall, in order to solve the problem.

Mr. President, if you are listening tonight, please know that this is not good enough. Our communities need help now. We need to get criminals off the street now and to prosecute those who have already been arrested and to treat those who desperately need treatment.

The President ought to put some heat under his own administration to get them to open available vacant military bases and Federal properties now, not next year. Is not leadership what Presidents are for?

This evening I am introducing, along with our colleagues, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA], the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], the chairman of our Special Committee on Narcotics, along with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] a special resolution in the House regarding the President's Executive order on the alternative utilization of military bases. Our resolution asks the President not to report 1 year from this month, but to report by the end of this year, no later than January 1, 1990.

We know that 97 percent of the people in our country arrested for drug violations are being arrested at the State and local levels, that the number of prisoners in our State and local facilities has increased by 100 percent since the beginning of this decade, and that State prisons are more than 40 percent above capacity.

We also know that section 372 of title X of the United States Code provides that:

> The Secretary of Defense may, in accordance with other applicable law, make available any equipment (including supplies or spare parts), base facility, or research facility of the Department of Defense to any federal, state, or local civilian law enforcement officials for law enforcement purposes.

We ask the President to use the authority he already has to begin a real war on drugs.

Please, Mr. President, help us take the people out of these institutions, put them on bases where they can either be treated or if they have been sentenced, put into an appropriate incarceration facility; but to try to say that we have to wait until a year from now, when our local facilities are so overcrowded, makes a mockery of this entire process.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. KAPTUR. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her statement and I want to congratulate her for her treatment of this very critical issue. It is a thoughtful statement and I hope that she does and the President and the White House will give it full attention.

AUTHORIZATION TO SIGN AND SUBMIT REQUESTS TO ADD NAMES OF MEMBERS TO LIST OF COSPONSORS OF H.R. 2273

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be authorized to sign and submit requests to add the names of the following Members to the list of cosponsors on H.R. 2273.

Mr. JIM LEACH, Mr. MARVIN LEATH, Mr. GLENN ANDERSON, Mr. DAVID NAGLE, Mr. ALAN B. MOLLOHAN, Mr. J.J. PICKLE, Mr. ROBERT W. DAVIS, Mr. BILL NELSON, Mr. JOHN M. SPRATT, JR., Mr. TERRY BRUCE, and Mr. HENRY J. HYDE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. FEIGHAN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

RULE CHANGES AND CONTINUING RESOLUTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, tonight, of course, is Wednesday, meaning it is the night that we have designated by our Congressional Task Force to talk about some rule changes that some of us would like to discuss. This evening we have designated this to talk about continuing resolutions.

Of course, the end of the fiscal year is coming up September 30 and just yesterday we did pass a continuing resolution.

The first Member of our delegation who is going to speak this evening is my good friend, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUECHNER]. The gentleman from Missouri serves with distinguished ability on the Budget Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUECHNER].

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan for yielding to me. I know his heart is in Chicago as we speak.

Mr. Speaker. In a 1920 work titled "Little Essays," George Santayana stated: "To the art of working well a civilized race would add the art of playing well." Well, Mr. Speaker, it should be obvious to even the most casual observer that Mr. Santayana did not have Congress in mind when he made that statement. You see, Congress has perfected the art of playing well. Unfortunately, we haven't perfected the art of working well.

Consider, for example, our efforts to complete work on the Federal budget.

Mr. Speaker, the Wall Street Journal once described the budget as the heart and soul of Washington, its very reason for existence. And in many respects, the paper's editorialists were correct, because the budget defines our national priorities. In doing so, it says much about us as a society.

One characteristic of our society is a belief in the rule of law. As such, it is not surprising that the budget and the budget process is also subject to a set of laws.

In fact, one such law contains a timetable which states that Congress is required to complete certain actions within a specified timeframe. For example, we are required to complete reconciliation on June 15. Of course, we still have not completed this effort. Furthermore, we are required to complete action on the 13 appropriations bills by June 30. But everyone knows that the House completed that work only shortly before leaving town for the August recess, and the Senate completes their work even later. And so, we once again find ourselves violating yet another law which Congress has established for itself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if a citizen violates the law, he or she would be subject to some form of penalty. This is not the case with Congress. You see, the budget law has no enforcement mechanism and no set of penalties.

We simply decide on the floor of the House to lump all Federal programs into one incomprehensible bill and shuffle it off to the President. Then we dare the President to either accept it or to shut the Government down. Mr. Speaker, even that bastion of liberalism, the New York Times, decried this approach as a fraud and a fantasy. In fact, the Times stated: "No President should be forced to swallow all that at once." They are indeed correct.

Unfortunately, this happens routinely. But there is no good reason why it should be allowed this year or in any subsequent year. Therefore, I strongly urge President Bush to veto the continuing resolution. Only a veto will send Congress the proper message: enough of the games. We must do what the law requires and what the people demand—to get our fiscal house in order.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, today we had a special treat at our Republican conference where we had Dick Darman come and speak this morning to address our conference. We talked a little bit about the continuing resolution and what we hoped the President would do in terms of vetoing this continuing resolution, this massive document of appropriation bills, spending bills that have been packaged together.

One of the leaders the last couple of years who has urged the President to take such action in terms of forcing Congress to do its work, to not allow a massive continuing resolution to be allowed, is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER]. Under his leadership, the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois, he has been able to sponsor letters both to President Reagan as well as obviously now to President Bush with enough signatures, with enough backbone of this House of Representatives to show that the President has the support to make a veto sustainable by this body.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER], and hopefully he can tell some of our audience a little bit this evening some of the accolades and some of the work that he has accomplished.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan for yielding, and I thank him for taking over from our colleague from Oklahoma the task of organizing this special order on continuing resolutions, and more than anything I thank him for his leadership and his hard work in bringing to the attention of the Congress and to the White House the importance of resisting the use of these insidious devices in our budgetary process that allow us to avoid meeting the issues that this country ought to be meeting head on in making the hard, tough decisions that have to be made if we are to solve our Nation's deficit problem.

Mr. Speaker, the continuing resolution has had a long-checkered history, and it is back again.

To understand why we rise tonight to oppose the continuing resolution, you must understand this history. The continuing resolution has been used for hiding spending, settling old scores, and avoiding difficult budgetary decisions. Yesterday, the House passed a continuing resolution. Just a little one, its proponents told us. But like an alcoholic who wants just one little drink, this short-term continuing resolution could turn into a big one. That is not a wild prediction, that is what history shows.

In fiscal year 1988 we had an omnibus continuing resolution which funded the entire Government for an entire year.

That continuing resolution had some insidious features.

A Senator used it to get even with Rupert Murdoch.

Another Senator used it to fund Hebrew Schools in France.

A Congressman used it to punish the Defense Intelligence Agency by taking two planes away from them for allegedly insulting him.

There was a provision changing the Tax Code in that continuing resolution; yes, that is right, a tax provision in a spending bill.

The whole continuing resolution was tied up for weeks while we fought over the fairness doctrine, an extraneous legislative provision which had been jammed into the bill.

After that continuing resolution was enacted, the newspaper articles came. Journalists reported all of these little provisions hidden in the bill, and mocked the Congress as a venal group of very small-minded people who used omnibus legislation to settle personal scores.

It is that type of legislating that destroys the reputation of the Congress with the American people—as it should.

That continuing resolution, that fiscal year 1988 omnibus continuing resolution, was the third continuing resolution of fiscal year 1988. Before we passed it, we passed two little short-term continuing resolutions, just like the one we passed yesterday.

Go back another year, to fiscal year 1987, and the story is the same. Two short-term funding measures preceding an omnibus continuing resolution where all 13 bills with $600 billion in spending the entire discretionary spending of the Federal Government for 1 year, were foisted on the President at the last minute, where he had to sign it and lost his power of the veto.

So this is why yesterday's short-term continuing resolution is so worrisome, because history shows that these little ones are followed by the big, uncontrollable, unconscionable ones.

Mr. Speaker, continuing resolutions result from missing deadlines.

In fact, a lot of things result from missing deadlines. Very soon, we are going to have a Gramm-Rudman automatic cut because we have failed by 3 months to pass the reconciliation bill.

And continuing resolutions, too, result from missing deadlines.

In fiscal year 1987, the House only passed 11 of the 13 spending bills. The 11th passed on September 12. On October 17, the President swallowed a 13-bill ominbus continuing resolution.

In fiscal year 1988, the House only passed 10 of the 13 bills. The 10th passed on September 22. On December 22, the President swallowed a 13-bill continuing resolution.

But fiscal year 1989 was different.

President Reagan warned us. He said in February he wanted the 13 bills on his desk separately and on time.

President Reagan said he would veto a continuing resolution. And he knew he could do it because 147 of us had signed a letter to him promising to uphold such a veto.

So in fiscal year 1989, we reported all 13 bills by June 29. And we enacted all 13 as freestanding measures by October 1, and the President had an opportunity to consider each one of them separately.

This year, however, we did not get any word from the President regarding continuing resolutions.

And while we did pass all 13 bills separately in the House, we did not do so until August 4, 5 weeks late.

And now, all our efforts to avoid a continuing resolution have gone down the tubes.

This is truly tragic because both majority leaders in both bodies vowed to avoid a continuing resolution, and yet we now have passed one and it seems to me that is exactly the wrong thing to do.

But what's really wrong with the continuing resolution we have passed?

First, it is too long; it goes all the way to October 25.

That gives Members a full month to dream up new things to stick in appropriations bills. That gives Members a full month to make an even bigger mess out of the budget reconciliation bill.

Second, and more important, this continuing resolution is not going to solve any of our problems and it just may make them worse.

The deficit will not get any smaller by using a continuing resolution.

This continuing resolution will not make any decisions easier, it just once again makes it easier to delay doing the job we are supposed to do.

Third, who knows what will happen to this continuing resolution in the Senate?

When we send this nice clean continuing resolution over to the Senate, who knows what they will put on it.

Some people think they might attach the D.C. appropriations bill to it in order to prevent Mr. Bush from vetoing that bill.

The Senate is infamous for extraneous provisions, and we are powerless often to stop them.

So, for me at least, the continuing resolution is a symbol of failure. It is a monument to our incompetence, and a sign of the lack of leadership both in the Congress and the executive branch.

And it goes far to show why we cannot balance the budget.

Because form and function go hand in hand.

If we cannot meet our deadlines, what is there to make anyone think we can balance the budget?

Moreover, the continuing resolution is a form of appeasement.

The continuing resolution asks us to appease the appetite of the Federal Government and the failures of our processes.

We are asked to give in to a 25-day extension.

In exchange, all our problems will be solved by the end of that time. But you and I know, Mr. Speaker, that is not true.

Budgetary appeasement fails. Omnibus budgeting runs all over the map.

When we end up with a continuing resolution, we end up with a lot of people blaming each other for it.

Whose fault it is, of course, depends on where you sit.

It is not the Appropriations Committee's fault, they say; it is not the Budget Committee's fault, they say; it is not the fault of the House and Senate leadership, they will tell you.

And, of course, the White House will tell you that it is not the President's fault.

But really, Mr. Speaker, it is all of our faults. The bottom line is that we are not doing our work for the American people.

Let me end by saying that 150 House Republicans urged President Reagan in August through a letter they signed to him to stand fast against a continuing resolution. Tonight I beg the President, who will sign this continuing resolution, to say that when he does so that that is it, that he will not sign another one, and he insists on having all 13 bills separately by October 25, that this is the end of the line.

Wonderful things will happen, Mr. President. People here will get serious about the process. He will get the bills. He will have an opportunity to veto those he does not like. He will get respect from the congressional leadership, and he will show the American people who is in charge and who insists that Congress do its work properly.

So I am here to plead with you, Mr. President. Mr. President, Congress is obviously institutionally and functionally unable to discipline ourselves and live up to the responsibilities of the budget act.

Mr. President, only you can save us from ourselves and bring order out of this budgetary chaos. Mr. President, take the reins and guide the Congress through and tell us that continuing resolutions are history, that this is the last one you will ever sign, and you will ever tolerate in your Presidency. We will stand behind you, and it will be a much, much better Presidency for doing so.

Let me thank the gentleman from Michigan for his wonderful leadership on this issue, and let us hope together that we can work together to make progress, and that President Bush will listen to us. He is the only one that can save this Congress from itself.

Mr. UPTON. I thank the gentleman from Illinois. He makes some very, very good points and, in fact, as I indicated a little bit earlier in my remarks, one of the points and questions that I asked Richard Darman, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget earlier this morning, of course, was the very fact that we had a letter signed by 150 Republicans indicating the willingness of us to vote to sustain a veto on the process, the terrible process of what the continuing resolutions bring about.

We sent that letter down. We all got thank you notes from John Sununu and the President saying thank you very much for standing behind me and we are going to need you, et cetera, and yet here we are at the end of the fiscal year and in fact it seems as though President Bush is going to sign this short-term continuing resolution. But I think we made the point today is a direct, almost confrontation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget that, in fact, a line would be drawn in the sand saying that no more after this short-term 25-day continuing resolution, that the next continuing resolution, which hopefully will take us through September 30 will in fact not be a continuing resolution but each of the appropriation bills independently on their own to take us from October 25 through September 30, the end of the next fiscal year, and that he will not need us, because he is going to say we are going to veto it, and Congress, get your work done. And in fact the Director of the Office of Management and Budget hoped that he would be able to send that signal to us this morning. He said within 36 hours, and I hope that tomorrow evening, perhaps at this time, we are going to get that message from White House, and that Congress will buckle down, and we will do the job that our constituents sent us to do to make those tough decisions up or down on each of those 13 appropriation spending bills, or actually maybe just 12 since 1 of them has cleared. But 1 out of 13 is a failure in anybody's book. The energy and water appropriation bill was the one that we passed, and we had great leadership on both sides of the aisle to get that through. But what happened to the other 12? That is what we are going to talk a little bit about this evening.

But here we go again, Mr. Speaker. Only yesterday the Members of this House voted to bail us out of our budget mess, and by a vote of 274 to 152 we decided once again to have government by continuing resolution. I mean good grief, we finally broke the trend last year. For the first time since 1954 we passed all of the spending bills on time, and I think it really came about with Ronald Reagan speaking in this well in the State of the Union Address when he literally brought 16 pounds' worth, I think, of a continuing resolution. He dropped it. We almost all thought he was going to break his arms picking it up or his legs, and he said, "No more." And in this House, Republicans and Democrats, House Members, Senate Members, Members of the Supreme Court, the Diplomatic Corps were on their feet praising him when he said no more will he sign a continuing resolution, to paraphrase him. And in fact, we passed all of the bills on time, and it took that gutsy leadership by President Reagan to get the job done. I am just sorry to say that tonight we were not able to extend that record to two in a row.

Most of the other years of this decade passing this kind of a stopgap spending measure might have been less surprising, although not more acceptable. Throughout much of Reagan's tenure, in fact, as President, the administration and the Democratic leadership of this House had sharply different philosophies about budget and spending matters. The result often was deadlock after deadlock, sometimes leading the President to simply shut down the Government rather than endorse congressional spending measures he could not accept, and leading Congress to adopt one continuing resolution after another, while the Members scrambled to patch together something we could call a budget.

Remember, a continuing resolution is the actual spending appropriation bills, and of course we do those annually. If we do not get those done by the end of the fiscal year for the next fiscal year, no funds shall be spent in those areas except in the course of life in danger or a threat to the national security. So in essence, without appropriations spending bills we have to shut down the Government in those sections, and thus this continuing resolution contraption was thought up.

Now I humbly claim a special understanding of all of this. I have seen it from both sides, having served in Reagan's Office of Management and Budget, and later as a Member of the House, of course representing the Fourth District of Michigan.

But this year was supposed to be different. How? Let me count the ways.

No. 1, on January 3 our Speaker, then Jim Wright, was reelected as Speaker of this House and pledged to get our budget work done on time. Let me remind the Members of what he said that day, quoting from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

> There is hardly a limit to what we can achieve if, in truth, we can work together. By working together we can steadily reduce and eventually eliminate the annual budget deficits that threaten our economic future. We must and we shall.

Later on that day the Speaker said:

> I am determined that so far as the Speaker can influence the schedule, we shall perform our work on time.

Let me repeat that, "We shall perform our work on time." If Members heard the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUECHNER] a little bit earlier, they know we missed deadline after deadline.

To continue Mr. Wright's words:

> Just as we did last year, the House will pass all 13 of our regular appropriation bills before we leave for the August recess.

We did, just barely, but we did.

To continue, he said:

> Now, in order to make that possible, we intend to pass the budget resolution by April 15, as the law commands.

It is important to point out, I think, that Mr. Wright's pledge was not only a promise to the Members assembled here, it was a pledge to the people we represent. Our budget process is mandated by law, and that law is our contract with the people. This is the people's House, and our job is to get the people's work done and done on time.

On January 20 we inaugurated George Bush right here at the steps of the Capitol as our 41st President, and he reiterated the aim of cooperation between Congress and the administration. He called it: "the age of the offered hand." Many of those in Congress who had blamed Reagan for our budget problems in the past saw President Bush as less confrontational, someone with whom they could easily work out a budget deal. And on April 14, one day before the deadline Speaker Wright had set, the President and the congressional leaders announced that they had indeed reached the outlines of a budget agreement.

Now make no mistake, no one thought it was a great budget agreement. A good summary of the attitude toward it was given by David Rapp in his article in Congressional Quarterly, one of the most respected publications in this town, and his article started off this way, and let me just read the first paragraph:

> Confronting the prospect of yet another embarrassing defeat in their ongoing war of attrition against the massive Federal deficit, White House and congressional budget negotiators this year have opted for the only facesaving way out: they declared victory and went home.

Now as we all know, the middle months of this year brought a great deal of upheaval in this House.

On our side of the aisle our Republican whip and good friend Dick Cheney from Wyoming left to become Secretary of Defense and we had to choose new leadership. On the Democratic side the changes were even more dramatic.

Both the Speaker and the majority whip resigned in the same month so that the Democrats had to choose a new leadership team smack in the middle of the busy congressional year.

Yet despite all that the budgeting process continued along the schedule that Speaker Wright had set January 3. All 13 appropriation spending bills were passed by the House before the August recess.

But since then something has gone wrong. In a few days we will start a new fiscal year and will not have agreed on how we will spend the public's money in that year. That is why we have been forced to approve a continuing resolution, a continuing resolution.

Let us take a look at how much of the people's work has been left undone. This is taken from the Congressional Monitor, which is a daily publication I get in my office.

I am going to go through each of these appropriation bills.

Let us take agriculture: Both the House and Senate passed the bill in July. Conferees were appointed in the House in September, September 6 in the House and in the Senate in July. To date I do not think the conference has met. We have not done our work. It has been 3 weeks since the conferees have been appointed. Both the bills have passed this Chamber as well as the Senate. This bill ought to be down past the President's desk either signed or vetoed. It should not be part of a continuing resolution.

Commerce, Justice, State, and the judiciary appropriations bill: Passed the House August 1. Yet in the Senate they are still in subcommittee markup. That was completed 2 weeks ago. Have not even gotten to full committee. I guess that is the other body's problem. Again we have not done the people's work. Where have they been?

Defense appropriations bill: Passed the House August 4; again in full committee, got out 2 weeks ago in the Senate, September 14. I know that and I think that they had some debate on the Senate floor. But where is it? It should have been done.

The people's work has not been done.

District of Columbia appropriations: It passed the House August 3, passed the Senate September 14; conferees have been appointed in the Senate. We have not even appointed conferees to this important subcommittee bill which passed August 3, almost 2 months ago. We have not even appointed conferees.

How can they go to conference? Something as simple as that; just ridiculous.

Energy and water development appropriations: Well, there we go. We have gotten that one done. That is the one bill we have gotten done. Passed the House and Senate in June and July and we finally got that and it is down on the President's desk.

Foreign operations: That is foreign aid, that is an important subcommittee. Passed the House July 21. Where is it in the Senate? Well, they finished in full committee 2 weeks ago. But again they have not brought it up for a final vote in the other body.

We have got to get our work done.

Now Interior appropriations: This is 7th of 13. It passed the House in July, passed the Senate in July. Conferees were appointed. Conference was scheduled for today. That one might have a chance of getting out by the end of the week. Let us hope so.

Labor-HHS-Education: Passed the House August 2. Boy, this is a big appropriations bill. In the Senate the full committee report was filed on the 13th. I understand they may go to conference next week. But you know what? That is next fiscal year. Why could they not go this week or go the week before?

Now legislative branch appropriations: This is the one that funds Congress. It passed the House July 31, passed the Senate September 7. Conferees were appointed just a couple of days ago in the House. They could have been appointed, I would have thought, a couple of weeks ago. We did not get it done. Congress did not get the job done. We had to rely on that terrible thing called the continuing resolution.

Military construction appropriations: Another appropriations spending bill. This is a sad report. Passed the House July 31, passed the Senate September 15, conferees were appointed the 15th of September in the Senate even though we passed it in the House back in July and we still have not appointed conferees. Here it is September 27. We are not going to appoint them tonight. So that is going to be at least September 28.

Transportation appropriations: Passed the House August 3, full committee in the Senate September 7. They have probably been debating it over there on the Senate floor and have not come up with a final vote on the floor as of today.

But again our work has not been done.

Treasury-Postal Service appropriations: Boy, that is another important subcommittee here. Passed the House July 28, passed the Senate August 4. They appointed conferees back in the Senate in August, first week in the House here, conference began the 13th but they have not finished yet. Let us hope we can get that done before the end of the week.

Finally the last of the 13 appropriation bills.

Veterans' Administration, HUD, independent agencies appropriations: Passed the House July 20, the Senate full committee back 2 weeks ago, September 13, but again it was not brought up for final vote over there and again we have not done our work.

You know, this is uncalled for. We are here to do a job. We have been out the entire month of August because of the recess. We came back. We have had some days where we could have come in earlier most of those days, we have not had a lot of votes on Mondays or Fridays. There is plenty of chance to get the job done. Congress has not done the job.

Here we are at the end of the fiscal year burning the midnight oil, probably, and we resort to this terrible practice of passing a continuing resolution. No one reads it.

It is a couple of thousand pages long in some cases. No one knows how the special little pork-barrel projects that might be inserted here or there; the President has to take it or leave it or shut down the Government, without a line-item veto, something that even Michael Dukakis supported prior to the election. He often has to take it, as proves the point this week.

You know if we did get our job done, at least send these appropriation bills back one at a time, whether it be military construction or agriculture or legislative, at least the process would work and we would live up to the laws that we established for ourselves.

I see my good friend, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] has come on the floor. I know the gentleman would like to make a few remarks. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman from Michigan for taking this special order tonight to inform our colleagues and, hopefully, some other people that we do have a real problem here in the Congress which is not new.

I have been in the Congress now almost 8 years and we have had to struggle with continuing resolutions throughout that entire period of time. In fact, I only recall 1 year, I think it was in 1987, when Ronald Reagan came before this body in his State of the Union Message with a 14-pound document that he dropped on the lectern up there and said this was the last continuing resolution that he was going to sign.

We all applauded wildly because we knew that as the gentleman said, nobody knew really what was in that continuing resolution in 1986-87. What really concerns me and the reason I am very happy to participate in this special order is not that we do not get our work done on time, although that is a major problem—we should get our work done on time. We wasted a tremendous amount of time in the early part of the year. What really concerns me is the chicanery that takes place when you pass a continuing resolution. The last continuing resolution that I remember we brought before the House, they brought it out here about 11:30 at night, it was wrapped in string, there were big red lines through it. People did not really know what was in it. I doubt seriously whether the people on Ways and Means knew everything that was in that bill. But later we found out there were pork-barrel projects for special apartment buildings in Chicago, there was a new parking lot approval for a stadium in Miami, FL, there was all kinds of pork-barrel projects, tax forgiveness in Tarrant County, TX. I remember that specifically very well, in Jim Wright's district. Those kinds of things bother those of us in this body because we know they are pork-barrel projects, we know there is chicanery, stuff that is done under the table. But it bothers the American people even more because they lose confidence in us.

Lord knows we have enough problems around here right now that lead the American people to lose confidence in Congress.

I think we only add fuel to the fire when we do not go through the regular appropriations process and meet the deadlines that have been set out by the Constitution and by law.

When we pass a continuing resolution, we violate the trust of the American people. I think it is time that we as a body pass the constitutional amendment to balance the budget, pass a constitutional amendment or a law that would give the President a line-item veto and say once and for all we are going to live within our means, we are going to live within the laws, we are going to get our appropriations bill done on time, we are going to go through all the processes required in a reasonable amount of time and cut out these continuing resolutions once and for all.

I think the American people would applaud it. I think they would look upon Congress with much more favor than they do. It would restore a lot of trust which has been lost by the American people as respects the Congress of the United States.

Once again I thank my colleague from Michigan. I know this is a real drain on him to set this thing up. I know he was going around the Chamber today trying to get people to come down and talk on it.

□ 1950

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the gentleman's efforts, and really thank the gentleman for taking the time.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for coming over. I remember that night so well because, of course, it was December. This was a continuing resolution that was going to take Members from about December 23 or so, 1987.

Suddenly, all Members with families, and I remember your remarks from the floor, within a couple of days, wondered where are we going to do the Christmas shopping? Is this a ruse by Marion Barry to make Members do our shopping here in the District of Columbia, or can we go home to Indiana or Michigan or wherever for Christmas and spend time with our families? It was a late night, about 11 o'clock at night. In fact, I just wish that I had kept my copy, because I ended up with one of the three copies that were available of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It was about a foot and a half thick, bound with rubberbands and string, and one copy here on this table for the Republicans, one copy over there for the Democrats. They brought it out in a Xerox box, like in a trunk, practically, and one copy for the Speaker. They said that we would have debate on this for an hour, and then we would vote.

No Member read it. No Member read it even afterward. It was terribly long. What people did was they came up and rifled through the pages. They were all looseleaf-like sections. They wanted to see if their "special project" was in there, because it might have governed their vote, up or down. As I recall, it only passed by one vote. One vote, and I am sure the gentleman voted no on that. The whole process was wrong. How could we go back to our constituents, to the town meetings and such, and tell constituents with a straight face that we are trying to reduce the deficit? That is why we are here, trying to make tough choices. Yet we allow this process, without a line-item veto, would enhance rescission. Even the administration, and they had 10 days once this bill was passed by the House for the President to sign it, and they almost had to sign it overnight because, of course, the Government was going to shut down. Even they did not know what was all the mischief that had been done until long after the ink was dried. They said, "By gosh, we have to fund this program," and was too late.

That is what we are trying to get away from. That is a reason I voted against the continuing resolution yesterday. I am sorry to say that President Bush is likely to sign it. We have to lay the line in the sand and say "Enough is enough." We were elected to do a job, elected to make tough decisions. We ought to stand up by those decisions, and we ought to make the process work, make the trains run on time, just like the Speaker said earlier this year. We failed.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. If the gentleman will continue yielding, he made a very valid point, and that is that the President is likely to sign this continuing resolution. I would like to say, if the President were here, that I wish he would make the same kind of unequivocal statement that President Reagan made and say that, "I will not sign any more continuing resolutions." He has been a former Member of this body and he knows.

Mr. UPTON. He could join Members tonight as a former Member. He could not speak, but perhaps we could get face time.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. If the gentleman will continue to yield, I wish he would take your advice and my advice and tell the Congress, "Look, we will live by the rules. No more continuing resolutions. If you do not want to get the job done on time, you will stay here until you do." If the President held our feet to the fire a couple of times like that, we would get the message, and the American people would applaud the message.

Mr. UPTON. One day of Government shut down would force this institution to react the correct way and get the bills done, appoint conferees, if that is the hold up, get them out of conference, get them down there and let the President take the option of signing or vetoing. If he chose to veto, let Congress take the job and fix it up and get the job done and move on. We have to start looking ahead now to the next fiscal year. Gramm-Rudman target is ever harder. It will be much harder to achieve. We are being threatened now with sequestration because of Gramm-Rudman, automatic across-the-board cuts. We have not done our job. The reconciliation bill that we began really debating yesterday, and having some votes on today should have been done months ago.

Yet the Senate will take another week of vacation. The week of October 9 they are not scheduled to be here. How we can possibly finish the bill, send it to the Senate, get it through conference, down to the White House in time for automatic sequestration not to start?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. If the gentleman will continue yielding, Speaker FOLEY was on television. I believe on CNN on Sunday. I was watching the show, and he pretty much conceded that we will have temporary sequestration because there is no way to reach the goal of getting this thing done on time.

Mr. UPTON. Even though I believe the gentleman from Indiana and I both supported Gramm-Rudman, that is no way for Members to act. We were here to set priorities. We were sent here to make spending choices within a limited amount, to reduce the budget. We were not here to act like robots and say everything will take a 1-percent cut or a 4-percent cut. Any school child could do that, and could come up with such a formula. We were sent here to make those priorities. Is health care more important maybe than running an Amtrak train from two different towns, to another place? Those are the choices that we are supposed to make here. Not letting automatic sequestration kick in.

Mr BURTON of Indiana. If the gentleman would continue to yield, for whomever in our body may be paying attention to this debate right now, and I hope all our colleagues are as well as other people, the thing that needs to be spelled out clearly as we have target dates, we have required dates by which we are supposed to get certain things done. We have not met those targets, and that is the reason why we have this sequestration problem facing Members, which is why we have a continuing resolution facing Members down the road. It is incomprehensible that the leadership in this body had not taken the bull by the horns and said to the committee chairmen and the conferees that they have appointed and said. "Look, get on with it, get the job done." and put pressure on the Senate to get it done so we can get out of here at a reasonable time, and to do the job the American people send Members here to do.

Mr. UPTON. If the gentleman can remember even last year when we were able to pass all the appropriations bills on time, everyone in this Chamber, Republican and Democrat alike, properly so, gave credit to finally getting the job done for almost—I was born in 1953—first time since 1954. Only one other time in my lifetime have they gotten the job done on time. I can remember the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, people knew what he was saying.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana, If the gentleman will yield, we applauded that night.

Mr. UPTON. The Speaker at that time, Mr. Wright, was on the floor. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] was here. We were all here. It was almost like a birthday celebration, it was so festive. Where is that attitude now?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. If the gentleman will continue yielding, I think the reason that attitude prevailed, if I might speak one more time, is that President Reagan, as I said, in the State of the Union message, dropped the 14-pound document on the desk and said, "No more." If that resolve is shown, by the administration, and if it is really believed by the leadership of this body and the other body, then by golly, get it done on time. The problem is that pressure has to be exerted, because if it is not exerted, all the other pressures, the pork barrel projects, the special interest groups, the special things people want to get done, will have to be done only through a continuing resolution and they will drag their feet until we are to the point where we have to have a continuing resolution and we will the chicanery and the pork barrel.

So I think the administration needs to be strong in saying, "Look, no more continuing resolutions," and stick by it, and keep Members here if we do not get the job done.

Mr. UPTON. We all are in this together. It is not only Members in this House. It is certainly the "Lower Body," as we like to refer to them over in the Senate, but also certainly the administration.

The gentleman is right. We need to make sure that, hopefully, our pledge initiated, really, by my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER], and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] and myself, and I know the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] had a good hand in this as well, circulating the pages for signature to get the necessary requisite number of names to say we had enough votes to sustain a veto. We need leadership from the top on down to say "Enough is enough." Let Members get the job done like we had done before.

Let me say in conclusion, how did this happen that up until August things seemed to be going so well, and all of a sudden, September things really began to collapse? I think it is, frankly, because our ambitions exceed our ability to perform. The fact is amply demonstrated in the reconciliation bill that is up for debate right now. It looks a lot like the continuing resolution back in 1987. This is it, and it almost takes two hands to hold it up. It is nearly 2,000 pages, which is what we are doing tonight. Actually, 1,935 pages.

Mr. Speaker, we are supposed to cast votes on it this week and next week, even though we only received it as of Monday this week.

It is not just that the bill is so long; it is that it contains a whole variety of major policy issues that do not belong in a massive package. Much of the delay has come about because the House leadership was unable to determine where the votes were on a variety of policy questions contained here.

There are issues like catastrophic health care. I think we are going to visit that issue next week. Then there is child care, and there is section 89, which we were able to repeal, thank goodness, a little bit earlier this afternoon. Then there is the fairness doctrine.

But at least those issues will come up for separate votes. Others will not. In fact, far more votes will not come up, and if this bill passes, there will be included as one of the items in the bill pension reform, although there was a vote earlier to make a proposed change in the pension law. A great many new regulations governing pensions are still included in the bill.

Another example is an expansion of Medicaid benefits. That is included here. How many Members of the House really understand Medicaid expansions as contained in the bill and whether or not they will be approved if they vote in favor of the bill?

It is not that these things are unimportant. In fact, they are very important, regardless of whether we support these specific proposals or not.

What makes it necessary that we pile all these into a massive "must pass" bill? Is that the way to do the people's business? Is that what our constituents want? Are these issues not important enough that we should give them more careful and deliberate consideration and have up and down votes on separate amendments on each and every one of these issues?

Those of us who advocate congressional reform are not saying these things just to criticize the Democratic leadership. Our point is that all of us in this House must take some responsibility for getting our work done on time, and that means that we cannot demand that every one of our legislative wishes be included in these massive catchall bills. It means we cannot just bring up these "must pass" measures just to test the loyalty, and it means that when we promise to do the job properly, it is a pledge to the people as well as to ourselves.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to yield back the balance of my time, and we look forward to next Wednesday night when we will be talking about another issue of congressional rules. I hope we will have as lively a debate then as we had this evening.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM WEEK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, this week we are celebrating Religious Freedom Week, a reminder to us all that we are the fortunate recipients of that freedom. Much of our history is bound up with religious values and a heritage bequeathed to us by our immigrant forebearers. Their zeal and dedication in establishing congregations in their new homeland provide countless examples of personal sacrifice and personal triumphs over adversity.

Such an example is furnished by Immanuel Lutheran Church, which celebrates its 125th anniverary in this month of October. Immanuel Lutheran congregation was founded on October 3, 1864, by German-Americans, recent arrivals from Europe who were determined to preserve their strong Lutheran traditions for themselves and their children. Their reasons for leaving Germany were diverse; there were intellectuals disappointed by the failed revolutions of 1848, young people fearful of the ever increasing powers of an oppressive police state, and middle-class shopkeepers of an oppressive police state, and middle-class shopkeepers anxious for economic prosperity. The first meetings of the congregation were held at "Depford Hall" located at Gough and Dallas Streets in East Baltimore. Eleven days after President Lincoln's assassination it was resolved to begin the construction of an impressive church edifice on Caroline Street near Baltimore. The cornerstone was laid in September 1865, and on May 6 of the following year the completed structure was dedicated with appropriate services. Among the speakers for the occasion was Prof. Charles Porterfield Krauth of Philadelphia, the foremost leader of conservative Lutheranism in America. In keeping with the founders' intense interest in Christian education, a day school was established shortly thereafter.

Assimilation into the larger community caused church members to question the continued use of German as the language of worship and gradually English services were introduced in the 1890's. The early 1900's, particularly the post World War I years, saw members relocating to the suburbs, returning for worship services. School enrollment declined and the onslaught of the Great Depression multiplied the church's financial worries, but the congregation did not lose heart. In August 1934, lightning struck the church spire resulting in the parital destruction of the church building itself and its organ. Members accepted this disaster as a challenge and, in faith, the building was rebuilt and rededicated on April 7, 1935.

During the years of World War II, efforts were made to reach the families without a parish who were housed in Government projects, but membership declined, making pastoral efforts, however diligently made, more and more difficult. The congregation made a momentous decision at the close of the war to relocate, believing that missionary efforts might be more gratifying at a new site.

A cornerstone for a parish hall, which would serve as a place of worship until the church proper could be built, was laid on September 28, 1947, at the 2-acre plot on Loch Raven Boulevard and Belvedere Avenue. The church building itself was completed in 1951, expedited by a generous gift from Emma Wolpman Momberger, a lifelong member.

The imposing stone church structure, regarded as one of the finest examples of church architectural design in America, has not changed since that time. Yet within, the congregation worshiping there is no longer comprised solely of descendants of German-Americans. The membership has grown to reflect changes in the community Immanuel serves, but its mission remains the same—to minister to the needs of the people of its congregation as well as those of the community at large.

Great things have happened in the history of Immanuel Lutheran Church in the last 125 years, and great things have taken place in our Nation. Both have survived a bloody Civil War and two World Wars, both have struggled under the economic hardships of the Great Depression, both have witnessed societal changes and have adapted to those changes, and both have never lost the fervor and sense of commitment exhibited by those early immigrants.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Immanuel Luthern congregation on the occasion of its 125th anniversary, and admonish the members to continue to live in deeds, not in years. You have contributed immensely to the community you serve. Continue to labor in the knowledge that God will continue to use your strength and abilities to meet your responsibilities to that community, the Nation, and the world. More service is demanded of you, and I wish you continual prosperity and growth.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION EXPRESSING SENSE OF THE CONGRESS THAT THE PANAMA CANAL TREATIES SHOULD BE ABROGATED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today is the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Panama Canal Act of 1979 by President Jimmy Carter, which implemented the 1977 Panama Canal Treaties. In light of this historic date, I would like to take this opportunity to remind my colleagues of the substantial legal arguments which impair the validity of the Panama Canal Treaties, as well as invite them to cosponsor my resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 47, expressing the sense of the Congress that the treaties should be abrogated.

As the situation in Panama continues to deteriorate, we grow closer and closer to the unhappy prospect of turning over the maintenance and operation of the canal to the corrupt military regime of Gen. Manuel Noriega. Although some experts have downplayed its strategic importance, be assured that the canal is still considered a vital choke point in times of crisis. The ability to use the canal for the transshipment of ships, supplies, and other critical equipment would be vital to the United States in times of national crisis. Without the canal, ships would have to make a 13,000-mile trip around the tip of South America.

In 1977, President Carter and the "Head of Government" in Panama at the time, Gen. Omar Torrijos, signed two treaties. The first was the Panama Canal Treaty which calls for the gradual transfer of the canal and Canal Zone to Panama by December 31, 1999. The second treaty signed was the Treaty Concerning the Permanent Neutrality and Operation of the Panama Canal, which guarantees the neutrality of the canal after the transfer is complete. A review of the process by which these treaties came to be ratified clearly indicate that constitutional irregularities exist that render the treaties null and void.

Chief among the many legal problems with the 1977 treaties is the DeConcini Reservation which declared that the United States' right of intervention to guarantee the neutrality of the canal could be exercised unilaterally and, if necessary, against the opposition of the Government of Panama. This amendment, which was essential in securing Senate ratification, was strongly opposed by the Panamanian negotiators. Unbeknownst to the Senate at the time, General Torrijos included a three-paragraph counterreservation in the treaty ratified by his Government. In essence, it stated that it was the understanding of Panama that the DeConcini Reservation did not allow for unilateral United States action. Hence it negated the Senate reservation.

Further complicating the matter is the fact that under the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which is generally recognized as the codification of the international law of treaties, each country entering into a treaty must ratify the identical language. Due to the DeConcini Reservation and the Torrijos counterreservation, this criterion clearly was not met.

Another justification for abrogating the treaties is the fact that the canal, which was declared U.S. property by the U.S. Supreme Court in Wilson v. Shaw [1907], was disposed of improperly. Under article IV, section 3, clause 2 of the U.S. Constitution, "The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States . . ." Therefore, U.S. property can only be conveyed through the normal legislative process, which means approval of both the Senate and the House, not through the treaty ratification process, which only requires Senate approval. As long as Panama continues to be held hostage by a drug-trafficking thug, for our own security and the security of the rest of the free world, we must do everything in our power to retain the canal. After we determine that the people of Panama have had the opportunity to select their own government in a free and fair election, we can work with that government to renegotiate a treaty. And next time we are going to do it right.

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on the anniversary of the signing of the Panama Canal Act of 1979 which implemented the Panama Canal Treaties of 1977. Since its passage and the ratification of the Panama Canal Treaties of 1977, the ire of many Americans has been raised because of the giveaway of a strategically important military and commercial waterway. Putting aside the fact that many of us believe the Panama Canal Treaties are in themselves faulty, the United States now has the responsibility to review these treaties as long as Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega remains in power.

As we all know, General Noriega stole an apparent Presidential victory from opposition candidate Guillermo Endara and the Panamanian people earlier this year. Instead of listening to the will of the Panamanian people, Noriega placed in power a puppet regime. Since then, Noriega and his cronies have repeatedly violated the Panama Canal Treaties by harassing U.S. citizens and disrupting the efficient functioning of the Panama Canal.

Besides supporting the puppet Government, General Noriega has been indicted by two Federal grand juries in the United States for money laundering, racketeering, and drug trafficking. He has also been accused of harboring members of the Colombian drug cartels in Panama. And we are expected to turn over this vital waterway and the Canal Zone to him and his Government of despots.

Mr. Speaker, we need to reassess the Panama Canal Treaties and realize they are not working the way they were envisioned over a decade ago. House Concurrent Resolution 47, of which I am an original cosponsor, calls for the abrogation of the Panama Canal Treaties. As long as Noriega or his puppets remain in power and until internationally recognized free and fair elections are held, the United States needs to maintain sovereignty over the Panama Canal Zone. To do this, we need to use the Panama Canal Zone as a bargaining chip to get rid of Noriega and his cronies. We need to abrogate the Panama Canal Treaties.

Once a democratically elected civilian government is in power, the United States should then begin renegotiation of the Panama Canal Treaties. The problems we have had in ousting a military strongman such as General Noriega could be addressed in a new treaty by making sure the United States retains some semblance of say over the Panama Canal, either through maintaining a military presence or by asserting the United States' right to protect the Panama Canal and its surrounding zone.

It is unconscionable that we turn over a strategically vital waterway such as the Panama Canal to a bunch of drug-running despots who have no regard for the will of its citizens or their democratic rights that we, as Americans, take for granted. The security of the canal is at stake, let alone the future of Panama. The Panama Canal Treaties need to be abrogated, and they need to be abrogated now.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, before I begin, I'd just like to thank my colleague, Mr. CRANE, for having the courage to introduce his resolution and to organize this special order calling for the abrogation of the infamous Panama Canal Treaty of 1977.

This is one mistake Congress is long overdue in correcting.

In my judgment, there are two reasons we should abrogate the Panama Canal giveaway: First, dictator Manuel Noriega has already violated the treaties and, second, it has never been in our security interests to surrender the canal in the first place.

Whatever one says of Noriega, he has at least forced us to revisit this sorry mistake of Congress and the Carter administration with the hope of getting back our canal—for good.

To begin with, Noriega has violated several provisions of the treaty, ending any obligation on our part to adhere to this ill-conceived document. He has harrassed U.S. citizens, failed to provide security for U.S. personnel, disrupted the efficient operation of the canal, failed to provide agreed-upon support services for the canal, and even threatened to evict the U.S. Southern Command—all in direct violation of the 1977 treaty.

To continue abiding by a dead letter treaty that goes against our national interests to begin with is asinine. The proper response to Panamanian violations is abrogation of the treaty entirely.

Despite what some say about the reduced significance of the canal, it is still vital and strategic for trade and military deployment—especially in a crisis situation.

Over 3,500 ships a year go through the Panama Canal. Seventy percent of that cargo originates in or is bound for the United States. A large variety of trade passes through the canal affecting a wide cross-section of industries.

The Panama Canal is also still vital to world trade. Over 60 percent of British shipping crossing the oceans passes through the canal, as well as a third of Japanese oceanic trade. Furthermore, the Panama Canal is absolutely essential to trade between the countries of Latin America. In this sense, keeping the canal in friendly hands is important not only for the United States, but for the world economy as well.

Finally, the Panama Canal is properly considered by military observers as a strategic choke point, critical in any national security crisis.

Except for our large aircarft carriers, most of our fleet can still travel through the canal as well as the supplies and equipment that would be transported in an emergency. Without the canal, the United States would need a larger navy, capable of patrolling both oceans—an expense we can little afford during this budget crisis.

The case is clear. We are entitled to the canal by all rights. We have a serious and compelling interest in reclaiming the canal. It's time to take back what we should have never given away.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on official business during rollcall votes No. 239 through No. 243 on Monday, September 25, 1989. Had I been present on the House floor I would have voted in the following manner:

SENATE—Wednesday, September 27, 1989

(Legislative day of Monday, September 18, 1989)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Lord God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—Moses and the prophets—Jesus and the Apostles; Lord God of the ages and all peoples of all races, grant that this Nation may fulfill its God-destined role among all nations.

Heighten our gratitude for the blessings so lavishly bestowed upon us; deepen our humility in the recognition of the resources so uncommonly plentiful in our land; broaden our sense of justice to include the deprived and the forgotten of the world; lengthen the outreach of our love and goodness to include all who suffer, the homeless and the hungry, the persecuted and the oppressed.

Sensitize us to the hurt and pain of all peoples at home and abroad. Make us advocates of the voiceless, the weak, the poor, the elderly, the neglected. Let compassion be the hallmark of our deliberations.

We pray this in the matchless name of Him who, in love, gave His life for all peoples. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, September 27, 1989.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. REID thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the standing order, the majority leader is now recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, following the time for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business until 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 5 minutes each. At 10 o'clock, the Senate will resume consideration of H.R. 3015, the Department of Transportation appropriations bill. The manner in which we will proceed on this bill is governed by an extensive unanimous-consent agreement reached last night, provisions of which can be found on page 2 of the Senate Legislative Calendar.

Upon disposition of the transportation appropriations bill, the Senate will resume consideration of the Department of Defense appropriations bill. For the information of Senators, rollcall votes are anticipated today relative to these matters.

Mr. President, I congratulate all concerned in reaching agreement on how we will proceed with respect to the drug program. This agreement gives us the opportunity to take much-needed action to substantially improve the President's proposal dealing with drugs. That proposal, the one submitted by the President, was painfully inadequate for the task that we face in this country in dealing with drugs. Now we have the opportunity to improve it in three important respects.

First, to elevate the goals of the program. What is it that we are trying to accomplish? The President's program, his proposal, was unnecessarily modest in that regard. It set goals that are far less than must be and can be achieved.

Second, it permits us to shift the emphasis of that program. We need much more in the way of education, rehabilitation, and treatment, much more than the President proposed in the way of emphasis in those important areas. This gives us the opportunity to do so.

Finally, it significantly increases the resources which we will commit to this program, substantially more than initially proposed by the President, the amount he proposed being clearly inadequate to the task. I congratulate Senator BYRD for his leadership in this area and all of the Members on both sides who participated in the negotiations. This is a victory, not just for Senator BYRD; this is a victory not just for the Senate; this is a victory for the American people. We have a chance to do something meaningful on the most serious domestic problem that we face, and we are going to take that action and dramatically improve the program that the President proposed.

STEVE GERSTEL'S 30TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I would like to call to the Senate's attention that today, the 27th of September 1989, marks an anniversary for a man who is a friend to many of us, and who has served the Congress in his capacity for 30 years.

That man is Steve Gerstel of United Press International, who today celebrates his 30th anniversary as a member of the Senate and House Press Galleries.

Steve has been around a great deal longer than I, and as a result, I often find his insights and his comments both helpful and enlightening. He has served our Nation as a reporter, and although that is not an official position under our system, it is a role that is tacitly recognized and honored in the first amendment.

Steve's work is of a caliber that respects and honors the purposes of the first amendment and it is particularly fitting that he marks his anniversary at this time, because it is a time when the worth of the first amendment is being acknowledged worldwide as never before.

Not all of us know it, because Steve has so thoroughly assimilated American culture and traditions, but his family emigrated to this country from their homeland of Czechoslovakia. Indeed, it was Steve's unvarnished Czechoslovakian name which led to his untimely detention by an overly enthusiastic FBI agent when he was detailed to cover Khrushchev's visit to this country in 1959.

That detention may be the only time Steve has failed to fulfill his duty as a reporter honorably, fairly, and well in the three decades that he has covered the Congress.

Today, when the liberties of free speech and a free press are being openly sought in Soviet Russia and Eastern Europe, it is a good time to consider the role that our Nation's independent media have played in the development of our system and the preservation of our liberties.

Not all of us always enjoy the attention we receive from our friends in the press, but if we are given the honest and fair reporting that is a hallmark of Steve Gerstel's work, we have much to be grateful for.

Our Nation was the winner when Steve came to this country, and it is a real pleasure to congratulate him on his 30th anniversary on the job.

STEVE GERSTEL: CONGRATULATIONS ON 30 YEARS OF CAPITOL HILL JOURNALISM—WE'LL CALL YOU IN THE MORNING

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to take just a moment to salute someone who is celebrating a remarkable anniversary today. I am talking about Steve Gerstel of United Press International, who is observing his 30th year of dedicated journalism on Capitol Hill—that gives Steve more tenure than almost every Member of the U.S. Senate. In fact, it might even entitle him to vote on the floor.

Let's face it, anyone who has spent that much time listening to the Senate deserves something special—like a free doctor's examination.

Steve found out all about this place when he first joined UPI's Washington bureau. One day his boss told him to get some reaction comments from Senator Herman Talmadge of Georgia. Although it was late in the evening, the young reporter dutifully called the distinguished Senator at his home. Senator Talmadge answered but told Steve he would call him back in the morning.

"That's OK," Steve said. Well, the Senator called back in the a.m.—4 a.m. to be exact.

Steve, welcome to the U.S. Senate.

Since that time, Steve Gerstel has seen plenty of 4 a.m.'s on Capitol Hill. Of course, UPI subscribers and newspaper readers don't think about how the news got to their desks or breakfast tables—they just want the news.

But behind that news are the men and women who do the thankless task of digging out the news and getting it out to the public in a seemingly endless series of pressure-packed deadlines. That is why Steve Gerstel's service in the Press Gallery is so impressive.

Steve, I congratulate you and wish you all the best as you continue your record-setting pace in this historic building. You have earned the respect and admiration of your colleagues and my colleagues as well.

TEMPORARY WAIVER OF THE JACKSON-VANIK AMENDMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, we are all heartened by the progress made in United States-Soviet relations during the past few days. I congratulate the President and Secretary of State for their work to ensure the success of their meetings with Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze. I hope that both sides will devote significant energies to building upon these developments.

President Bush has pledged to respond to positive steps by the Soviet Union with positive steps of his own.

One specific step that President Bush should take immediately is a temporary waiver of the Jackson-Vanik amendment linking nondiscriminatory trade treatment with the freedom of emigration.

Since the beginning of 1989, over 100,000 people have emigrated from the Soviet Union. Tens of thousands more have permission to leave. The monthly rate of emigration continues to rise. Depending on how the overall trend is projected, we can anticipate that over 150,000 will depart the Soviet Union this year. It is estimated that as many as 250,000 Soviets could apply to come to the United States in 1990.

In the early 1980's, only about 1,000 people were allowed to leave the Soviet Union annually.

This is a truly remarkable change.

The indisputable rise in Soviet emigration is a step that deserves an American response. The response quite clearly should be the conditional lifting of impediments to trade imposed by the Jackson-Vanik amendment. Particularly if we are to maximize the leverage of the law, Jackson-Vanik should be temporarily waived now.

In 1974, Congress passed the Jackson-Vanik amendment to the Trade Act. The amendment bars an extension of certain credits and the granting of most-favored-nation status to non-market-economy countries that deny their citizens the freedom to emigrate.

The United States is virtually the only country that denies nations nondiscriminatory trade treatment and export credits based on their emigration policy.

In this respect, the Jackson-Vanik amendment is unique, reflecting Senator Jackson's forceful argument that the right to emigrate should not be separated from other issues of United States-Soviet relations.

The amendment gives the President the authority to lift the restrictions on trade if he determines that first, the relevant country no longer denies its citizens the right or opportunity to emigrate; or second, the waiver will promote freedom of emigration and receives appropriate assurances that emigration practices will lead to such freedom. The President may waive the amendment on a temporary or continuing basis, Congress concurring.

Waiving Jackson-Vanik would not automatically confer dramatic benefits. The United States and Soviet Union would have to complete a commercial agreement, as required by the Trade Act, before the Soviet Union could benefit from most-favored-nation status. Other provisions of United States law would continue to limit the availability of certain trade credits and guarantees for American exports to the Soviet Union. Moreover, United States-Soviet trade would continue to be limited by the lack of demand for Soviet products.

But Jackson-Vanik is of enormous symbolic importance.

Despite the assurances about continued freedom of emigration that the Soviets reportedly have given the administration, the President still says that he will consider waiving the amendment only once Soviet emigration law is changed and the United States is able to see the faithful implementation of that law.

I believe this is an overly timid approach.

Now is the time to grant a temporary waiver and maximize its utility by making a waiver extension contingent upon guaranteed freedom of emigration.

I believe—and the historical record demonstrates—that the actions of the Soviet Government are more meaningful than its laws. The number of Soviet citizens emigrating this year almost certainly will be three times that permitted in 1979—a year once regarded as the freest period of emigration in Soviet history.

Why wait? Why not give the Supreme Soviet added incentive to make legal reform a legislative priority?

If the President temporarily waives Jackson-Vanik, he loses nothing. He can only win. He can refuse to renew it should the Soviets restrict emigration or refuse to codify their emigration laws—and I would be among the first to urge him to do so.

By failing to grant a temporary waiver now, the United States could miss an important opportunity to respond to the changes we have demanded and to maximize the utility of the Jackson-Vanik amendment.

A temporary waiver would accomplish three things. It would conform with the intention of the Jackson-Vanik amendment; it would provide a carrot and a stick with which to influence the future of Soviet emigration; and it would demonstrate that the trade between the United States and the Soviet Union is limited first and foremost by the failings of the Soviet economy.

As Senator Jackson noted, the waiver provision in the Jackson-Vanik amendment "gives the President the legal authority he needs" to make a "gesture" to the Soviets once they improve emigration policy. Presidents have waived Jackson-Vanik in response to improve emigration policies in Hungary and other countries.

The law was written to ensure that the President could respond promptly to greater freedom of emigration. The restrictions of Jackson-Vanik becomes meaningless if they are not lifted when the conditions are fulfilled. Clearly, the freedom of Soviet emigration policy has increased—far more dramatically than many anticipated. Therefore, President Bush should grant a temporary waiver now.

An essential and related point is this: If we do not waive the amendment when its conditions are met, we have no leverage, no appropriate response, should emigration freedom be restricted in the future.

Many believe that the United States missed an important opportunity to faithfully implement the law in 1979, when Soviet emigration topped 50,000. Then, after the Soviets invaded Afghanistan and drastically restricted emigration, the United States had no specific response to that change of emigration policy. Having never waived Jackson-Vanik when emigration became freer, we could not reimpose it when emigration was restricted. If we fail to use the law as intended, we deprive ourselves of a useful tool.

Finally, a temporary waiver of Jackson-Vanik would pave the way for more normal economic relations between the United States and the Soviet Union. I believe this would serve American interests. It is in our interest not because it would spur a vast increase in trade between our nations, but because it would clearly indicate our willingness to build a relationship based on economic reality.

A temporary waiver would be a first step toward removing the political barriers to trade in acknowledgment of the political changes made by the Soviet Union. It would indicate the American willingness to welcome the Soviets into the international trading system if it can adapt to the economic principles and rules upon which that system is based. Finally, it would be a necessary precondition for revealing the fact that it is Soviet economic weakness, not American law, that ultimately limits United States-Soviet trade.

For all these reasons, I have urged the President to immediately exercise his authority to temporarily waive the Jackson-Vanik amendment.

Since May, I have called for such a waiver. Since May, Soviet emigration numbers have continued to rise.

Senator Jackson often said that his amendment would only be deemed a success when the President could exercise the waiver provision. Now is the time to make the amendment successful.

It is disappointing that the President has failed to recognize that the goals of Jackson-Vanik have been met.

President Bush should accept victory and respond accordingly. Both the United States and the Soviet Union have everything to gain.

RESERVATION OF REPUBLICAN LEADER'S TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the time of the distinguished Republican leader. I yield the floor.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

IRA-CAPITAL GAINS

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, Americans need the individual retirement account, and America needs the capital gains tax cut. Both represent programs vital to the economic well-being of our countrymen and our country—especially if the prosperity we have enjoyed the last 8 years is to continue.

When Congress passed the 1986 Tax Reform Act which pulled the teeth from the effective IRA program, then in place, my office rang loud with phone calls from angry Delawareans who had trusted Congress' earlier IRA legislation. These people were upset that a program which has grown to represent a quarter of personal savings—much needed savings for investment in America's future—was being cut. They were upset that Congress was attacking their nest egg, stripping them of a good program that led toward self-reliance, a basic principle in the American work ethic.

The time has come to bring back the IRA—and not at the expense of the capital gains tax cut. Congress has seen the consequence of the mistake it made by cutting the IRA program.

Annual contributions declined by almost $25 billion, a serious drop that adversely affects our gross national product and America's ability to compete in the global community.

And as savings represents the means to a bright future, this was a tremendous error.

To correct the mistake, in June I introduced an expanded IRA, known as the IRA-Plus. It picked up immediate support from constituents, and then earlier this month Senate Finance Committee Chairman LLOYD BENTSEN announced his support for the expansion of IRA's. Frankly, both represent significant steps toward reviving this important program—both show this necessary step is not only possible, but also important.

However the Bentsen plan is proposed as an alternative to President Bush's capital gains tax cuts, another measure needed to encourage investment in America. To exchange one for another would be like the man who trades in the tires on his car for a tank of gas. Both are needed if the machine is to work properly and progress is to be made. More importantly, the IRA, if properly crafted, could be combined with the capital gains tax cut, instead of being a substitute for it. Handled correctly, the IRA-Plus could actually raise revenues in the early years after enactment, a necessary and attractive feature in this time of deficits.

Where Senator BENTSEN's plan will cost the Federal Government around $8 billion in its first 3 years, my IRA-Plus should actually raise revenue for the Government while providing a greater payoff for the contributor. This is done by shifting the contributor's benefit to the time of withdrawal, rather than offer the tax deduction up front like the Bentsen plan and allowing current IRA depositors to transfer their funds to an IRA-Plus—provided they pay a tax on the previously deductible contributions. My IRA-Plus requires after-tax contributions, but then allows the contributor to withdraw the earnings after age 59½ completely tax free. This gives our senior citizens the security of knowing that once they have paid taxes on the earned income during their working years, the money saved in an IRA-Plus, and all interest, will be tax free at the time of retirement.

Even if the money is withdrawn before retirement, for purchasing a home, paying for education, or covering catastrophic health care bills, the withdrawal remains tax free. BENTSEN's proposal allows for early withdrawal without a penalty, but still subject to tax. And the withdrawal can be used only for purchasing a home and paying for education. There is no withdrawal provision for catastrophic health care.

The differences between my IRA-Plus option and the Bentsen plan become even more poignant with an example:

If a couple contributes $2,000 a year from the time they're 30, and receives an 8-percent yield on their investment, they can, upon reaching age 59½, withdraw $23,080 tax-free each and every year. Under the Bentsen plan, the same investment would yield $19,618 after taxes, if the taxpayer is in the 15-percent bracket. The difference is $3,462 annually. However, if the taxpayer is in the 28-percent bracket, the annual withdrawal under the Bentsen plan would be reduced to $16,617, for an annual difference of $6,463. If the couple is in the 33-percent bracket the Bentsen plan pays only $15,464 a year at retirement.

These examples do not take into account the effect of the future value of the annual tax deduction offered under the Bentsen plan. If the tax savings is invested, the Bentsen IRA might prove more attractive, but still would not yield as well as the IRA-Plus. And the sad truth is that for most workers the income from saving with the current IRA program, or through the Bentsen plan, will be taxed higher after retirement than it would have been taxed during the earning years, largely due to the Social Security benefit tax and the Medicare surtax. Consequently, at a time when American seniors need a tax break the most, they will be faced with a higher tax bill on their retirement income.

The IRA-Plus offers the best option for Americans. It rewards thrift, encourages self-reliance, and allows families the incentive to save for retirement while providing the flexibility to cover many of life's necessary demands like home, college, and health. And by helping Americans save, the IRA-Plus, combined with a capital gains tax cut, will help America secure its industrial leadership into the future.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

INTERNATIONAL TRANS-ANTARCTICA TEAM

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise to make my weekly report from the Trans-Antarctica 1990 International Expedition. Today is day 63 in the expedition that began at the end of July in west Antarctica, and will end up in March of next year on the east coast of Antarctica.

During the last week the weather has been very poor. The team has traveled only 75 miles and is now at a point which is right here still on the Antarctica peninsula.

The weather in Antarctica this week last has been a lot like the weather has been this past week in the eastern seaboard. Wind gusts have been in the neighborhood of 100 miles an hour, much like some people have experienced with Hurricane Hugo. But this is a consistent winter like wind which has been making life miserable. The six men who are on this expedition do not live in homes like the rest of us but they spend much of their time when they are not behind their dogsleds living in tents.

Actually, the weather is bothering everyone except a dog named Monte, whose abnormally thick coat keeps him warmer than the other dogs. Besides the weather, hard crust ridges, like frozen waves formed by the winds, have made sledding very tough. The frozen ridges are called sastrugi that will be coming up again during the course of this trip at various times.

I have been asked, What do these men do when they are not behind their dog sleds? How do they spend their time when they are stuck in their tents? You have to run out of conversation after awhile. We inquired this week and discovered that the team had requested for reading the Jack London books, if you can imagine that, and interestingly enough for those of you who read poetry, and particularly what some people would call commitment poetry, Robert Service poetry.

In addition, they requested a Beetles song book. All of that is going to be delivered to them on the mid-October resupply plane.

Mr. President, in the last 2 weeks I have spoken often of Victor Boyarsky, the Soviet member of the six man team. He is 38 years of age—his September 6 birthday was forgotten because they were out in the middle of the Peninsula in the middle of a near tragedy on September 6. A member of the Soviet Arctic and Antarctic Research Institute has been on two scientific projects in the Arctic and four in East Antarctica, the Soviets have a permanent camp in East Antarctica. At the time Victor joined the team in 1987 he was not fluent in English. By the time the team reached Greenland for their 1,600 mile practice run, last winter he was speaking emotionally, if in broken English, about the importance of the expedition. Going into the trek, Victor was confident that the language barrier would be no problem. As he said there is only "one language in Antarctica, the language of keeping moving."

A veteran radio—glaciologists, Victor oversees the expedition's glaciological and meteorological studies, including unprecedented land—based readings of the deteriorating ozone layer which we disuss here in this body in the comfort of 72 degree temperature. He has also become something of a cheerleader. On the team's traverse of Greenland, Victor was generally the first to rise and make sure his fellow travelers' were awake too: Leningrad's version of an alarm clock.

Although I have focused on the men, the real heros, according to expedition leader Will Steger, are the dogs. They are the ones that do the work of pulling the 1,000 pound sleds. They pick up the scent of a snow—drifted trail and awake each morning oblivious to the cold and eager to run. Often it is the enthusiasm of the dogs that spark the men to action, not vice versa.

There are 42 dogs on the expedition—36 are pulling sleds—12 to a sled. The six extra dogs are kept at the base camp on King George Island. Driving the sleds or mushers are Will Steger, Geoff Somer, of Great Britain, and Keizo Funatsu. Most of the dogs are Will Steger's, but eight are from the highly respected Krabloonik kennel in Colorado, and five are from Greenland. The Greenland huskies are direct descendants of the dogs used in Antarctica by U.S. Adm. Richard E. Byrd, who in 1929 was the first man to fly over the South Pole.

Mr. President, as my time concludes, I want my colleagues to know that the 42 dogs pulling the sleds across 4,000 miles of ice are not pets, nor are they wild, they are work dogs bred for the weather and the work. They actually like it.

Next week I will introduce to my colleagues individual dogs, for as any pet owner knows, they do have personalities and are making the trip interesting for the six men that try to manage them.

JFK CAPITAL GAINS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is with a strong sense of the absurd that I have listened to defenders of President Bush's capital gains tax cut invoke President Kennedy in support of their scheme.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. In 1963, President Kennedy proposed a comprehensive set of reforms to reduce tax rates and close tax loopholes. It was similar in many ways to the historic Tax Reform Act of 1986, which he would have enthusiastically supported.

Yes, President Kennedy's proposal included a reduction in the capital gains tax. But it also included taxation of capital gains on assets transferred at death or by gift.

In his message to Congress in 1963, President Kennedy clearly stated:

Adoption of this proposal—meaning taxing capital gains on transfers at death or by gift—is an essential element of my program for the taxation of capital gains; certainly in its absence there would be no justification for any reduction or present capital gain rate schedules.

Does President Bush support this reform as well? The answer is no. All he has proposed on capital gains is the tax cut without the tax reform.

I have no doubt that my brother would vigorously oppose the Bush plan if he were here today. Invoking President Kennedy on behalf of this multibillion-dollar giveaway to the richest taxpayers in the Nation is intellectually dishonest and politically preposterous.

It misreads history and misleads the American people. I hope that House Members who should know better will stop misrepresenting President Kennedy's position.

THE CAPTIVITY OF TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, it is now 1,656 days that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut. I wish to once again remind my colleagues of his continuing captivity.

THE EDUCATION SUMMIT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today President Bush convenes a historic education summit with the Nation's Governors. This meeting offers a unique opportunity for the President, members of his Cabinet, and the Governors to work on strategies for reversing the education deficit.

President Bush and the Governors do not need more studies telling them how our education system is failing our children. They are convinced it's failing us—and so are the American people. They are fed up and they want action.

The President has worked closely with the Governors to shape an agenda that responds to the public's concerns. The participants will focus on teaching, the learning environment, governance, choice and restructuring, a competitive work force and life-long learning, and postsecondary education.

One aim of the summit is to begin the process of developing national goals for our education system. The American public is ready for this idea. A Gallup poll released last month found Americans strongly favor national goals and standards for public schools and national tests to determine if students are meeting the standards. What they do not want, however, is a national curriculum.

The President and the Governors will also explore the possibility of allowing greater flexibility in the use of Federal education funds in return for greater accountability for performance. I am convinced this is a trade the American people will support. Americans do not want Uncle Sam running the classroom. What they want is more bang for their education buck; and plenty of local control.

Mr. President, our system of higher education is already the envy of the world. There is no reason our elementary and secondary schools should not be the same. But to get there we will have to make changes, fundamental changes. Thanks to President Bush's leadership, we are heading in the right direction.

Now we need a renewed commitment to go beyond tinkering at the margins so we can implement real reforms. We have to give school administrators more flexibility and parents more choice; we must do more to recruit and retain good teachers; and we need to improve the curriculum and make schools more accountable for results.

These are all themes which the President has sounded and which he and the Governors will take up during the summit. I am confident that their work this week will give a renewed sense of purpose and direction to the reform of our educational system.

UNITED STATES-SOVIET RELATIONS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, earlier today I made several proposals regarding arms control efforts during a speech to the American Committee on United States-Soviet Relations. Knowing of my colleagues' interest in these issues, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my remarks appear in the RECORD at this point:

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF SENATOR ALAN CRANSTON, AMERICAN COMMITTEE ON UNITED STATES-SOVIET RELATIONS ANNUAL MEETING, WASHINGTON DC, SEPTEMBER 27, 1989

I am pleased to be here today in the company of two good friends and very distinguished Ambassadors, Yuri Dubinin and Jack Matlock. I believe it is an encouraging commentary on our times that each day the work of these two fine diplomats grows both more important and more promising.

I also wish to thank Don Kendall, Hodding Carter, and the other officers of the American Committee on U.S.-Soviet relations. Your efforts in pressing a broad agenda—through times both bleak and encouraging—have laid a crucial foundation for ever more constructive people-to-people relations in the future.

We gather today to celebrate some rather modest good news.

There is very slow, but nonetheless steady, progress across a broad range of issues on the U.S.-Soviet agenda. I wish to share briefly with you the perspective of one Capitol Hill veteran both on these developments as well as on the possibilities and prospects ahead.

Let me begin by congratulating President Bush and his team for their readiness to move ahead, albeit quite cautiously, on some important arms control issues. I am pleased that we finally have the prospect for another summit and the hope for progress on conventional weapons and start negotiations.

President Bush has deservedly won high praise for his selection of a top notch team of U.S.-Soviet experts in the national security area. I have nothing but respect for men like Jack Matlock, Colin Powell, Jim Baker, Dick Cheney, Larry Eagleburger, Brent Scowcroft and Bob Gates.

But frankly, I share the growing impatience of a number of my colleagues on Capitol Hill—including Democrats, Republicans, liberals, conservatives—that this team has been excessively cautious and timid in moving to capitalize on developments in the Communist world.

For three generations, American leaders have wished for a Soviet leadership prepared to address our security concerns. At long last it may be possible to end some of the risks and burdens of the military competition that has dominated the East-West relationship for four decades.

George Bush has in his hands the greatest opportunity for statesmanship that has faced a President since our country embarked, after World War II, on the policies recommended in a report of the National Security Council of that era, NSC-68.

That report identified the Soviet design of the world dominated by its will as the greatest threat to our national security. NSC-68 recommended that the U.S. reduce the influence of the U.S.S.R. and force the Soviets to modify their behavior through a combination of military and economic initiatives, while allowing time for the internal contradictions and weaknesses of Marxist-Leninism to emerge. "It is only by developing the moral and material strength of the free world," the document stated, "that the Soviet regime will become convinced of the falsity of its assumptions and that the preconditions for workable agreements can be reached.

Well, containment worked. The determined resolution and sustained strength of the U.S. and NATO, and the spreading realization in most of the Communist world that Marxist-Leninism doesn't work, have combined to produce the long-awaited conditions wherein workable agreements should at least be reachable.

Now is the time to respond—in consultation with our allies and with appropriate creativity—to the overtures, actions, and unilateral concessions emanating from the new Soviet leadership.

Instead, there is a ring of "business-as-usual" to the pace and tenor of Bush administration policy declarations. A flavor of bureaucratic stodginess rather than a tone of creative leadership characterizes the Bush administration response to the vast opportunities are at hand due to 40 years of resolute perserverance on our part and due to the unanticipated and incredible developments inside the Soviet Union and within the Warsaw Pact.

U.S. policy makers have just now resolved with some finality the fundamental question of whether or not we wish Peristroika to succeed. We do wish Peristroika, Glasnost, and Gorbachev well. But it looks as if it will be almost 20 months after George Bush was elected President before he will hold his first working meeting with his Soviet counterpart, Mikhail Gorbachev.

We've spent many billions of dollars for NATO military forces while committed to greater freedom for those oppressed by Communist systems. Yet now that freedom has a chance—in Warsaw, in Budapest, indeed, in Moscow—the Bush administration finds what I see as too much comfort in the status quo.

When Lech Walesa asked for U.S. aid, the administration responded with a progam totaling just 1 percent of what the Poles sought to help make the transition toward a free market economy. By contrast, while we have historic opportunities in the field of arms reductions, the administration is asking tens of billions of dollars for not one but two new land based ICBM's and funding for dozens of Stealth bombers at $500 million a piece!

What is missing from these discussions, I believe, is a greater sense of the moment, a greater sense of priorities.

We do have an historic opportunity before us, the opportunity of a life time.

We do not have the luxuary of squandering this opportunity with status quo, steady-as-she-goes thinking.

The fact is, it has been 17 years since the United States and the Soviet Union ratified a strategic arms control treaty . . . and of course we have never negotiated and ratified a strategic arms reduction treaty. I, for one, am uncomfortable with the idea that start won't be completed until 1991, as suggested by the post-mortems on the Baker-Shevardnadze talks.

We can do better.

We can do it sooner.

We can do more.

The Bush team is too competent and the Gorbachev commitment is too genuine to accept such a slow timetable as if it is carved in stone.

Today is a day for optimism. But to be realistic, let's take a moment to consider the worst-case scenario.

Many of us, I am sure, share a common fear. That is the fear that the Gorbachev experiments will ultimately fail, sparking a reaction in the Kremlin away from glasnost and perestroika, prompting regression back towards the dark ages of the Soviets' Stalinist past. I do not believe such a development is likely because the Soviets have come too far to go back. Too much of the old order has been destroyed. It does not all depend on the political survival of one man—Mikhail Gorbachev. He is an impressive leader responding to special circumstances. But these circumstances—the failing of Marxist-Leninism and the success of freedom—were recognized widely, and there were many, many people in the Communist world eager to address the challenges presented by these circumstances.

I share a fear of many on Capitol Hill that the United States will be too much of a spectator as the Soviets struggle to transform their society, as they struggle to accept some basic Western precepts about human rights, market economics and the rule of law. I fear the United States will fail to take advantage of mutual opportunities in arms reductions and a further normalization of relations.

Whether the Soviet experiment succeeds or fails depends to a very significant degree on U.S. reciprocity.

President Gorbachev is not likely to bring about truly meaningful cutbacks in Soviet military spending if we don't cut back ours.

If, God forbid, the United States plays for the status quo and the Soviet experiment fails, a bitter, divisive debate will likely ensue in this country. Liberals will castigate the White House for lost opportunities. Conservatives will counter that their critics have been naive and White House caution has been vindicated. Both sides will find confidence in having pursued a self-fulfilling prophecy. Far worse, of course, is the hard, harsh fact that if the Soviet experiment fails and the Soviets regress to a cold war posture, there will be disastrous consequences for us in terms of more and more military spending, more deficits, and increased dangers of confrontation and war.

As a member of the Democratic leadership on Capitol Hill, I have been trying to help us avoid such a tragedy for the United States.

We are fully aware of the uncertainties regarding the capacity of the U.S.S.R. to remain on its present course. I know that we must be extremely careful in any actions we take. We know that our intelligence analysts estimate that Soviet military expenditures increased in 1988 by 3 percent. We know that these same analysts warn of ambiguities in Soviet pledges to reduce defense spending and to reorient toward a defensive military posture.

But it is in our interest to test, now, how far President Gorbachev can and will go in committing his nation to actions and agreements that any Soviet successor would find it difficult to reverse.

I am heartened that, finally, the Bush team is moving on a broad range of U.S.-Soviet issues.

Over the past 48 hours we have heard some inspiring speeches at the U.N. But I think it is important for us to get beyond the rhetoric and to move more swiftly on negotiating the details. The U.S. proposal to retire some—but not all—of our mutual stockpiles of chemical weapons has the same infirmity as Foreign Minister Shevardnadze's counter that we should both freeze production of fissile material. These modest steps will remain distracting sideshows unless we address the main issues impeding a START Treaty. Destroying a percentage of our old chemical weapons—as required by Congress—will mean little if we continue to make new binary chemical weapons. Similarly freezing plutonium production won't mean much if the U.S. and Soviet Union are free to pirate retiring weapons and access our enormous stockpiles to fabricate new warheads. So while the warmth of the Bush and Shevardnadze speeches is pleasing, we still need to focus on prompt and dedicated negotiation of the central issues. These remain deep cuts in strategic arms, a comprehensive nuclear test ban, and normalized trade and emigration policies.

To get beyond rhetoric to action, there are several concrete steps we should take now.

For example, the time has come for the United States to stop hemming and hawing and to finally waive the Jackson-Vanik prohibitions on the extension of most-favored-nation treatment to the Soviet Union. Let there be no more preconditions, no new hurdles erected.

Similarly, we should waive Stevenson amendment restrictions on trade financing credits.

We should also move with greater dispatch to conclude a START agreement, to permit the opportunity for a follow-on accord before we are immersed in the politics of the Presidential election season of 1992.

In addition, we should be pushing a much more ambitious program of aid for Eastern Europe—Poland and Hungary especially—than that proposed by administration authorities. For the price of just one Stealth bomber per year, we could quadruple President Bush's meager aid effort and immeasurably advance our national security interests.

In conclusion, I would observe that for nearly a decade, executive branch policymakers were transfixed by an alleged "window of vulnerability." The debate in this country over U.S. military modernization requirements was spurred by unimaginative, inconsistent and heavy-handed Kremlin actions.

We are in a new era now. The cold war was waned, the rhetorical window of vulnerability has vanished, and the Soviet Union under Mikhail Gorbachev is daily taking bold risks at home to strengthen the ties between us.

We, too, must dare to be bold. We must not confuse the status quo with stability. We must have the wisdom to recognize that sometimes in a world burdened with 50,000 nuclear warheads it is more dangerous to stand pat than to take a calculated, carefully evaluated, risk.

Looming before us today is a more substantial window of opportunity. Each person in this room has an obligation to do what we can to see that together, the United States and Soviet leadership address these mutual opportunities and moves through this window toward a more promising tomorrow for future generations.

I thank you for all each of you is doing to realize these possibilities and I urge you onward.

THE RETIREMENT OF COOPER T. HOLT, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE WASHINGTON VFW OFFICE

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on September 1, 1989, Cooper T. Holt retired as the executive director of the Veterans of Foreign War's [VFW] Washington office. His retirement marks the conclusion of a 45-year association with an organization which is dedicated to our Nation's veterans. It is my privilege to pay tribute to him at this time.

In 1944, Cooper Holt, who was then a 19-year-old soldier stationed in the South Pacific, paid $1 to join the VFW as a member-at-large. Although he did not know it at the time, it would signify the beginning of a lifelong partnership.

In 1956, just 12 years later, Cooper Holt was elected commander-in-chief of the VFW and became the youngest man ever to serve in this capacity. In 1963 he became the executive director of the VFW's Washington office. In each of these positions, Commander Holt served with integrity, dedication, and conviction.

Commander Holt's leadership will be sorely missed by the members of VFW and by those of us who have worked closely with him in past years. The outstanding service which he rendered to our Nation's heroes, however, will be forever remembered and admired.

Representative G.V. "SONNY" MONTGOMERY, our colleague from Mississippi, has written an excellent article detailing the career and accomplishments of Commander Holt. I ask unanimous consent that this article, entitled "Cooper T. Holt: Veteran's Advocate," be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COOPER T. HOLT: VETERAN'S ADVOCATE

(By Hon. G.V. "Sonny" Montgomery)

It all started in the South Pacific in 1944. A 19-year-old soldier from Chattanooga, Tenn., while serving at Bougainville in the Solomon Islands, paid $1 to join the VFW as a member-at-large.

After service as a flamethrower-operator with the Americal Division's 164th Infantry Regiment, he, like hundreds of thousands of other veterans of the Pacific Theater, returned home to begin a new life.

A life, in the case of Cooper T. Holt, that was devoted to the service of his fellow veterans.

During a 45-year career with the VFW, Holt has held a prominent place on the front lines of some of the most memorable struggles and victories on behalf of veterans' benefits and a strong U.S. foreign and defense policy.

He is proudest of three undertakings: establishment of a full, independent Senate Veterans's Affairs Committee; upgrading of the Veterans Administration to a Cabinet-level department; and though it failed, the battle to retain America's control of the Panama Canal.

Recent events in Panama, under the autocratic control of the drug-running Gen. Manuel Noriega, are testimony to just how right the VFW's and Holt's stance has been.

"At least we scored some very important points in the fight. I don't think Congress will ever again be able to so easily give away anything bought with so much American sweat and sacrifice, especially something as strategic to U.S. security, shipping and travel," he says.

RISING IN THE RANKS

Holt demonstrated an obvious capacity for leadership with his rapid climb through VFW ranks. The organization recognized his ability in 1956 when it chose him to serve, at the age of 32, as the VFW's youngest ever Commander-in-Chief and, in 1963, as the Executive Director of the VFW's Washington Office.

A VFW Magazine writer in 1956 had this to say about Holt: "With strong convictions about national security issues and the readjustment problems of millions of young Americans, Holt recognized in the VFW a tailor-made opportunity to do something constructive about the things that rankled his sense of patriotism on national affairs and his ideas of just treatment for the country's returning veterans."

INTEGRITY THE KEY

Tough, gracious, honest, amiable and rare are just some of the words you hear when Holt's the topic of conversation. Sometimes the descriptions are a bit more colorful (and unprintable).

But they're all apt. That shock of white hair. That strong hint of Southern roots detected in his speech and actions. That disarming yet legitimate small town demeanor and eloquence.

All these qualities have drawn admiration from many quarters, especially from those who have worked closest with him.

Sen. Alan Simpson of Wyoming described Holt as "an extraordinary person . . . very tough . . . very firm, fair, honest . . . and highly opinionated."

Harry Walters, former VA administrator, and now president of Great Lakes Carbon, Inc., claims Holt can be "one tough cookie." Only those "close to the battle" for veterans' issues inside Washington, he says, can fully understand his accomplishments.

"He's like a stingray, sometimes . . . tough and effective," says Walters. "And it's all directed toward advocacy for veterans. He's a legend in terms of the way he has influenced things in Washington."

From Presidents Kennedy to Bush, he's utilized a shrewd combination of hometown charms and "stingray" skills to establish close and effective working relationships with seven administrations and 14 different Congresses.

These skills have been devoted to ensuring that the nation consistently fulfills its obligations to veterans and their dependents. Along the way, he's rated unequivocal praise from several Presidents, including the most recent.

Addressing a recent gathering of VFW conference delegates, President George Bush spoke of "a real institution of the VFW . . . He has my respect and my friendship, and I don't know what it's going to be like without him around here, I'll tell you.

"Members of the VFW, others who stand for a strong defense, whoever they may be, Cooper has earned the gratitude of veterans everywhere for making the VFW his lifelong cause, but also for the way he has conducted himself in Washington and elsewhere in this high office," said the President.

In 1973, President Richard Nixon wrote to Holt: "I am proud of your friendship and grateful for your counsel. But more than this, America is a better nation because of men like you . . . All of us have an abiding respect for the immense contributions you have made in the area of national security and world peace."

A HELPING HAND

President Nixon also spoke of Holt's "untold measure" of devotion to the nation's veterans. Among the major achievements during his tenure in office:

Vietnam Era and Montgomery GI Bills, which to date have provided education assistance to 8.4 million veterans and service personnel; Veteran Readjustment Appointment (VRA) authority, which provides for non-competitive appointments for Vietnam Era veterans to federal jobs; Veterans' Job Training Act, an innovative employment program that has put more than 53,000 Vietnam Era and Korea Era veterans back to work; home loan guaranty entitlement which is no longer for readjustment only, but is now a continuing benefit; guaranteed minimum annual income pensions for the first and only time in any government program; compensation benefits for atomic veterans; expanded statutory presumptions for former prisoners of war, guaranteeing that no disease or disability which resulted from captivity would be ignored; and entitlement (rather than a benefit) to hospital care for service connected and low-income veterans for the first time ever. (Efforts to expand this entitlement to outpatient care are under way.)

TIME OF MAJOR CHANGE

During Holt's time in Washington, the VA has evolved from an independent, largely overlooked agency with a $5.6 billion annual budget to a prestigious Cabinet-level department with a budget of $31.1 billion.

Over this same period, the VA's health care delivery system has become the free world's largest. In no small measure can many of the steps that led to this growth be attributed to the VFW and its point man in Washington.

Larry Rivers, outgoing VFW Commander-in-Chief and the man who will take over Holt's responsibilities as Executive Director, told a joint hearing of the House and Senate Veterans' Affairs Committees earlier this year: "Just as America is a nation of action, so is Cooper a man of action.

"He has established, shaped and directed our three nationally understood goals of maintaining America's military superiority, adequately funding the Department of Veterans Affairs and ensuring that all veterans receive the entitlements they have earned . . .

"First as a soldier and later as a veterans' advocate, Cooper remains committed to his country and his fellow veterans. That commitment will never change."

As dean of the delegation of national veterans' service organizations, Holt's experience and counsel have come to be commonly sought by associates, laymen and legislators. He has played a prominent role in helping shape modern day veterans' programs.

I know him well enough to say that he could never stray too far from the battle. He has his own chair in my office. That's a pretty good indication that he's a fixture up here on the Hill, and I might add, a welcome fixture. We respect him and trust him. And veterans couldn't have a more loyal or more dedicated advocate.

Holt's tenure with the VFW is covered well in his own words: "I have found in my dealings with veterans over these years that all they want and all they ask for and the only thing they demand is a fair shake, and they're going to get that."

Yes, they will, thanks in large part to his efforts. That was a wisely spent dollar in the South Pacific. Veterans will reap benefits from that investment for many generations to come.

NOBEL PRIZE FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I rise today to ask the Senate's support for a resolution urging the Nobel Commission to create a Nobel Prize to recognize achievements in the field of environmental preservation.

We have all watched environmental problems rise to the forefront of the public's attention. The world's forests are being destroyed at the rate of one Tennessee's worth every year. An enormous hole is opening in the ozone layer. Living species are dying at an unprecedented rate, 1,000 times faster than at any time in the last 65 million years. Chemical wastes, in growing volumes, are seeping downward to poison ground water, while huge quantities of carbon dioxide, methane, and chlorofluorocarbons are trapping heat in the atmosphere and raising global temperatures.

These problems are not confined within the boundaries of a single nation, but are international in scope. International cooperation is required if we are to protect this planet's ability to sustain life.

We wouldn't know about these global environmental problems, or be in a position to address them, if it weren't for the pioneering efforts of many dedicated individuals. Many of these individuals—scientists, educators, concerned citizens—have committed their lives to alerting society to the impact of its actions. The findings of environmental scientists in areas such as stratospheric ozone depletion, the greenhouse effect, deforestation, and acid rain are already leading to a profound change in public consciousness and in the agendas of all governments. It seems highly appropriate to me that those individuals who have made signal contributions to the world's awareness of our environment should receive recognition that is global in scope.

This recognition would have a larger benefit: it would generate a greater awareness of the environmental peril facing the world today and the urgent need for environmental protection. The world must act in the next decade to ward off a grave and growing danger to the global ecological system that sustains life as we know it. However, action will occur only when society becomes sufficiently aware of the danger to demand action. Public awareness of environmental problems is vital if we are to hope to overcome them.

Alfred Nobel willed that the prize bearing his name be given to those who "have contributed most materially to the benefit of mankind," be it in the sciences, literature, or the pursuit of world peace. Progress in each of these fields will falter if we do not strive to save the planet of which we are all a part.

There is already a precedent for awarding a Nobel Prize to a field not specified by Alfred Nobel's will: the Nobel Prize for Economics, which does not rely on funding from the Nobel estate, nevertheless carries with it the prestige of the Nobel Prize. Likewise, my colleagues and I urge the Nobel Commission to consider granting the prestige of the Nobel Prize to individuals who have made important contributions to the preservation of the environment, even though the funds to support such a Nobel Prize for the Environment must ultimately come from a source outside of the Nobel Estate.

Mr. President, human society can only function and progress if the life support system on which we depend—our environment—also functions. Those who contribute most to efforts to preserve this system ultimately contribute most materially to humankind.

I therefore ask my colleagues to agree to this resolution urging the Nobel Commission to consider awarding Nobel Prize recognition for achievements in preservation of the world environment. Such a prize would recognize the efforts of outstanding individuals worldwide in protecting and preserving the environment, and it would be highly effective for drawing attention to those issues that have emerged to profoundly stir the consciousness of nations.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now resume consideration of the pending business, H.R. 3015, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3015) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

Pending:

(1) Byrd amendment No. 727 (to committee amendment beginning on page 5, line 22), to provide additional funds for drug programs.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the senior Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 727, AS MODIFIED

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, under the order that was entered last evening, I believe that by unanimous consent I have been authorized to modify my amendment which is presently pending; am I correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. I send the modification to the desk.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification is received and so modified.

The amendment (No. 727), as modified, is as follows:

In the pending amendment, on page 6, line 2, strike all after the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TITLE IV—EMERGENCY DRUG FUNDING

SEC. 401. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) and notwithstanding any other provision of this or any other Act—

(1)(A) each appropriation item and loan program level provided for in appropriations Acts for fiscal year 1990 in accounts not included within the major functional category 050 shall be reduced by .300 percent, rounded to the nearest $1,000: Provided, That such reduction shall be applied proportionally to each program, project, and activity as set forth in section 252(a)(1)(B)(i) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 901); and

(B) each subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate with respect to the appropriations bill appropriating funds for fiscal year 1990 within the jurisdiction of such subcommittee shall reduce the total amounts provided in such bill for any appropriations items and loan program levels not included within the major functional category 050 by an amount of new budget outlays equal to the reduction in new budget outlays that would result from a .130 percent reduction within each program, project, and activity not included within the major functional category 050 in such bill and shall achieve such reduction by—

(i) reducing amounts provided for specific programs,

(ii) applying a percentage reduction in each appropriation item or loan program level provided for in the appropriations bill, or

(iii) a combination of (i) and (ii); and

(2) each subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate with respect to the appropriations bill appropriating funds for fiscal year 1990 within the jurisdiction of such subcommittees shall reduce amounts provided in such bill for appropriations items and loan program levels within the major functional category 050 by an amount equal to $1,318,000,000 in budget authority and by an amount equal to $797,000,000 in budget outlays and shall achieve such reductions by—

(A) reducing amounts provided for specific programs,

(B) applying a percentage reduction in each appropriation item or loan program level provided for in the appropriations bill, or

(C) a combination of (A) and (B).

If a subcommittee fails to achieve the reductions required by paragraph (1)(B) or (2), any appropriations items and loan program levels within the appropriations Act for the subcommittee shall be reduced by the percentage necessary to achieve the reduction required by paragraph (1)(B) or (2). Any percentage reduction under this subsection shall be applied proportionally to each program, project, and activity as set forth in section 252(a)(1)(B)(i) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 901).

(b) Subsection (a) shall not apply to (1) programs scored as mandatory by the Congressional Budget Office as set forth on pages 80 through 83 of the report of the House of Representatives accompanying House Concurrent Resolution 106 (House Report 101-42), or (2) the amounts provided in subsection (c).

Family Support Administration Community Services Block Grant

For an additional amount for "Community services block grant", $11,000,000.

Assistant Secretary for Human Development Services—Human Development Services

For an additional amount for "Human development services", $24,500,000.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

School Improvement Program

For an additional amount for Part F of Title IV and Title V of Public Law 100-297, $183,500,000 of which $2,000,000 shall be for section 4607, $7,500,000 shall be for Part C and $2,000,000 shall be for Part D of Title V and $172, 000,000, which shall become available on July 1, 1990 and remain available until September 30, 1991, shall be for Part B of said Title of which not less than $25,000,000 shall be for section 5121 (a) for urban and rural emergency grants.

RELATED AGENCIES

ACTION

For an additional amount for substance abuse prevention and education activities under Part C of Title I of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 as amended, $1,500,000 of which not more than $150,000 may be used for administrative expenses.

CHAPTER IV—DEPARTMNENT OF THE TREASURY

Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Salaries and Expenses

For an additional amount for "Salaries and expenses", $10,000,000.

U.S. Customs Service Salaries and Expenses

For an additional amount for "Salaries and expenses", $18,000,000.

Operations and Maintenance, Air Interdiction Program

For an additional amount for "Operations and maintenance, air interdiction program" for the procurement of helicopters, surveillance, tracking, and intercepter aircraft; and operation and maintenance expenses for these and other assets of the U.S. Customs Service air interdiction program, $35,800,000.

Customs Forfeiture Fund (Limitation on Availability of Deposits)

For necessary expenses of the "Customs forfeiture fund", an additional amount not to exceed $5,000,000 as authorized by Public Law 100-690; to be derived from deposits in the fund.

Internal Revenue Service Investigation, Collection and Taxpayer Service

For an additional amount for "Investigation, collection and taxpayer service", $5,000,000, solely for activities related to the criminal investigations division.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Office of National Drug Control Policy Salaries and Expenses

For an additional amount for "Salaries and expenses", for activities related to the designation of high intensity drug trafficking areas, $25,000,000.

Special Forfeiture Fund

For expenses authorized by section 6073 of Public Law 100-690, not to exceed $115,000,000, to be derived from the Department of Justice Assets Forfeiture Fund, and to remain available until expended for prison construction purposes.

CHAPTER V—DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

VETERANS HEALTH SERVICE AND RESEARCH ADMINISTRATION

Medical Care

For an additional amount for "Medical care", $50,000,000, to remain available until expended.

DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

HOUSING PROGRAMS

Payments for Operation of Low-Income Housing Projects

For an additional amount for "Payments for operation of low-income housing projects", $50,000,000: Provided, That such amount shall be made available, notwithstanding section 9(d) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, for grants authorized under the Public Housing Drug Elimination Act of 1988 (42 U.S.C. 11901, et seq.).

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, when the President takes the occasion to go before the American people, it is usually a matter of the gravest urgency. Such was the case when President Bush took to the airways on September 5, 1989 to declare a national commitment to wage war on drugs.

I commend the President for declaring the war and for proposing a plan, as the 1988 omnibus drug bill passed in the 100th Congress mandated that he do. I support the President's plan to deal with the supply or enforcement side of the problem, and I have responded to his pleas for teamwork by offering a plan that funds every penny of every dollar that the President asked for. But the 1988 drug bill, signed by a Republican President, stressed attacking the problem right here in our own streets of Washington, DC, or Sutton, WV, or Martinsburg, WV, and elsewhere in our own streets, with an equal emphasis on the demand side. And the provisions of that Anti-Drug Act of last year reflected a 50-to-50 split in funds for suppressing the supply side and funds for reducing the demand for the supply of drugs.

The President's plan provided a 73-to-27 split, favoring the supply side; whereas, as I have already indicated, the Anti-Drug Act reflected a 50-to-50 split between supply and demand.

As the President pointed out in his televised speech, drugs are coming into our country because there is a demand for them. if there were no demand for them, they would not come into the country. If they could not be sold, they would not be sent here.

Mr. President, they will continue to pour in as long as evil people are able to sell them and tormented people are eager to use them, despite the best efforts of Customs officials and law enforcement personnel. The 1988 drug bill rightly recognized that the root of the problem of drugs is demand for drugs.

For fiscal year 1990, the President asked for $6.4 billion in his February budget for the war on drugs. In June, he requested an additional $1.2 billion in his anticrime package. And in September he requested an additional $700 million for the war on drugs. These figures are rounded out to the nearest millions. So that totals $8.3 billion.

After reviewing his request in the manner in which the President asked Congress to fund his program, I had two major concerns: One, the President asked us to fund his drug and crime package by taking an ad hoc approach. He would have us make specific program cuts wherever we could find them from our regular appropriations bills in order to pay for his increases. In other words, cut your program, cut your program, cut your program, cut your program, but do not cut my program. Do not cut my program.

I felt that that approach would result in shifting the pain for funding the war on drugs to a few select programs. It would pit program against program, agency against agency, Senator against Senator. It was a formula for a stalemate. Therefore, although I normally oppose across-the-board cuts, in this instance I felt that that was the only approach that would be fair and evenhanded and had a chance of enactment.

The second difficulty that I had with the President's drug proposal is that his requests are tilted toward enforcement by a ratio of 73 to 27. While I fully support the President's request for enforcement—every penny of the President's request for enforcement, I support it, every dollar—his request for prevention, education, and treatment was inadequate, particularly, in the light of the authorized but unfunded programs for prevention, education, and treatment that were contained in the Anti-Drug Act of 1988.

So because of these concerns, I instructed my staff to go to each of the 13 Appropriations Subcommittees and ask these two questions: First, how much of the President's $8.3 billion anti-crime and drug request could they fund within their 302(b) allocations. How much can you fund under this budgetary straitjacket within which you are operating? That amount for all of the subcommittees totaled $6.2 billion, or $2.1 billion less than the President's request.

The second question I asked: How much additional funding for drug programs authorized by the Anti-Drug Act did they feel was justified, based on the evidence before them, based on their hearings. That total came up to $1.6 billion. In addition, the Commerce, Justice Subcommittee added $200 million for juvenile justice and delinquency prevention programs to the President's crime request.

So the total of the so-called Byrd Democratic amendment consisted of three parts: $2.1 billion needed to fully fund the President's drug and crime request, plus an additional $1.6 billion for prevention, education and treatment, plus $200 million for juvenile justice and delinquency prevention programs. That totaled $3.9 billion.

The original Byrd Democratic amendment of $3.9 billion, plus the amounts recommended in the regular appropriations bills, totals $10.1 billion.

When added to the $6.2 billion, the ratio for the total $10.1 billion Byrd Democratic plan then was 65-35, as against the President's 73-27.

This compares to the President's ratio of 73 to 27 in favor of enforcement.

Shortly after I offered this amendment, the majority leader asked me to chair for the Democrats a bipartisan working group to attempt to reach a compromise between the Byrd/Democratic plan and the President's requests. Senator HATFIELD, my distinguished colleague from Oregon and the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee, was asked by the minority leader to chair the Republican side of the working group. The Democratic members of the group, in addition to myself, consisted of Senators INOUYE, NUNN, SASSER, BIDEN, KERRY, HARKIN, DECONCINI, and HOLLINGS. The Repubican members, in addition to Senator HATFIELD, consisted of Senators D'AMATO, DOMENICI, STEVENS, WARNER, HATCH, GRAMM, RUDMAN, and THURMOND.

These discussions ultimately led to the agreement which I have now offered on behalf of Senator HATFIELD and myself as a modification of the pending Byrd/Democratic amendment. This agreement was approved by the task force and has come about only after many long hours of intensive negotiations.

Mr. President, I put 10 days of my life into negotiations on this matter and a few more days than that when I consider the work that was put into the formulation of the amendment in the first place.

I feel rather strongly about the matter and I think that it is a good agreement. It does not go as far as I would have liked to have gone. It does not go as far as I would have gone. But it is a good step. It goes farther than the President would have gone and that is important. The President wanted a bipartisan war and so I am in their helping to fight it on a bipartisan basis.

This agreement was approved by this working group and has come about only after many long hours of intensive negotiations. Senator HATFIELD and I have put some extra days into this. We have been here on some long evenings and we have not confined our discussions entirely to the usual 5 working days of the week either.

The amendment calls for fully funding, fully funding, Mr. President; every penny that you requested is in this modification, every penny. You said you wanted it done quickly. It is being done quickly. It is not exactly your way, but the point is that we are both fighting the war on drugs. That is what we all are doing and each of us cannot have it exactly his own way. But the important thing is to get on with the war on drugs and make it effective, forceful and in a way that will meet with the approval of the American people and I think that they want us to move and move quickly and put the necessary force behind it.

So it calls for the full funding of the President's anti-crime and antidrug budget requests plus an additional $800 million for prevention, education, and treatment and an additional $100 million for local law enforcement grants.

That is more than the President asked for, even on the supply side.

The specific programs that are included in the modified amendment have been agreed to by the chairmen and ranking members of the Appropriations Subcommittees which have jurisdiction over them.

The adoption of this amendment, when added to the anticrime and antidrug funding in the 13 regular appropriations bills, will total $9.4 billion in budget authority.

We will be fully funding the President's request for drugs and crime $8.3 billion. In other words, there was $7.9 as he announced it in his September television appearance, but there are $400 million additionally in his June anticrime package. So that makes $8.3 billion, plus an additional $800 million for prevention, education, and treatment; plus an additional $100 million for local law enforcement grants; plus an additional $200 million for juvenile justice and delinquency prevention.

So, we total that in this manner:

President's crime and drug requests, $8.3 billion;

Prevention, education, and treatment, $0.8 billion;

Local law enforcement, $0.1 billion;

Juvenile, justice, and delinquency prevention, $0.2 billion;

Total package, $9.4 billion.

That is $1.1 billion higher than the President's requests and $700 million less than the $10.1 billion Byrd Democratic plan.

So we have to give a little and take it a little.

To pay for the increases in this amendment, an across-the-board cut of 0.300 of 1 percent will be made in all nondefense fiscal year 1990 discretionary appropriations. An additional 0.130 of 1 percent will be reduced by these Appropriations Subcommittees in their conferences with the House through specific program cuts or by an across-the-board cut, or by a combination thereof.

For defense discretionary programs, the same 0.430 of 1 percent reduction will be applied to the defense discretionary programs but, the subcommittees will have the ability to take this entire cut from specific program reductions if they so choose in their conferences with the House.

So while we came out with the even-handed approach across the board, 0.430 of 1 percent for defense discretionary programs and foreign operations, we did allow flexibility in the Defense Department as to how and where the cuts would be applied.

So, we yielded on that point to the other side.

To the extent that such reductions are not found, the necessary across-the-board cut to all defense discretionary appropriations will be made.

In the event that the necessary cuts amounting to $1.318 billion in budget authority, $797 million in outlays in the Defense Department are not found through the selected approach then the across-the-board reduction will apply.

The total 050 reduction will be $1.318 billion in budget authority and $797 million in outlays for defense.

So, this proposal gives the President every penny he asked for, but also provides for more emphasis on education, prevention, and treatment. We must have strong law enforcement to protect our citizens from the violence that the drug culture fosters. But we must also begin a war on dependency.

And we have to begin that war like we mean it.

We must teach our children that taking drugs is not a high, but a low. We must educate every child in America about the sickness that drugs will bring to the body, the mind, and the soul. We must attack the image that a pill can make you cool or that a shot can eliminate problems or that selling crack can win respect. That is basic, and we have to start now to salvage as many as we can from the horrors of dependency on drugs.

For those who have already fallen prey to addiction, we must treat and rehabilitate. Every crack addict turned around means a little less crack that a pusher can sell.

Every addict gotten off the street means a little less violence, a little less mugging, a little less knifing, a little less shooting, a little less killing.

Changing attitudes and treating substance abuse mean committing resources. You get what you pay for. There will be no improvement in the violence, no lessening of the illegal drugs powering across our border until we purge drugs from our national psyche as well as from our citizens' bloodstreams.

To fail to commit those resources to this side of the problem is to fight only half the war. To heavily fund law enforcement without a sufficient emphasis on education, prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation is to fund but half of the war. It is to fight the war with one hand behind your back. That approach is like providing the air cover without sending in the ground troops. It will not work. The victory will not be ours. And just as in any other lost war, money and lives will be wasted.

We need to start with all the ammunition we can muster. The American people are alarmed, and well they might be, when they cannot walk within a block of the Capitol without the danger of being held up, robbed, shot to death for a few dollars to spend on drugs. The American people are alarmed. The scourge of drugs jeopardizes the family structure, and the very moral fiber of this country.

The war within our borders is in many ways a more terrifying and insidious threat to the future of America than any war on foreign shores. It is a real war. It is a shooting war. People are dying.

So we must not be timid. The American people must not be told that we can do this on the cheap. They know better and it is time that we understand that. They know when a problem is so important that it demands a major commitment, and they want results. They wanted more done than the President proposed, and this proposal helps to bridge the gap and gives them more.

The President said to read his lips—no taxes. And so, in formulating the plan, I heard the President. I read his lips. And so I added no taxes in this bill. Added none. I also read the American people's lips. They wanted more. And so we have produced more.

My original plan contained four important principles, which I am proud to say have emerged in the compromise. It provided more money for education, treatment, and prevention—the demand side—and an equal percentage cut to pay for the drug war from both domestic discretionary and defense programs. It accomplished all of this without increasing the deficit. So it is deficit neutral, and it did this without raising taxes.

This is the first step. We will need to do more as time goes on.

And the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] is currently holding hearings on new and imaginative ways to attack the drug plague in America. But, an initial strong first step is crucial. Weak shots across the bow will not cripple the garbage scow of drug violence and drug dependency.

I think we owe the American people our best effort. I think this proposal represents the strongest first step we can make to win the war against drugs.

I would have made a stronger statement. But legislation is the art of compromise. So I think that we have done the best we can do for now.

And a great deal of the effort, a great deal of the time, the energy, and the credit are represented by my friend, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD], and to all those on the working group who have worked hard to bring up this modification of this compromise.

I thank the leadership for its support. I thank my own leader for his encouragement and his unstinting support. I thank both leaders for making it possible, finally, for us to offer this modification today.

I thank Members on both sides of the aisle, all Senators who participated and worked hard on this difficult problem.

I yield the floor now. I hope that my distinguished friend, Mr. HATFIELD, will seek the floor and speak.

Let me say again that I cannot be more grateful than I am to Senator HATFIELD. I would daresay that had it been left up to the two of us, this matter would have been brought to the floor a week ago. And I have to say as I have said in the meeting, had it been left up to the Members on both sides of the table, the working group, we would have resolved this long before we resolved it.

I can understand, on the other side of the table, that there is a necessity for them to touch base with the White House. Sometimes that, I suppose, took longer than it might otherwise have taken. It wore upon my patience, I have to admit, of which I have a tremendous store, patience and tenacity. To my colleagues who put in their time, I daresay that their patience was worn, also.

So we would have done it faster.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DECONCINI). The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I affirm the analysis of this proposal before the Senate as presented by the chairman of our task force, Senator BYRD, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I also associate myself with his evaluation of the extraordinary effort that went into this proposal, and the efforts of multiple numbers of staff and Members.

I have been in many negotiations over my public life period. I must say I think in these negotiations, which dealt with probably the most important issue facing the American public today, the drug problem, and with the intensity of feeling that we all have in raising up an army to combat this drug problem, an army of experts, of law enforcement officials, of counselors, and of treatment centers, and with all of the pressure and leverage that was put on this task force from all sides to get this job done and done quickly, I must say, I say to Senator BYRD, that I thought that there was an absolutely phenomenal discipline amongst all the Members. We kept our frustrations and tempers in check.

But I must say that I think it was probably the most professional session of this kind that I have engaged in. I think a tremendous amount of that credit goes to the chairman. Leadership is always the key to any effort.

And Senator BYRD, you have provided that leadership. I am proud to be a part of that effort that you led and to bring this product to the floor.

Mr. President, I do think that at this point we have to focus not so much on the description of this plan which has already been offered, but let me say that when the Congress mandated the President of the United States to come up within a timeframe with a strategy to deal with his war on drugs, the President complied with that mandate.

President Bush offered that in the first period of September, and it was a plan that was hammered out by his staff people. Formulation of the plan was led by William Bennett, the drug czar, or the leader of the anti-drug effort. Mr. Bennett is a man of great intellect, a man who comes into this job with a proven record as former Secretary of Education, and as the holder of other public trusts.

Congress received that strategy, that plan. The President also offered an implementation of that plan through a funding system of selective offsets.

We may differ on the funding system. But there is not one iota of difference in our determination to wage this war. I say that commitment has no center aisle separating the Democrats from the Republicans, or the Congress from the White House, or the political leadership of the Congress and the White House from the people. This is one of those issues where there is unanimity.

I know of no citizen who has written me or has called my office saying, "I am opposed to the war on drugs." And we do not find many issues which have the kind of unanimous support and willingness to respond to the call to arms that the war on drugs has.

But I think there are and can be very sincere, valid differences as to methods of implementation. So let me point out, the problem was not differences in commitment to a war on drugs that caused us to have to go through this period of negotiations to come up with this package today. There was no difference of opinion as to that commitment.

The difference was how best to implement the strategy, how to define our goals, and how to make certain we all understand the marching orders that we, in turn, will depend upon the people to respond to. Because this is not a battle that can only be waged by the politicians, the Members of Congress, the White House, the President of the United States, the agencies of the Federal Government, the local agencies, or the political leadership at the State, county, or city levels.

This war calls to arms all of our people. It is a total war. It is not a selective war to be fought by the professionals or by the uniformed soldiers. It incorporates all the people of this country and all the institutions of this country.

I have often attempted to describe this problem and this issue. To me, the drug problem is like a cancer that has metastasized. You cannot identify it simply as cancer of the liver or cancer of the throat or some specific part of the body because it has metastasized, it has permeated every facet of our society today.

We used to think of drugs as an urban problem. I realized that especially on a trip a couple of years ago which began at the mouth of the Columbia River at the town of Astoria, in the northwestern part of our State. I went through 3 days of writing and visitations, down the entire Oregon coast, 429 miles of coastline, every town—and most of them are small towns—every town along that coastline. And there was not one coastal community that did not indicate that they have a drug problem. Not one. Every one of those towns in terms of their leadership and the persons I met within in business or in agriculture or in the professions or in the mills, or the workers, not one failed to recognize that they had a drug problem. This problem was even recognized some 300 miles from Portland, down at the southern point of the State in the town of Brookings, on the California border. From this one experience, so I do believe we can say this drug problem has metastasized in the society of America.

Mr. President, when the President of the United States, Mr. Bush, submitted his drug plan, he suggested that certain programs be offset to fund the drug strategy. I must say that, as Chief Executive of the United States, I can understand his philosophy. I must say, as Governor of Oregon for 8 years, I faced the Oregon Legislature with requests for reduction of budgets in order to meet our State constitutional requirement for a balanced budget and the legislature often sent up an across-the-board cut for me to sign, and I refused to sign it.

In refusing to make such an across-the-board cut, I say that when we are dealing with, say, a budget of only $30,000 a year, which was the watchmaker's licensing board composed of one person, namely a secretary, and an office, and we reduce that budget by the same percentage that we reduce the budget of, maybe a $300 million special highway construction program, it was not equitable. It was not fair. It was highly inequitable because the base lines of reduction are totally different and the meritoriousness or importance of each program varies.

I can see reducing, maybe, some highway construction program by postponing expenditures. But I was not ready to reduce mental health or aid to the poor by the same percentage.

In fact, I used to refer to the legislature as using the meat-axe approach to budgeting. They did not want to make the tough decisions. I will tell my colleagues what the tough decisions are, they are selecting between important programs.

Having that background as a Governor, and I am only speaking from that background, I think it can be argued that we in the Appropriations Committee make those tough decisions every single year. We have to set priorities through the 302(b) allocation process, between this program and that program. We involved in the appropriations process do that all the time.

So I think one can say from a philosophical point of view we can argue the benefits of an offset of selected programs as against simply making across-the-board cuts.

But the problem I had with the President's initial package, and the problem I think many of us had, was answered by the original Byrd amendment, which provided that there should be burden-sharing for the war on drugs on an across-the-board basis which impacts every agency, no exceptions, because of the totality of this problem.

The perception was the President's plan in its selective offsets had gone easy on defense, the largest of all the budgets that the Appropriations Committee and ultimately the full Senate and House have to act upon year after year; a $305 billion budget for fiscal year 1990 alone.

So, the across-the-board method of funding which, more accurately I suppose, should be expressed as total burden-sharing by all Departments, was the strength, was the appeal of the Byrd amendment.

When Senator BYRD called me, after having put this amendment together in data form and before introducing it, as a very gracious courtesy to me, I indicated I would be willing to cosponsor his amendment because I felt it was very important to broaden the base of funding this drug strategy, especially in the very largest of budgets.

Frankly, if I were speaking from my personal philosophy, I would have advocated funding the whole drug war from the Defense Department budget. I would have easily found that money in one or two weapons systems. But I had to be realistic, as we all have to be realistic in this body. If we had initially come out of our conversations and introduced a drug proposal on the floor and stated that we are going to fund the whole drug war out of the defense budget, I think we would have ended up on the minority side of that vote.

I suppose then the argument could have been made that it was just as inequitable to fund the drug package from only one part of the Federal budget as it was to try to fund it by using across-the-board cuts for each account. So I think we have here again one of those compromises that, if I personally wrote it, I could have written it better. If any one of my colleagues here on the floor, Senator BYRD or Senator BIDEN or Senator KENNEDY, had each had the individual right to write this proposal solely on their own and make it the proposal of the Senate, we could have all written it better.

But we have a distillation process here. We are a collegial organization. We have to have 51 votes. We might have a perfect bill, but without sufficient support, the effort becomes moot.

Consequently, what we have here is a happy melding of across the board cuts, with certain cuts to be instead, determined by the chairman and the ranking member in consultation with the chairman and ranking members of the authorizing committees.

It is interesting that when we first proposed this method to certain individuals in the administration there was, I could sense, an immediate reaction, a negative reaction. But I could also see that when we indicated the names of the leaders from both sides of the aisle who could be charged with the responsibility of hammering out a plan, there was also a recognition that there would be a very responsible role played by those leaders and the rest of the Senate. Those leaders have tremendous stature and much confidence was placed in them.

Yes, we consulted with the administration all along the way. I want to thank Dick Darman of OMB. I want to thank Bill Bennett, the drug czar. I want to thank Governor Sununu, Chief of Staff. And I also want to thank Secretary of Defense Cheney, former Congressman Cheney, who had, of course, tremendous interest in this. Their spirit of cooperation was very evident from the beginning because, I say to Senator BYRD, they wanted a solution and they wanted to get on with this war just as much as you and I and all the Members of this body.

Mr. President, I want to take a couple of minutes just to apply this plan to a couple of specific situations. When one looks at numbers of this scope and magnitude, it is very difficult for the average person outside this body to translate these huge figures, billions of dollars, into the front line of this war on drugs.

I come from a State with about 2.7 million people. When Los Angeles began to put the pressure on the gangs roaming their streets many of them moved north. We have today counted and documented 1,000 gang members in our city of Portland, which is a city of a little over 400,000. They have terrorized neighborhoods; they have terrorized individuals as they ply their drug trade. We can count the assaults and the murders, and the wounds. All of these things indicate that we have a very high ratio of gangs to population, and it is one of our major problems.

Mr. President, we are now going to have an infusion of money to fight this war on drugs. But, sometimes we get lost in dollars. We think one more dollar is going to buy one more dollar's worth of security, or one more dollar's worth of solution to a problem. That does not necessarily follow. We have to recognize the requirement of cost-effective spending. The dollars are but a tool, but a method, but a medium to achieve these goals. We are going to have an infusion of financial support to expand the law enforcement resources across the country and my State of Oregon.

Mr. President, Oregon is the third highest producer—I hate to say this—of marijuana. We have thousands of acres of wilderness, thousands of acres of public forest lands and BLM lands that have become a growing place for marijuana. The third largest producer. Now it is so competitive on these public lands that the marijuana growers literally have established arsenals and military defenses around their growing operations—barbed wire, booby traps—so that if you invade their territory, which is all public land, you are risking your life. Out of this drug package, we are going to have the opportunity to get control of such situations.

I also hate to say that my State ranked the second in the Nation last year in methamphetamine laboratory seizures. The second highest of any State in this country.

A few years ago, I got an appropriation of $500,000 to set up a demonstration project in my State for the clean-up of these drug labs. It is not just a matter of arrests. What do you do with the toxic chemicals that are produced in these labs and how do we protect the lives of our firemen and our police?

We had little protective clothing; we did not know what to do with the house after we raided it and shut down the lab; or what to do with the toxic residue from that lab. There was no standard; there was no formula. Now we are developing guidelines that will aid law enforcement agencies in the cleanup of these dangerous labs. There now is a fund in our appropriations bill of $2 million to provide demonstration project cleanup grants to local jurisdictions, and this amendment is going to add another $2 million to that fund.

Mr. President, in the ADAMHA Program, our largest treatment and prevention block grant to State governments and local institutions to fight this war, I am pleased to say that $463 million will be added to the Senate mark of $815 million. Oregon received about $8 million in fiscal year 1989. Under this amendment, the State will receive an estimated $12 million, $4 million above last year. That is going to be very helpful for expanding treatment of drug abuse victims and for broadening education and prevention efforts in my State.

Let me make a point concerning the amount of spending; we have studies that indicate that additional resources only can be absorbed at a certain rate. One study shows that a 20-percent increase per year can be absorbed in these programs. You may want to argue whether 20, 25, 40, or 60 percent is the absorption rate is not the issue. The issue is that under this package, if we are going to be able to expand treatment, we have to have people who are trained professionals to provide the treatment. We have to expend the resources necessary, to support the centers, the equipment, and all of the things that are required for meaningful treatment and prevention programs.

You cannot simply add more treatment dollars and expect to get more persons treated. You must have sufficient personnel and the facilities to carry out that treatment. So this now adds to the expansion of the infrastructure. Some of these grants in the drug package have a percentage match requirement—75 percent Federal, 25 percent State. Without this amendment that match will increase to 50 percent Federal, 50 percent State. However, legislatures are not meeting at this particular time in States that have a biennial session, so those States cannot adjust their formulas immediately. This amendment delays implementation of this new match for 1 year, so these States will have the opportunity and the time to do so.

So I think we have to recognize that we are not just dealing in dollars. We are dealing with how they meet a certain demand and how they can be utilized in this war most effectively. I wish we could stand here today and say there is a known treatment that is going to cure every addict. We cannot say that. There is a rate of success that we can determine, but this calls for more research, which is a part of our war on drugs. This package increases funding for drug and alcohol abuse research.

I hope out of these specifics we can see that this is a total effort to deal with a total war. As a result of this package we are going to be able to expand the number of NIH grants awarded for researching effective treatment for drug and alcohol abuse and addiction. I think research is one of the most significant, and probably will be the least reported, part of this bill. The expansion of research grants will help us develop a better system of treatment and a higher success record for those we are treating.

Mr. President, I will bring my remarks to a close. I think any one of us can cite all kinds of examples of tragedies that we have within our local constituencies, within our families or within our realm of friendships, people who are victimized by drugs. I do feel that as the President gives leadership to this war, as the Commander in Chief not only of the military forces but of every cause that we are fighting, and considering the kind of generals and admirals represented by the leadership in this body and that of the House, and by the mayors and the Governors and all the other public officials we do not have to put a draft call out. We do not have to adopt a selective service system to form the troops. The troops are already out there. All they are waiting for is the plan of attack, the orders, and they are ready to march. We now have that plan of attack.

Senator BYRD has mentioned the cooperation we had amongst our colleagues. I will not repeat all of their names on both sides of the aisle. Anytime we may be reflecting on this day or this period in our public service and this event, I think it will be noted by all of us as probably one of the most significant time investments we have ever made and what leadership we have provided has been significant for the long-term interests of this country.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield to me for no more than 2 minutes.

Mr. BIDEN. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator from Oregon. He has explained the concept in a way that brings it right down to the local level so that the people out there can have a better understanding of how the moneys are being applied and how the infrastructure is being put into place by this package. I think that was very necessary and I thank him for that.

I also, Mr. President, want to state that there are certain legislative areas of this package that could only be dealt with in my opinion by the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and others with whom he kept in constant contact—Senator KERRY, Senator KENNEDY, and on the other side Senator THURMOND. Those amendments relate to the uses of the drug funding. They have to do with requiring the agencies to issue the guidelines and the regulations, and so forth, to set the standards that State and local governments will have to meet in order to receive the funds. So I think that was a side of this whole effort that I must give total credit to the Senators that I have mentioned. I depended on Senator BIDEN almost for the whole part within the working group in this area, for reasons that are understandable and obvious. I thank him for the excellent work he did.

I thank them all, but also I have to thank Senators INOUYE and SASSER and NUNN and WARNER and THURMOND and TED STEVENS, those who were probably along toward the last most involved, along with Senator BIDEN.

Finally, if the Senator will allow me, let me thank all the staff people. There has been an extraordinary staff effort on both sides of this aisle, utilizing a great number of people. I will try to put into the RECORD a list of the staff. I will have to have help with the names but for now I want to mention Barbara Videnieks, my chief of staff; Jim English, who sits here with me on these matters. He is the director of the Appropriations Committee in the Senate; Keith Kennedy on the other side, his counterpart; Jack Conway and Ron Klein of the Judiciary Committee; Dave Williams of the Budget Committee; David Lyles of the Armed Services Committee; Martha Pope and Kim Wallace in the majority leader's office, and Bill Hoagland of the Budget Committee; Sheila Burke in the minority leader's office; Mary DeWald of the Appropriations Committee staff. There are others. I will not take time of the Senate now. Their names will be printed in the RECORD. I deeply thank the staff people. They have put in hours and hours. Jim English has been in on Saturdays; he has been in on Sundays; I have been with him on those Saturday and Sundays, not all of them. As Milton said, "He also serves who only stands and waits." These are people who do more than stand and wait. They really render tremendous service to the Nation. Out of the depth of my heart, I express my very warm appreciation and gratitude for people like these who give beyond the call of duty who give beyond the measure of their salaries, give because they, too, want to serve and are professionals in every sense of the word. They are able, they are congenial, and in many instances they do not have to be asked to come in. They know there is work to be done. They are there. I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding.

Mr. BIDEN. I thank the Senator.

As the distinguished chairman knows, almost all of us would yield to the distinguished chairman whenever he asks, we particularly if I knew he was about to praise us, praise that is not deserved in my case, but let me speak to staff for a minute. I will not take a lot of time at this moment, but the fellow sitting next to the Senator, Jim English, I was dumfounded during this entire process in that when Senator BYRD would turn to him and say, "Jim, can you run these figures off in the next 10 minutes?"—and the figures we are talking about were billions of dollars, crossed accounts, determining what was appropriation and what was outlays and what was authority—Jim would calmly look at you and say, "Yes, Mr. Chairman." The first time he said that I thought he was just patronizing, but in fact he was not. Ten minutes later he came back.

There are a number of people; Ron Klain, and Scott Green from my staff were here all the time, as we know, and others. But I would like to make a special reference—and I guess you are not supposed to do this so much, but I really think one of the reasons this package was put together, beyond the Herculean efforts and the negotiating skills of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, was because of Jim Whittinghill and Sheila Burke over on the other side. When the other team does not want to play, they can make it awfully difficult for you, but I have always found whenever I have dealt with either Jim or Sheila they are completely straight. You never have to worry about whether or not you are getting the straight facts.

I am probably ruining their reputation by praising them. They will become suspect, I expect. But, I have complete and total trust in anything they tell me. It is nice, going into a negotiation, knowing that the team with whom you are negotiating, their chief negotiators in terms of staff, are people you never have to wonder about. So I pay public tribute to them and to a number of others.

I am going to engage in one other piece of praise.

In my view, had the negotiating team been headed by anyone other than Senator BYRD or Senator HATFIELD, we would not have had an agreement for two, I might add for the record, at least from my perspective, totally different reasons. In the case of Senator BYRD, everyone here knows—and I suspect everyone in the White House knows—when he sits down and says "That is as far as I am going to go; I have made what I believe to be a fair and considerate offer; this is it" everybody knows this is not a poker player. This is a fellow who came to play, made his best effort, and he is prepared to play by the rules. If the rules cannot be worked out down in that negotiation, they are going to have to come up and play them on a field that he has mastered, in fact, better than any man that I am aware of in the 17 years that I have been here, and I suspect as well as any man or woman who has ever served in the U.S. Senate.

So quite frankly, Mr. President, this would not have been a deal no matter how well conceived had he not been negotiating.

As far as MARK HATFIELD, MARK HATFIELD is decent and open, so forceful in his views and his convictions that you never have to doubt where he is either.

So I thank them both for making what I believe to be what has been characterized as a very significant step, a very positive addition to the President's well-intended and well-conceived start on this new effort that the Nation—not just the President—as a whole has concluded we must undertake which is a serious, genuine, all front attack on the drug problem.

The points I want to make to go beyond the negotiation because no one could have explained it better than Senators BYRD and HATFIELD. They have done that well as they always do. But the debate here has never been about need.

I am not going to take the Senate's time any more than I have any time on this floor on this issue over the last about 11 years now. We all know the need. We all know every one of our hamlets, villages, towns, cities, and counties, big and small, are in trouble with regard to the drug issue. We all know without any question whether you are in a household that makes a million dollars a year or a household that is on welfare, you are not immune to the problem of drug abuse and the violence that it spawns.

So I will not go into the need. The need is clear. The debate here on this floor now, and for the next several years—a legitimate, honest constructive debate—will be not about the need but about sufficiency. That is the issue. That is the reason Chairman BYRD came along, and said, "Mr. President, I am not only going to find you a way to fund your drug proposal, every penny that you want." He said, "We Democrats promised we would fund that. And we will. Everything you want. Every single thing you want." He said "I will find you a way to do that." He then went on to say, by implication at least, "But the question of sufficiency has not been met, the test of sufficiency has not been met. Therefore, Mr. President"—and I am not being facetious when I say this—"in an effort to help you command that war, we are going to give you more ammunition."

And the interesting thing is I do not think there are 15 Republicans and 2 Democrats in this entire body that disagrees with the need for more than what the President was asking for.

The distinguished ranking member from Oregon, MARK HATFIELD, Senator HATFIELD, said a moment ago he traveled the 400 and some miles of his coastline from village to village. He said there was not a place where there was not a drug problem. Then he said in Portland, OR, a beautiful city, there are over a thousand gang members. Then he said Oregon, that magnificent State, is the third largest producer of domestic marijuana.

Well, let me take just those two points to make my case about sufficiency. The President's proposal unfortunately did nothing to deal with those gang members. The President's proposal, in order to fund his proposal, suggested that the very institution we set up years ago, the juvenile justice program, which is a vehicle that the Federal Government uses to try to make progress against gang violence and juvenile delinquency in America, that is the very vehicle the President proposed to cut in his drug strategy.

I say to the Presiding Officer, if there are 1,000 gang members in Portland, how many do you think there are in Los Angeles, Houston, Philadelphia, Miami, New York, or Chicago?

So I want to make a point crystal clear. When we Democrats responded to the President's proposal, we did not do so in a partisan way.

We said, Mr. President, what you offer, we will take all of it but, Mr. President, you are not being ambitious enough. We have a fundamental disagreement. We fundamentally disagree with his strategy. You will hear people say, "Well, there is no real disagreement on the strategy." I disagree. There is a fundamental disagreement on the strategy.

For example, the President sets as a goal. He wants to reduce—I say to my friend who is not here from Oregon—he seeks to accomplish in terms of domestic eradication of marijuana, he seeks to reduce in 2 years 10 percent of the marijuana produced and grown in Oregon and the rest of the Nation.

I wonder if the Senator from Oregon thinks that is a sufficiently ambitious goal. I wonder if the people of Oregon agree with that strategy. Do they only want a 10-percent reduction?

In fairness to the President and Dr. Bennett, the amount of resources they are willing to commit to their position will probably only reduce it 10 percent.

But the issue is, if you commit more resources and more imagination, can you reduce it by 30 percent in 2 years, or 50 percent? So make no mistake about this. This is a fundamental debate about sufficiency and about the strategy.

Let me move on to another point. This is, in fact, a first step. What everyone should understand is this very important addition, this very important correction, this very important addendum that Democrats and Republicans unanimously agreed to, saying that the President's proposals was insufficient, insufficient, because the President's ambitions as to what he thinks we can do are not as broad as what the Senate thinks we can do. No question the President would want to do it. It is a question of what we think we can do.

This body came along, as Senator HATFIELD points out—and is about to make, I predict, very significant changes in the President's approach, in his strategy. We are putting more, for example, in this very small addition; we are adding 2,000 more police officers to the President's strategy. In this change we are making, to reduce these to practical terms, if we took the President's strategy, it would only allow us in the next year to have the hope of maybe reaching one out of every four pregnant addicted women, all of whom within the next calendar year will give birth to addicted babies, drug-addicted babies.

Under this proposal, under the leadership of Senator KENNEDY—who I might add, knows more about education and treatment, what works and what does not work, than anyone else in this body. He has devoted more time to it, and as we will soon see, as this debate begins to unfold over the next year as to the degree of sufficiency, he will, in fact, be able, to educate us all, as well as the White House, on what more we can do.

On the pregnant women issue, this small change will be able to have the prospect of getting one in two of those pregnant women, instead of one in four. That is a big deal. That is a lot of difference.

Senator KENNEDY and I will—I will not speak for him because he is here on the floor and will speak in a moment—I think he shares my view believing that if we were willing, we should have a program in place within 2 years where all pregnant women who are addicted could, on demand, have access to treatment.

We do not have that capability now, not because we are incapable, but because we are not willing. So we have fundamental disagreements here on the strategy, but we have gone part way, and I might add with the enthusiastic support of our Republican colleagues, to the best of my knowledge, at least the ones who were part of the negotiating team.

We will also, with this change, undertake the largest expansion of drug education programs in our history.

Let me suggest to you what this agreement does not—I emphasize does not—encompass. It expressly states that this debate about sufficiency and goals that we are about to resolve is only for the purpose of getting us by these appropriations bills, or to put it another way, the next several weeks. This Senator, and others, fully intend to continue to try to bolster the defenses available to the mayors and Governors and mothers and fathers and police officers and treatment people for the remainder of this year.

It should not be interpreted as in opposition to the President. It is not. It is because we believe strongly that we need to do more, be bolder and have more imagination, and have higher expectations. It is a little like if the President came forward, as he did in 1978-79, and the Senate came along and said, Mr. President, your defense strategy is not sufficient, and they insisted that he take more money, that he build more planes, that he build more ships. No one suggested then that the Senate at the time and the Congress at the time was somehow against the President.

This is not about the President, about the Congress; it is about the prospect over the next 2, 4, 6, 8 years, so we can make life a little more livable in our inner cities, and we can offer a little more hope to those parents trapped in inner cities; and their children will have some prospect of escaping, escaping the scourge of drugs, that we will be a little bit safer in our neighborhoods; that we will have a little bit better chance; that we will have a society that will not begin to come apart and decide to trade in its civil liberties and its civil liberties at home for what they think will be a little greater guarantee of their safety. Those tradeoffs do not have to be made.

So what you are going to be hearing from the Senator from Delaware and others for a while, after this debate is over, is that there is still much more to do.

The President sets out goals, his strategy, in the goals he seeks to accomplish. The President, for example, says in terms of overall use, he wants to see drug use dropped by 10 percent by 1991. We believe there should be a 37-percent reduction by 1991.

That is not an arbitrary figure that the Senator picked out of the blue. That relates to the degree, the decline, what we have been having over the last 4 years and what is possible, because it is already happening, approximately 2 percent per year in so-called casual use.

The President says his ambition is to see that adolescent drug use drop by 10 percent by 1991.

We believe it is possible based upon the past track record that it should be a 47-percent drop by 1991, based upon the current drop over the last year from the previous 2 years.

The President says on so-called occasional cocaine users, those people who use less than once a month, he says he wants that figure to drop by 10 percent. It is already dropping by more than 10 percent per year, and he says he wants it dropped by 10 percent in 2 years.

We believe and the medical experts with whom I have spoken believe that should be a 30- to 32-percent drop in the next 2 years as a reasonable goal, achievable. And then the so-called hardcore drug users, cocaine users, currently there are over 850,000 hardcore, which we refer to in parlance as the addicted cocaine users.

The President's goal is—to use his phrase; it sounds good—to cut the rate of increase by 50 percent. Let me translate what that means. That means the President will deem he has been successful in dealing with hardcore addicts if the number of cocaine addicts is increased by only 110,000 new addicts by the year 1991.

We believe that is not an ambitious enough goal. I do not call it success if 2 years from now we stand here and say we have won, and let me tell you why we have won. Two years ago, we had 850,000 cocaine addicts, and now we have almost 1 million; that is victory. We have to disagree with the goal.

Admittedly, that is probably all the President will be able to do given the resources he is willing to commit. But we want to debate the goal, the strategy. We believe there should be a 10,000 net cut of hardcore cocaine use in the next 2 years, and it should drop from there.

With regard to another goal, and that is the question of monthly adolescent cocaine users, we are much closer to the President. We think his goal is more realistic there. He says 20 percent in 2 years. The medical experts we speak to say it should be closer to 27, but that is not arguable. Everybody is in the ballpark there.

With regard to drug-related medical emergencies, he wants to see that drop by 10 percent in 2 years. These are measurable statistics. We think that should be 20 percent, and we have reason to state why we think that.

Again, with regard to education, one of our problems with the President's proposal, as the Senator from Massachusetts on the floor knows better than me, he does not set many goals in his proposal. He does not set out in here what he hopes to attain. So we believe we should set it out.

For example, we believe by the start of the 1991 school year, we should be able to establish comprehensive drug education programs in every school, grades K through 12. Maybe that is too ambitious, but we should debate it.

It is not even part of the President's strategy, yet as the Senator from Massachusetts will tell us all later, education we know works. You do not have to guess about it. We know it works.

I will not take the time to go into the rest of these, but let me just mention a couple areas and I will conclude; because this is to foreshadow what will be a genuine spirited, I suspect, but completely honest, well-intended difference of opinion that we have with the President's proposal, and Mr. Bennett's.

In law enforcement, we think in 6 of every 10 cases involved, 6 out of every 10 people who are arrested on a drug offense have their case dropped. Six out of ten arrestees—they are not guilty, necessarily; they are just arrestees—but 6 out of 10 cases are dropped.

We think we should set a goal, in means by which we can measure it, that that number changes. The reason being if it changes, we know that what the President intends and what we intend is working. In other words the more prosecutors, and more judges, and more jails, have helped.

To put this in perspective, we believe on the law enforcement side we should be doing more to help the State and local law enforcement communities.

Granted, the President is doing more. He has upped it to $350 million and we have today, increased it another $100 million that is eligible for State and local law enforcement. But as the Presiding Officer knows, there are conditions set upon States being able to have access to that money.

For example, one of the conditions set out in strategy, if we are to accept it and adopt it, a precondition for any locality, any city, any State to get any money for their criminal justice system would be that they would have to spend an estimated $244 million minimum on a drug testing program in order to qualify to get the $350 million.

Maybe we should do that. I think there is a straightforward, honest approach being taken by the President which says, hey, look; the Federal Government should take less of this burden and the States should take more of the burden. That may be right. I disagree with it, but maybe that is right. But we are going to debate that. That is a fundamental difference in strategy.

With the President's proposal, for example, if all this drug strategy the President is proposing, and we will pass it all, all of it in terms of dollars, all of it is being passed, you know how many more police officers will go to the city of Los Angeles to help fight drugs? Not very many and Richmond, VA, won't get many either.

The point being here that we should have a little bit of truth in advertising, because I am the chairperson of the Judiciary Committee and deal so much with the law enforcement agencies around the country. I get all kinds of calls, "Senator, great, what is coming our way?"

I will bet you if I say to the Presiding Officer that when he goes into his State, as he does all the time, the next four cities or towns he goes into if he asks his local chief of police whether or not he thinks help is on the way for his department from the strategy, I will bet him lunch in the dining room downstairs—I guess I am not allowed to do that. That is a joke; I am not allowed to do that. I revise that. I figuratively speaking bet him lunch in the dining room downstairs that everyone will look at him and say, gee, Senator, when is the help coming?

I bet you they expect that help from the Federal Government is coming to them in terms of being able to augment their police agency, just like LEAA used to do, and other programs. I respectfully suggest to the Presiding Officer, and he already knows this, he should tell them: Hang on; I am not sure much is coming.

Maybe that is a good strategy. I think not. I think the Federal Government should be playing a bigger role in helping the States, notwithstanding they have surpluses. They should be doing more, too.

Let me say to my colleagues that there has been a very positive step taken by the Republican leadership, as well as the Democratic leadership here, to see to it that we move forward on the President's drug strategy.

We on this side of the aisle promised when the President spoke that we would give him everything that he wanted in terms of the resources, and we would pay for it. We have kept that commitment. The press corps, when I make that statement on behalf of the Democrats, asked me how I was going to do that, I had to tell them I do not know yet. But I know there is a will in this body to do it, and we will find a way. Through Senator BYRD's leadership, we found the way.

The second piece here is that we have concluded at the outset that the President's progam was not sufficient, and this first fora of an addition here is one that just deals with the most glaring insufficiencies in the President's progam, and we are going to deal with those today.

There is a third piece that is part of this overall compromise that will not be debated today, and I hope no one will confuse it from this point on. The President speaks often of this crime bill, his crime bill, as if it's something fundamentally different than his drug bill, and he has been known to say of late that the Senate, the Senate Judiciary Committee in particular, yours truly in particular, has held up his crime bill.

I want my colleagues to know that practically all of the money and programs that the President wants in his crime bill, were also included in the President's drug strategy. And no one ever told the chairperson of the Judiciary Committee, yours truly, that the crime bill was supposed to be added on top of the drug bill strategy. I am prepared to do that if he wants. But I have been informed of what I knew all along, that the crime bill was made part of the drug strategy. They are one and the same, but for three provisions that have little to do with drugs. One is capital punishment. The second is habeas corpus reform. The third is the exclusionary rule.

So when the President speaks of the crime bill, let everyone understand that that is what he is talking about. He is not talking about more police officers. He is not talking about fundamental changes in prosecution. He is talking about those three incredibly controversial issues here that over the 17 years I have been here never fail to tie this body up in filibuster.

One last point I am going to make as it relates to the crime bill and the drug strategy. I have held hearings on this in the committee, but it is one of the things—and I admit I almost claim a point of personal privilege because it irks me so much, it frustrates me so much. I am going to say it here.

The President and some of his spokespersons constantly say in speeches that they want the Congress to move on in providing the death penalty for drug kingpins. So we had a hearing. The head of the criminal division, Mr. Dennis, speaking for the administration and the Justice Department, appeared before my committee several days ago on a much broader death penalty bill introduced by Senator THURMOND.

I said, and I am paraphrasing, "Mr. Attorney General, are you aware that the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives passed a bill, signed by President Reagan, that is now law and has been law for almost 10 months that provides the death penalty for drug kingpins?" He said, "Yes, I am." I said, "Are you aware that that covers any murder that is related to one that is ordered by a drug dealer, one that is committed in the commission of certain drug crimes," et cetera, and I went through the list. He said, "Yes."

I said, "Then I am confused. For the President of the United States either has speech writers who have no notion of what the law is"—which I suspect is the fact—"or the President, when he says he wants the death penalty for drug kingpins, is talking to you and the Attorney General and not to us." And he said, "What do you mean?" I said, "Is it not true that you have had this law for 10 months and you have not brought one single solitary case asking for the death penalty? Not one single solitary case. So he must be talking about you."

And he said, "No, he is not." I said, "Well, there have been over 300 murders in Washington, DC, most drug related. Are you telling me none of them qualifies under this?" He said, "No, I am not telling you that." Then I decided that it was more fair and merciful to drop the subject.

But let me just make one other point. I said to the Attorney General's office—and, please, I want my colleagues' staffs to hear this so that they can inform Senators of this. Please, as a personal favor.

I said, "Is there any change at all, is there any legislation, anything, no matter how small, that the President is asking the Congress to do to change the law with regard to the death penalty for drug kingpins?" And the answer was, "No."

So I do not know what the President is talking about when the President says he wants the death penalty for drug kingpins. He has it. They have not enforced it. I am not criticizing them for doing that. That is their judgment, not ours. But he has it.

And so the last part of this package relates to the crime bill which we will debate at a later point. But when you hear the crime bill mentioned, understand we are talking about habeas corpus, exclusionary rule, et cetera; we are not talking about a big old bill called the crime bill that deals with helping police officers, et cetera.

Anyway, I thank my colleagues for their indulgence. Once again, I compliment my colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle, for they had a difficult job. They had to negotiate not only for their own views but protecting the White House interests at the time, which I think they did both well. I enjoyed being with them.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I join with those on the floor this morning in commending the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, in bringing these negotiations to a successful conclusion with Senator HATFIELD and in the bipartisan effort that hopefully will be accepted this morning by the U.S. Senate.

Senator BYRD had stated earlier in the year that he was committed to try to find a funding mechanism for funding a down payment on the war on drugs. And that is really, as Senator BIDEN has pointed out, what we are doing on this day. He has, through his energy and insight and resourcefulness, developed an approach on this issue which I think meets some of the important areas which had not received the full attention and the commitment in the war on drugs, and has done it in a way which will add an important infusion of resources to this effort.

So I commend Senator BYRD. As I have seen over the period of time that I have been a Member of this body in the area on the substance of various issues, he is openminded to the interests of the various membership as well as to the committees. I have valued very much his strong commitment and support, particularly in the areas of education and research and the prevention aspects of the war on drugs.

I also wish to commend Senator BIDEN. He has an extraordinary understanding of the challenges we are facing in our society. He understands the importance of interdiction and law enforcement. He understands the relationship between law enforcement and education and rehabilitation. There are important opportunities for linkage there that can make an important difference in the war on drugs. I think he has a balanced view about how we ought to allocate resources, and I think he has really an understanding about the scope of the challenges that we are facing and what is really needed in our Nation if we are really going to come to grips with this particular challenge.

Mr. President, the outcome of these negotiations will be to provide some extremely important resources in the areas of education, prevention, rehabilitation, and some important money in terms of research. Effectively, 75 percent of the funds recommended by President Reagan are going to be what we consider the law enforcement function. This is in spite of the fact that the President had signed the omnibus bill over a year ago, which basically allocated about 50 percent in terms of demand and 50 percent in terms of supply.

Then under the Bush administration, when we had their recommendations to this Congress and to the American people, it again followed the 75-to-25 proportion.

The only difference was they defined the problem somewhat differently. They said what we will do is give a third to the international efforts on interdiction, we will give a third in terms of law enforcement, and a third in terms of the demand side.

When we basically move those particular items under the supply and demand side, we know that it moved it very heavily, in terms of the interdiction, and in terms of the law enforcement.

There is an important role for interdiction. There is an important role for law enforcement. But any effective program must have a balance which I think ought to skew that particular balance in the way of dealing with the demand side.

I believe if we eliminated every coca plant in the world tomorrow and were able to extinguish it for 6 months and did nothing in terms of the demand side, should those plants come back in 6 months we would have the exact same problem we are facing today. We are going to have to deal with the root causes.

Frankly, Mr. President, I am not as pessimistic as some of our colleagues and others, in trying to deal with the demand side of the particular challenge. We have seen a dramatic change in behavior among American people, for example in the area of smoking. With the exception of teenage girls and inner-city youths, there has been a dramatic decline by the American people in smoking. We are seeing a significant decline nationwide, in the consumption of alcohol.

In my part of the country, up in New England, it is even in greater decline than other parts of the Nation. People will respond to these kinds of behavioral changes. I think it is essential that we have that same kind of alteration in terms of the demand side for abused substances. And we ought to be about it.

We have impressive evidence that when we do provide information, particularly to young people, about the dangers of substance abuse, as the Michigan study and other studies have demonstrated, there is a significant decline in use among young people in this Nation. We cannot get away from it. And still we are only, now, at the tip of the iceberg in terms of the numbers of people actually receiving education: About 70 percent. All students receive some education. But in evaluating the various education programs it is about half of that that receive decent education programs.

We are not just talking about education isolated. We are talking about an education program that is going to be combined and tied in to community activities and community groups. That is the kind of education program that is really effective.

Just teaching about the dangers of drugs in the classroom, just exhorting young people about the various challenges they are going to face, is really not going to work. It will not work. But we do find important evidence that resourceful and creative educators have had a dramatic effect; we have seen dramatic changes and alterations.

For example, yesterday in our Human Resources Committee the principal, Jeff Miller, of an important high school in Dade County in the inner city, in what is known as basically drug alley, with perhaps one of the highest rates of school dropouts of any school in Florida, was able through the support of the community, support of the city, support of Dade County, support of the State, support of the business community, to move the dropout rate to 1 percent last year, and not have one drug-related expulsion in that school last year. It was a dramatic change.

In listening to the young people who had been tied into drugs and how they were coping with their particular challenges, the whole movement and turnaround in terms of that school, this principal believes that the war on drugs can be won. But, as Senator BIDEN has pointed out the strategy and the way he approaches this issue is different than what has been announced in terms of the national strategy.

We are very hopeful through the committee, working in a bipartisan way, that we will be able to demonstrate some of the important success stories, not only in that high school but the Kansas City program which has an important and dramatic impact in reducing substance abuse; the Seattle program dealing with gateway drugs, marijuana, alcohol, cigarettes—that has had an important outcome as well.

We have to be able to demonstrate to the American people what programs work, what programs do not. We have to be able to build into any of these areas important accountability. And that has been built into this particular proposal: Important accountability.

Mr. President, I want to express, again, our appreciation to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, not only for the allocations of resources, but also for the way that those resources are going to be utilized; to insist on accountability, to try to use the various success stories that we have had, to build on that, to not let another year go by where we would just be adding additional resources. And to do that in the area of education and also in the area of prevention.

As was pointed out frequently, there will be no magic silver bullet. We are going to deal with each challenge, whether it is crack addiction, cocaine addiction, or otherwise. But we can make important progress dealing with those individuals and treating those individuals and reducing crime dramatically; in ensuring those who free themselves will not repeat.

I will include in my full statement some of the important statistics that have been done, not just in a handful of cases, 10,000 individuals, 25,000 individuals, 10 years out. Maybe they are not cured in the complete sense, in the way most of us would think a particular ailment is cured, but what we have seen in a dramatic reduction of crime, a dramatic increase in employment, dramatic increases in being free from returning to crime.

That to me is impressive progress. It does not do all the things we can do but it does help free ourselves from the kind of violence that is taking place in the communities across this country, the explosion of crime, the dramatic increase we have seen now in terms of child abuse in the last 3 years. There has been a dramatic increase in just about every major city of the country going right up through the roof.

We have vastly overburdened child counseling agencies. We are not only getting child abuse, we are getting a dramatic explosion of parent abuse, with individuals having this addiction going back to their homes, assaulting their parents and grandparents—crimes, frankly, I find just beyond imagination.

If we talk to some of those involved in local law enforcement, Bob Morganthau in New York, read through or listen to his testimony about what is happening across our landscape, it is something we just cannot minimize.

So, we have to try to find programs and emphasize and stress accountability; find those programs that are working. In the meantime we have, as Senator BIDEN and as Senator BYRD and others have pointed out, to try to deal with the particular problems of expectant mothers who have addiction. We do make important progress in that area.

In reviewing what is happening in the State of Florida, if we take those children who are born addicts, children of mothers who had an addiction 2 years ago, preparing them for kindergarten is going to cost the State of Florida for that 1 year, $700 million. So, we, as a society, are eventually going to have to understand we are going to spend on the front end or we are going to spend on the back end.

It makes no sense to spend and just throw money at the problem. But what we are doing now, I think, with this particular amendment, is strong accountability, strong commitment in a bipartisan way toward recognizing the importance of continued research but importantly in the areas of education and also rehabilitation and treatment.

Mr. President, again I commend Senator BYRD, Senator HATFIELD, Senator BIDEN, and the leadership on both sides of the aisle for the constructive bipartisan compromise we have achieved.

Many of us felt from the beginning that the drug strategy was a good start, but that it failed to match the goals we share with resources adequate to meet them.

The shortfall was particularly serious in two key areas—prevention and treatment. If we have learned anything from the failures of recent years, it is that law enforcement and interdiction—important as they are—cannot do the job alone. Treatment and prevention are at least as important, and at least as cost effective.

The compromise before us is an impressive vindication of that fundamental point. Virtually all of the additional funds allocated to the war on drugs above the administration's original proposal are earmarked for programs in treatment and prevention.

In a sense, the compromise for fiscal year 1990 is a victory for a more enlightened approach to the war on drugs, but it is also a challenge. I hope that a year from now, when the appropriations for fiscal year 1991 are debated, these programs will have proved their effectiveness so convincingly that we can continue to close the gap that has denied them fair priority in the past, and that has caused us to lose ground in a war we must win.

I also commend the leadership for the satisfactory compromise they have developed to finance these additional resources. None of us likes across-the-board cuts.

Some of us don't like cuts in social programs, because they have already been cut to the bone in past years.

Others don't like cuts in defense, although it is hard to see why programs like the B–2 bomber and star wars should continue to enjoy extravagant funding, when other parts of the budget have been decimated so much. This compromise is a realistic resolution of that controversy; it is appropriate that many programs should give up a little, in order to fund the war on drugs that we all agree deserves more resources.

There is no problem that is of more concern to the American people than drug abuse. And with good reason. The drug epidemic is turning neighborhoods across the country into war zones. Forty percent of all high school seniors have used an illegal drug in the past year. An estimated 375,000 babies are born every year to women who have abused drugs during their pregnancies, and the evidence is mounting that many of these children may face life-long disabilities. Child protective services throughout the country are sinking under a tidal wave of drug abuse, child abuse, and neglect.

The news about the drug war—bad as it is—is not all bad. Casual use of drugs has dropped almost 40 percent in just 3 years. The evidence is strong and growing that prevention/education efforts have been working and can work better if more schools and communities can be helped to adopt the best model programs.

Between 1986 and 1987, cocaine use among high school seniors dropped 19 percent. Between 1987 and 1988, it dropped another 23 percent. This dramatic decline in use was the direct result of a growing national recognition that even occasional use of cocaine is dangerous.

Well-constructed demonstration programs have shown even greater success. Young students enrolled in the Seattle Social Development project reduced their use of the gateway drugs of cigarettes, alcohol, and marijuana by one-third compared to students not in the program. Among older students who went through the Kansas City comprehensive school and community based prevention program, use of marijuana and cocaine was less than half as high as among those not in the program.

The news about the effectiveness of treatment programs is also good. A National Institute of Drug Abuse study of 24,000 drug abusers who entered treatment in the late 1960's and early 1970's showed that treatment sharply reduced drug use and crime and increased employment—even when users were studied 12 years after the initial treatment. The just-released treatment outcome prospective study of 10,000 abusers entering treatment in the 1980's found similar positive results.

But despite the proven effectiveness of prevention and treatment, current resources are woefully inadequate. More than 70 percent of current Federal spending goes for law enforcement—not prevention or treatment. Only 50 to 75 percent of schoolchildren receive any drug education—and the proportion receiving effective education is much lower. The Federal Government spends less than $4.40 per student per year on drug prevention.

The record is no better for treatment. According to the National Institute for Drug Abuse, only about 15 percent of addicts can be treated annually at current spending levels—and we would need to increase spending 40 percent just to provide the same quality of treatment we provided in the 1970's—even if we did not treat one additional addict.

The President's plan to fight the war on drugs said all the right words about the importance of prevention and treatment, but it did not match the rhetoric with the resources needed if we are to fight the war on drugs effectively. Priorities under the President's plan would still be tipped 70 percent to law enforcement and only 30 percent to prevention and treatment. School-based prevention programs would increase only by 70 cents per child. Treatment resources would expand by only enough to treat an additional 2 percent of drug abusers.

As a result of this bipartisan agreement, the amendment we are considering today will enable us to wage the war on drugs in a more realistic and balanced way, with more appropriate emphasis on the critical areas of prevention and treatment.

I commend Senator BYRD and Senator HATFIELD, the bipartisan leadership of the Senate and the many others who have worked skillfully over the past 10 days to reach this successful compromise. I urge the Senate to adopt it.

I urge a favorable vote on this amendment. The Nation needs and wants an all-out war on the scourge of drug addiction. This amendment begins to give us the weapons we need to fight that war.

So, Mr. President, I just again want to commend those who have provided leadership. We recognize that with scarce resources, we are going to have to show results. We understand that. We are going to try and work with our colleagues to be able to do it. Again, I thank the Senator from Delaware for his kind remarks and for his constancy in terms of this whole effort and for the leadership he has provided.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? At this time, there is not a sufficient second.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, did we get the yeas and nays on the amendment, as modified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was not a sufficient second when it was requested. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition? The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. KERREY].

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, do I understand correctly the current business is the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia? Am I in order to speak to that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. It would be in order to speak to that amendment.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, at the moment of the vote on the drug agreement, let me join my colleagues in expressing my appreciation to the distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate, the Senator from West Virginia, who is also the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

He has performed a very valuable service to our Nation as we try to confront this terrible problem in our midst. He has found a way for us to reallocate needed resources without the need for new tax revenues. And he has gotten all this done after having started with less than 30 days remaining in our fiscal year.

It is a remarkable accomplishment, worthy of praise, and recognition. His work will save lives and improve the chances that America will succeed in triumphing over this terrible enemy.

Mr. President, let me take this opportunity to make several other observations that I believe are worthwhile.

First, this across-the-board spending reduction that have us $2 billion of savings was endorsed by all 55 Democratic Senators. Fifty-five Democratic Senators agreed to reduce the budget by $2 billion and to apply the money to the solution of a problem that carries a higher priority—in this case, the violence and destruction that are a consequence of illegal drug usage in America.

I think it is clear that Democrats are willing and able to match their priorities with discipline.

We offered a $2-billion reduction in spending to be reallocated to a higher priority. But the administration said no. They would only agree to allocate $800 million more to drug programs.

Mr. President, I have suggested that we take that $1 billion and spend that money on another American problem that has a high priority: growing U.S. debt. I have suggested that we in the Congress show the American people that we know how to pay off the debt, that we know it is done a little at a time, that we know it is done by exerting the discipline not to spend the money on things that have a lower priority.

My suggestion, however, is not acceptable. It is not practical, I am told, because it will break this agreement that was put together after much work. I am told that our procedures will not allow us to take this action. And I regret this very much.

The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee has convinced me that there is a better and more appropriate place to fight this battle. I have unequaled respect for the Senator from West Virginia and have heeded his advice. However, I want to put my colleagues on notice that I will be back.

There is a second observation that I believe is worth nothing, Mr. President. I also believe the action we are taking is significant because it is the legislative branch exerting spending constraint upon the executive branch. It is the legislative branch, specifically the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, who found the realistic and acceptable way of providing the off-setting funds to finance the drug program additions so that our actions would not contribute to the deficit. He did not propose cuts which he knew could not be adopted. Instead, he asked all appropriations subcommittees to contribute to a reallocation of resources.

In this case it is the executive branch that is out of control. Our President wants to go to the Moon and to Mars. He wants us to declare war on drugs. He is worried about our children. And he is concerned about our environment. He says we need to do something—for gosh sakes—about Poland and Hungary.

There seems to be something new every day that the President wants to spend money on. Yesterday it was Third World debt. Today it is education. Tomorrow, who knows.

The President has more good causes than most occupants of the White House, and for this I am sincerely grateful. Unfortunately, he also has less money. The U.S. debt almost tripled while he was helping President Reagan recover from the wasteful spending of President Carter.

Again, I restate my gratitude to my colleagues for exercising the fiscal discipline needed to find the money for this new, higher priority.

As I have said, I believe there is a higher purpose in our need to pay off the growing U.S. debt. The interest payments—particularly the foreign payments that reduce our standard of living—are growing faster than any line in the budget. The Federal Government is broke and cannot adequately respond to any new international or domestic problem that has not incorporated itself as a savings and loan.

I also believe there is a higher purpose in challenging some other assumptions which produce Federal spending that would not be necessary if the assumption fell. Consider, for instance, the claim that accompanies the strong antichemical weapons statements made by President Bush: the United States intends to continue producing new chemical weapons to modernize its stockpile at a reduced level. Modern chemical weapons will be sold as safer, cleaner, and more reliable—able to overcome the problems in the old weapons.

The main problem with the old will be in any new: We do not like the way they kill people, except in executions. Modernized or not, Americans find these weapons abhorrent and would not support their use. Libya and other countries know that. Therefore, I do not believe that these weapons deter. The Soviets are willing to eliminate all of theirs and we should be willing to do likewise. This is another opportunity to find savings that will reduce the deficit.

Let me challenge another assumption. The President says he is willing to drop his insistence, in arms control negotiations with the Soviets, on a ban on mobile weapons provided Congress makes available funds for such a weapon. Consider the opposite proposition: Congress refuses to make funds available, therefore the U.S. position is that we insist on a ban. What happens then to the "we need this new weapon, or new modernization," as a bargaining chip?

In reality, we are deterring an enemy that is facing a public that wants food, soap, housing, and other essentials. The Soviet public wants a little more than the stuff they have seen at May Day parades for the past 70 years. The assumption which needs to be challenged is this: The Soviets are more dangerous now than before. The facts cause me to reach the opposite conclusion.

What is a danger to us now is our inability to effectively address growing internal problems: rising despair amongst poor Americans; less than desired performance in our schools; a health care system that is inhumane and irrational. The great danger is that our leaders will convince us that the enemy is still external to us.

Mr. President, I join my colleagues, both Republican and Democrat, who have praised the distinguished President pro tempore, the senior Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee who has worked very hard to put together a compromise agreement. I congratulate as well all who participated in putting together this particular agreement.

Mr. President, I would like to make several observations about what has just transpired. There are several things about it that I consider to be remarkable, and I consider to be as well very noteworthy, not just for my colleagues but also for the American people. First of all, the Congress of the United States, the Senate of the Congress of the United States has made a judgment to exercise fiscal discipline, to make a reduction in one area and then to reallocate that savings into an area of higher priority. Perhaps most significant, Mr. President, is that 55 Democrats in the Democratic Caucus agreed to support the proposed reduction of spending to be allocated to a higher priority as presented to us by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia. It runs against a common myth, in fact it runs against many things that are being said about Members in the Democratic Party in the U.S. Senate. We exercise fiscal discipline because we see a higher priority. It was identified, in fact, in this case by the President of the United States in his September address to the Nation, a higher priority. He calls upon us to exert some discipline, to make reductions in other areas and then reallocate them into this area, this drug problem that all Americans want to solve and we have, I think, done a good thing.

All Americans should thank the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I believe, Mr. President, because there will be Americans who will receive treatment who otherwise would not without this allocation. There will be Americans who will be educated as to the dangers of drug and they would not have been educated without his effort to bring some discipline to the process at hand.

The administration unfortunately, I believe, has made the judgment that $2 billion is too much; that the savings that we proposed of $2 billion was too much; that more like $800 million dollars is all that we should spend on this top priority the Nation faces. I think it was a mistake.

Further, Mr. President, I have suggested to my distinguished colleague, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that we should take that extra billion dollars that we have saved, and we have indicated we are already willing to reduce, we have an agreement to make the reduction, we should take that billion dollars and allocate that to a very high priority as well, and that is the reduction of debt that the United States of America continues to accumulate. That should be our bag of crack cocaine that we hold up to the Nation and say, "This is how we reduce debt." We understand that in order to reduce debt, we have to exercise fiscal constraint; we have to find some reductions in order to be able to reduce the debt that the United States of America continues to accumulate.

I know, Mr. President, that you have campaigned hard and spoken very eloquently to the people of Virginia and to the people of this Nation about what our Federal Government is going to itself, about how the Federal Government of the United States of America not only is broke in its current condition, but continues to borrow in order to fund our current consumption because we do not have the will either to make the reductions or to pay for the things we need.

Mr. President, it is a significantly high priority for this Nation to address that debt because our standard of living in the future is imperiled if we do not. In the 1980's, this Government borrowed $800 billion, to buy the things we said were desperately needed. We borrowed $800 billion and it is not enough that we borrowed it just from the American people. We also began to borrow it from foreigners. Today, Mr. President, 6 cents out of every dollar that is spent by the Federal Government is borrowed from foreign borrowers.

Last week, we were notified that we are currently paying more in interest and dividend to foreign investors than foreign investors are paying to us. Mr. President, that is going to mean that our standard of living is going to decline, and it is connected to this problem of drugs that we have identified as a high priority because the people who will pay the biggest price, the ones who will suffer the most are lower- and middle-income Americans whose standard of living will decline first. It is apt to affect the people in Congress the last who are paid $89,500 a year. We are apt to be affected by our borrowing patterns last. It is a first priority for me, Mr. President, and I wish that we could have found a way to take that billion dollars and burn a billion dollar bond and retire a billion dollars worth of debt and show the American people we know how to do it and show that Democrats know how to do it in particular.

I appreciate the advice my distinguished colleague from West Virginia has given me that now is not the right time and place to be offering such an amendment. But I promise my colleagues I will be back because the problem, it seems to me, is growing and it troubles me deeply that we permit it to go on without addressing it as I think we all know that we should,

There is a second observation that I would make, Mr. President, that has occurred right now that I think is remarkable and that is that it is the legislative branch exerting fiscal constraint. It is the legislative branch saying things have gotten out of control. And we are going to apply across-the-board cuts in order to restore some order to the process.

Typically, in these sorts of situations, it is Congress that is out of control, and the executive branch must step in and exert some constraint and say, "You are spending too much. I have got to control you. You have an appetite that exceeds our ability to feed, and you have to slow down."

In this case it is Congress acting in the presence of an executive branch, that has gone out and talked about all kinds of things that the American people ought to be buying, we ought to go to the Moon, to Mars, we ought to fight a drug war, fight a war on crime, help Poland and Czechoslovakia, we have to be doing something in all sorts of areas.

I am grateful that the President of the United States has all kinds of good causes. Unfortunately, Mr. President, we do not have the money for the causes that the President has identified. It is remarkable, it seems to me, for us to be standing here right now with the Congress, the body that is typically thought of as the one that is out of control when it comes to spending, saying this must stop.

We have to exert some discipline so that we are able to say to the American people that we have been fiscally responsible. It is a remarkable event. Again I give full credit to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, the Republicans and Democrats who participated in this agreement. I think it is an agreement that will benefit America. It is one that I support fully on the fiscal side and for what this additional spending will enable us to do.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, what we are about to do is very important. I have enjoyed some of the comments I have heard from the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. He does raise some interesting points.

We are spending this country right into bankruptcy. That is why the President did the best he could to come up with an aggressive, decent, antidrug abuse program. I always thought that $7.9 billion was a lot of money. But no sooner did he file his program, which almost everybody has said is comprehensive, covers the matter, does a good job, and all we have had is criticism ever since by certain people in this body as well as in the other body.

I want you to know, Mr. President, I rise in support of President Bush's plan to attack drugs in America. He has sent to Congress a comprehensive strategy to wage our fight against the epidemic of illegal drugs. I support the President's program. I think most people who have read it feel the same way. There is a lot of effort that has gone into this plan.

Most Americans, the polls show, support the President's plan. I think they are sick of what is happening. They want something positive to be done. They want it coordinated and they want a comprehensive plan, not just a helter-skelter spending bill.

Today, we take an unprecedented step in affirming our support of President Bush in a rapid manner. Only 22 days ago we received the national drug control strategy. It has been a short time. Today we help to fund that strategy and will debate four major proposals contained in the legislative strategy.

I applaud all of my colleagues in the Senate for their willingness to work together to see this package debated and discussed.

Mr. President, I was also pleased to be asked by the minority leader to work on our task force that created the compromise we have before us. The primary issues were; how much money is needed to add to the Bush plan, and when would we debate various propositions contained in the President's drug strategy.

What we agreed to was full funding of the President's budgetary request of up to $7.9 billion. In addition, we have added $800 million in budget authority for treatment, prevention and education programs and $100 million for local law enforcement activities. That translates to about $400 million in budget outlays in fiscal 1990. That is considerably less than the $2.2 billion for which the distinguished former majority leader has asked.

This is—and thanks to both leaders on the Appropriations Committee, Senators BYRD and HATFIELD—a good faith bipartisan compromise. I personally want to thank Senator HATFIELD for his leadershiap in the negotiations. Senator BYRD is also to be commended for his diligence in bringing the final package together.

I am pleased to have done it expeditiously because, even as we speak, drug deals are going down, teenagers are getting high on crack, 10-year-olds are getting drunk, and unborn children are becoming addicted. We must do whatever we can to stop this societal suicide.

First, I do not think we can tolerate indiscriminate use of drugs and alcohol for the obvious safety reasons. Even if an individual is willing to throw away his or her own health, it does not mean that an individual should jeopardize the health and safety of others.

There is substance abuse by pregnant women, women whose children begin life with an addiction because their mothers were addicted. These babies never had a chance to say no. Rather, these babies whose chances of being born with a birth defect are greatly increased.

How can we say that substance abuse only affects the user? We cannot. Clearly, it affects others, and in the case of babies, they certainly have had nothing to do with the terrible conditions in which they find themselves.

Second, society should not sanction drug use or alcohol abuse. What happens to our culture, Mr. President, when people cannot survive without a hit of crack or many drinks of alcohol? What kind of an example are we setting for our Nation's youth if we, as leaders, do not speak out strongly against substance abuse?

As a people, we are better than this. Drugs are tearing our neighborhoods apart. And as I attended my task force meetings throughout Utah, I learned that drug abuse is affecting both urban and rural America. There is a county in rural Utah that had over 400 drug arrests last year; about 10 percent of the arrests were Utah citizens, 90 percent were not. The remainder were people running drugs through our State. Not one community in our country is immune from the scourge of drug abuse.

I hope that today's action does more than just give lip service to our commitment to fight the war on drugs. After today, we must then tackle the harder questions and issues like the death penalty, drug testing, and modifications in the various criminal statutes. Addressing these issues in a constructive manner will be a significant step forward battling drug abuse in America.

Mr. President, these are going to be important issues. If we are going to get tough on crime, tough on these pushers, and tough on the drug lords and the kingpins, then it seems to me that we have to get tough on some of the criminal laws that have been used as escape hatches for some of these criminals to get away from serving time or suffering any punishment as a result of their illegal activities.

I can tell you these drug lords, as the President said, do deserve the death penalty. I can tell you if we will use the death penalty, we will not have as many drugs being pushed in America. In a couple of countries in this world where they do have the death penalty for drugs, they have no drugs. I believe it is something, if everybody here is serious about stopping the drug epidemic and the drug problems, we have to consider doing.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment today. Specifically, it will increase programs at the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration to expand State treatment efforts, to research new treatment therapies, to provide greater insight into appropriate therapies for substance abusing women who are pregnant, and to expand community-based prevention efforts. This amendment further expands funding for the Drug-Free Schools Act which funds school and community-based education programs. And, this legislation provides $100 million more for local law enforcement efforts so that we can get more prosecutors into Utah and every State to get drug traffickers off the streets.

Mr. President, I hope this amendment will pass overwhelmingly and that it will help every State, community, school, church, club, business, police department, and family to deal out the drug dealers with strict law enforcement, eliminate the demand for drugs through education and prevention, and help those who have fallen into this trap through treatment programs.

I hope as we debate this matter that we get a little bit away from the partisanship that has controlled this body through the years on these issues.

I think it is time for all of us to admit this is a pretty fine comprehensive package if we are going to try to improve it today with this amendment. I agree with the amendment. I have helped to work out the details and the language as have a number of other Senators here. I think it improves the program that the President said is the basic program. We will improve on this year after year, I hope. If we need more funds in fiscal years 1991 and thereafter, we will raise those funds. The fact of the matter is it is a national scandal, it is a national problem, and it is something we need to resolve.

But I am proud of this President. I am proud that he has had the guts to stand up and say we want a comprehensive strategy, he is going to put everything he has behind it, we are going to do what we can to solve these problems, and this is a good beginning. It is not the ending, but it is a good beginning. I want to thank every colleague who has worked on this bipartisan amendment, and I hope that all of our colleagues will support it.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, for those who are waiting their turn, I will not be long, at least I hope.

Mr. President, let me first say I think the President of the United States and in particular his new drug czar, Secretary Bennett, have done an excellent job on behalf of the American people.

We hear a lot about the deficiencies in the plan from some quarters. Many would like to do much more. But I would like to take just 1 minute and put into perspective where we were when we received the mandated new policy and strategy from Secretary Bennett on behalf of the President.

About 180 days after Secretary Bennett was confirmed, the President delivered his drug strategy plan to the U.S. Congress as mandated by law. That was 26 days by mandate of Congress—not by choice of the administration—before October 1, the end of the fiscal year, the year we are called upon to appropriate money to implement a plan.

So I hope everyone knows that we had only 26 days to complete all our work and appropriate money from the taxpayers and the American people for a drug policy. There were 26 days to get it done—no more, no less.

We are going to have difficulty, apart from the drug plan, getting our work done on time. The public now knows or will soon know that we are not going to get the appropriations done on time. We are going to have a continuing resolution. We are probably going to have a sequester, an across-the-board cut, after that because we did not get the budget reduction plan put together on time either.

So it seems to me we ought to look at this drug plan from the perspective of having 26 days to implement it, change it, or modify it. So we will get a myriad of ideas. The President received hundreds. The drug czar had thousands. But essentially when you put it into that perspective, it seems to me we received a very good plan.

No one is seeking to deny the implementation of the President's plan as it related to money and programs. Almost without any discord this body is going to fund the President's plan. I think that bodes well for the future of the drug czar, and the President leading the effort.

The second point I would like to make is that it seems quite logical to me that, with the drug issue being the most significant social problem in America—maybe even the most serious one we have ever faced as a people—we would want to do more, and we would want to in some way put our mark on this first step in a declared war on this scourge.

I am very pleased and proud that, as the distinguished junior Senator from Nebraska just said a while ago, whether one likes or dislikes the method of funding the President's plan and an additional $900 million in program authority, we have shown if we want to put something in a high enough priority position we do not have to raise taxes. We can look to the body of appropriate programs, in this case including defense, and say "Let us take a little bit from everything and pay for it."

I myself, as one Senator, would have preferred to look for cuts in the spending programs of this country. I am absolutely convinced that we act as if a program once on the books, as President Bush has said, is vested with immortality—that it should never change, and it should never disappear. For all the commotion about changing the programs of this country during the entire Reagan era, we got rid of only 5 programs out of an inventory of more than 2,400. There are so many we cannot even count them.

So I would have preferred to go back through and see what we could alter, what we could change, what we could get rid of. Nonetheless, in the waning days of the session we found a way to pay for this program without raising taxes and without breaking the mandated targets set by Congress and the President working together many months ago in the so-called economic summit.

I think on that front this was a pretty good exercise by this body of a very, very complicated process here in the U.S. Senate.

Having said that, what we are going to do is take an across-the-board cut from many programs, and certain defense programs will be cut or terminated and the money transferred to this war on drugs for its share. The burden sharing between defense and discretionary programs might not be to my liking, but I think it is adequate under the circumstances.

So I compliment those who initiated this effort, and those who have brought it to conclusion.

I was privileged to be part of the small group that worked on that. I think both the package and the plan for financing it are reasonably good under the circumstances that I have just described.

However, I would like to put in a word of caution. The funding of this program requires amending appropriation bills that have already passed the U.S. House. These bills do not have some of this program in them because the President's program was underfunded in the House, and we have even added to it above the President's request.

So I am very hopeful, yet I am not at all certain, that as we work our way through the U.S. House committees they are going to concur either in the add-ons that we have accomplished here in the last couple of weeks, or in the way of paying for them, for they will have to reduce programs across the board or otherwise—programs that they have already funded and appropriated.

I do not intend that to be cold water on an otherwise reasonable package, but that is a concern. It could become very serious, and very significant.

My last comments have to do with the front line of defense in this war on drugs. I believe that we in the Congress cannot turn law enforcement in the United States on its head. We already have a front line of defense called local law enforcement. Every city in America has a system of providing police, and counties have a system of providing sheriffs. They have district attorneys that prosecute, they have jails in which criminals are incarcerated, and they have probation officers. The Federal Government is not the leader in this area. We have never been. We have an FBI, a Federal court system and the other weapons, but, Mr. President, the front line of this war on drugs is local law enforcement, from the policeman on the beat to the investigators, right through the district attorneys that prosecute, the local and State judges to which criminals are sent, I believe the one really significant thing we are doing in law enforcement is to provide substantially more money to local law enforcement so that they can do their job, which is apprehending those who violate the drug laws of this country, be they users, street sellers, or kingpins. It is obvious to me, from my State, that most of the war is going to be conducted by them. The victories, if they are to be real and significant and reliable and consistent, will be won by that part of American law enforcement.

Mr. President, they are overburdened. They cannot get the job done. I have, on a number of occasions, met with the leaders in local law enforcement in my State, and, I tell you and fellow Senators, they guarantee us that they can do their job. They know that drugs are in the streets, drugs are in places that they know about. They are aware of sellers and dealers and users, and they do not have the resources to apprehend them consistent with our due process, to take them to district attorneys, and send them to jail.

Mr. President, district attorneys would like nothing more than to concentrate for 3 or 4 years in a concerted effort on apprehension across the board, including users, not just kingpins. District attorneys are already overburdened. They do not have enough prosecutors, enough staff, enough resources.

Mr. President, State district judges, those with general jurisdiction who try these cases, nothing would please them more than to be able to say we are conducting a war on drugs. We are trying these cases rapidly. We are being sure that these drug offenders are not out on bond when they should be in jail. We want to send them off to jail when they are convicted, and would like to do that with more rapidity, consistency, and to do our share in a much more significant manner.

We say to them, engage yourself in the war, and then we invent all kinds of new programs to help in this war, when the tried and true weapon is left muzzled, without resources, as if it should conduct its own war.

So the National Association of Police Organizations has urged us in their 1989 national convention to enact the President's plan and, equally as important, to help them in the war by giving them adequate resources so they can enhance their efforts against the expanding menace of drugs.

I am very, very pleased that the President of the United States increased funding for local law enforcement matching programs from $150 million to $350 million. And I am equally pleased that we took one-ninth of all the add-ons, another $100 million, putting it in that program, making it a total $450 million for local law enforcement matching grants.

I am also hopeful that before we leave this issue—not on this bill, but one of the other appropriation bills—we will modify the match program that establishes how many dollars of local money are needed to get Federal dollars, or conversely, how many dollars will we give them for the dollars they spend in this war.

If we do not change the law, we will give them $1 for each $1 that the State and local governments put up. I do not think that is a good proportion. I think it should be $2 or $3 to $1, our dollars to theirs. It is the best dollar we can spend. I urge that our drug czar encourage areas, cities, and regions to put together comprehensive drug teams, and that we help them all, that we give them resources for additional district attorneys, even for temporary judges, if they need them, to expedite a docket that is directed at this war and not sidetracked by all the other burdens of the judiciary. We need to target additional resources into local law enforcement as part of the overall criminal apparatus.

As a matter of fact, if they do it right there, and if we force them by this mechanism to meet and discuss their problems jointly, from judges to district attorneys to law enforcement men on the street, if we begin to have them talking together on how they can get a match program put together so they can use our money, just getting together and discussing a unified approach will accomplish a great deal.

So I am very pleased that we are about to complete this task. I hope that in the next couple of weeks the House will concur in funding this program and that we will not get ourselves out there talking about our inability to pay for this program because we do not have enough resources.

Mr. President, we have enough resources. Ten days of talking has found the resources. We have gone back and said that everybody is going to take a little bit less so we can fund a little bit more of this very, very serious war that we are engaged in. That is the way we are going to have to do it for quite some time, in this Senator's opinion.

We cannot do everything we did in the past, do new things that are paramount, and every time we turn around, say we need more taxes. I think, first, we have to prove that we can set priorities, and we have done that here. I compliment the chairman and ranking member of Appropriations, and those that served with me on the task force, for getting us to this stage where we can all say we have a significant amount of money and are funding significant programs to engage in this war.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BREAUX addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, it is very clear, and I think from all of the statements that we have heard from so many people, that the No. 1 problem facing America at this time is clearly the drug problem. It is not a Democratic problem, nor is it a Republican problem; it is an American problem, a problem that really cries out for a bipartisan solution.

The President's declaration a couple weeks ago of a war on drugs was a welcome initiative on the part of the President. If one looks at the fine print, it hardly represented an all-out war. In fact, it had only the tools for a minor skirmish.

We need to do a great deal more, and we need to build on the program that the President proposed. The amendment that was crafted initially by the distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate, ROBERT BYRD from West Virginia, who serves as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, was a major step in the right direction. I wholeheartedly support the compromise that was developed working with Members of the other party to come together today with what represents a true bipartisan initiative.

I was deeply concerned, when I read the President's proposal, that so many of the areas that desperately needed the help of the Federal Government were actually going to find themselves getting less than they did before the proposal was announced. There is probably no area in America that is more inundated by the concentration of illegal drug trade than the Nation's Capital, right here in Washington.

But under the original proposal of the President of the United States, if you look at the money that the District was going to get and took away the money that the proposal was going to eliminate going to the District of Columbia, something like 70 percent more would be lost than would be gained under the program. There are other examples.

California, for instance was going to get a little bit, but they were going to lose four times more than they were going to receive.

The State of Texas was going to lose almost twice what they were going to get.

So while the proposal and the declaration of war was a wonderful thing, it got the ball rolling—and I commend the President for that—it also did not do nearly enough and, in many cases, did more harm because of money lost over and above the money that would be received under that initial proposal.

Mr. President, the proposal we are considering today calls for sacrifice from everybody. It is not the proper approach to say that we want American families and American individuals to sacrifice out there but that we in Washington are not willing to ask your own Government to make sacrifices as well.

Some have said, well, to cut spending across the board is just too much of a sacrifice. It is going to hurt my program or it is going to hurt this particular program of our Federal Government.

Mr. President, I know that every family in America would be more than willing to say that we are going to cut our family budget this year by four-tenths of 1 percent if it meant that the children of that family would be able to be free of drugs and free of the crime that drugs are causing throughout America. And yet all we are asking all departments of our Federal Government to do here today with this amendment is to reduce their spending just a little, 0.43 percent, four-tenths of 1 percent less spending on programs so that we may fight a real war, and all-out war with the necessary tools, the necessary equipment, the necessary people to make a difference in what is the No. 1 concern of everybody in America in 1989.

So, Mr. President, I think this amendment is a good one. There are many who have said, well, do not cut my program, do not cut housing, do not cut this, do not cut that.

I will say that unless we solve the drug problem, we are going to do far, far greater damage to these other individual programs no matter how much money we spend on housing, or other areas that are currently being adversely affected because of the huge human misery that is being caused, because of the crimes being perpetrated, because of the drug epidemic in this country.

So it is appropriate to say to the Federal Government in Washington that we need you to sacrifice a little so that much can be accomplished.

I know as a Democrat many people say, well, Democrats cannot find a program unless they find a way to tax it; if it moves, tax it; if it sits still, let us tax it.

Let me point out, Mr. President, this is not a tax increase; it represents across-the-board spending that was brought to this floor by the initiatives of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the honorable BOB BYRD, from West Virginia. This represents a true across-the-board reduction in spending. It calls for Washington to sacrifice as well as calling for the people in middle America to sacrifice.

So I do not buy those who say, do not cut my program, find another way to pay for it. Everybody has to be involved. I think every family, every individual in America is willing to make that sacrifice.

The final point: Most of the drug interdiction, most of the arrests, most of the busts in law enforcement procedures are being done not by people here in Washington, as good as they are, but are being done by the State and local law enforcement officials, who work every day, every night in the 50 States trying to solve this incredible problem.

Under the original Bush plan we would have given them $6 million. Under the Byrd proposal we are able to target $100 million to State and local officials, to State and local law enforcements officers, to sheriffs' departments, to city police departments, to State police departments in order that they can do what they know how to do best, and that is to enforce the laws and put the drug pushers and the violators in prison, and if you take what the President has proposed for new prison construction, I think it is $1 billion, I think we are going to have a program that is going to work. It is going to work not just for a political party, it is going to work for all Americans, and I think that bipartisan spirit is producing the good program that you have seen enacted here today.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator GRAMM.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I am going to have the honor later this afternoon to introduce an amendment to implement the President's drug-free school program, so I will try to be brief. There are just a couple points I want to make.

First, I had the pleasure, though it did not seem it some of the time in these negotiations in the last week, to work on this compromise. I totally support the compromise. Had I been writing this proposal alone, I would have written it differently. But I think, given the reality of the situation, we have put together a good package.

Mr. President, I think the fact that we decided here to basically go with the modified across-the-board reduction approach really indicates more than anything else the central problem that we face in American Government, and that is the inability to tell any organized special interest group no.

I think it is interesting also, Mr. President, that when President Bush proposed an offset to take money out of the program SLIAG to pay for part of his antidrug initiative by picking something that at least the President deemed to be of lower priority, we ended up taking the money out of SLIAG and spending it on things other than antidrug activities and then went on to impose the across-the-board cut to finance the drug bill.

Still, Mr. President, I think the across-the-board cut is far preferable than the long debate that could have ensued about raising taxes. I think it indicates while we are not willing to say no to any organized special interest group that has existed in the last three-quarters of this century that we are willing to make decisions and to at least set a positive priority, and the positive priority that we are here to talk about today is trying to deal with the drug problem.

I am especially proud of the $100 million for local law enforcement.

I think it is fair to say that Senator DOMENICI and I fought hard to try to provide funding for local law enforcement. At one point in the negotiations we were up to $200 million. The final product ended up with a $100 million addition for State and local law enforcement.

When we started out with zero in the package, I will choose to be happy by forgetting the intermediate step we went through to get there.

I have met with sheriffs and police chiefs and people working in narcotics and rural drug task forces in 90 counties in my State. There are some here in Washington who argue the people on the front lines cannot spend more money than we have given them. I want to assure you, Mr. President, that the people who make that argument have never gone out into the small towns and rural areas of Texas. I can assure you in every single area we have too little equipment and we have too few men and women working to solve this problem.

This $100 million represents a good-faith effort to support law enforcement officials.

I think it is vitally important that we preserve the current formula allocation where the money goes to the States to allocate. We have had in the past a dispute with the House about the allocation of funding.

Their proposal almost always has been to give all the money to the big cities. I have argued and I will continue to argue that to do that will make small towns and rural areas safe havens for drug trafficking and will guarantee that we lose the war on drugs, first in the small towns and rural areas and then in the big cities.

Finally, let me say, Mr. President, that I continue to be concerned by the fact that we took funding that was aimed at law enforcement in our appropriations process and transferred that funding to a lot of other programs. We have now done an across-the-board cut to fund law enforcement, but in many cases a constant frustration for me, and I am sure for others, is that we take money intended for a purpose, spend it on another purpose, and then we end up trying to find a way to come up with the money for the original purpose. It is a game that we play constantly.

We cut the Space Program to fund HUD, and then we complain that not enough money is provided for the Space Program. We cut the Coast Guard to fund other programs, and then we try to find ways to fund the Coast Guard. We have done the same thing here with drugs.

Finally, I cannot let it pass without saying something about the overall level of funding. Congress last year cut the President's proposed level of funding for the law enforcement end of the war on drugs by $600 million.

Congress last year provided $100 million less for the FBI than the President sought; $33 million less for DEA; $52 million less for INS and the border patrol; and $300 million less for prison construction.

This year, we have a fight about trying to give the President more money than he sought. Now what happened between last year and this year? Well, what happened is, suddenly Congress started hearing the voice of the people and it decided that it wanted to go further than the President.

I happen to believe in a faith where if you are saved at the last moment, you still go to heaven. So I welcome all those that have been converted on the road to Damascus to this effort. I am hopeful that the conversion sticks, that we not only provide full funding for our war on drugs this year but that we do it next year.

I commend, Mr. President, all those that worked on this compromise. I do not think anybody got all that they wanted. But I am delighted that we are getting on with the task. I thought it looked a little silly to the public that the President had proposed a program and then we were sitting around here for weeks fighting about it, rather than getting on with the job. I think we have reached a reasonable compromise. I vigorously support it and urge my colleagues to vote for it. I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am glad to join my colleagues in what I see as a bipartisan effort to support the Byrd-Hatfield amendment. I strongly support this compromise. Of course, this Senator would like to see it have gone to an even greater amount of dollars and more commitment.

We hear a lot about commitment and a lot about the war on drugs. I cannot help but look back in history, the brief history, on hearings that I have held on this subject matter over the years. A couple of years ago, 2½, I think, to be exact, the Senator from California, Senator WILSON and I held hearings in Los Angeles. We had a number of law enforcement people come and testify about what they needed in the local government, the problem of gangs, of drug cartels moving in, of murders and havoc coming to their community.

I remember then Chief of Police Gates of the Los Angeles Police Department stopping me or Senator WILSON or both of us when I made reference to the war on drugs that we are involved in here. He pointed out very respectfully and nicely—I have worked with that man for a long time, even before I was in the Senate, as a prosecutor in Arizona. We did some drug cases from his office. So I knew him. He said, "Senator, you know we never had a war on drugs." He said, "We do not have a war on drugs now and we all use that term including you in public office and those of us in law enforcement." He said, "The reason it is used is very well known because it excites and brings about the imagination in peoples' minds about what a war is."

And yet when you think about the war, think about the wars that the United States has had, particularly those that they have won, clear victories, they have done certain things. One is that they have mobilized their military and their civilian resources to the maximum. They have educated their public. They have brought to the public's attention real and truthful information about the problem, who the enemy is, what needs to be done to get at that enemy, how it can be done and what the sacrifice is going to be, including what it might cost in dollars and cents as well as what the ultimate cost for failure to act will be in human costs.

And in that sense, those are the two parts of a real war.

The third part, of course, is an objective, something to conquer and control. And that is, of course, the enemy. Here we have an enemy and the enemy is large, it is fragmented, it is powerful, it is vicious, it is everything that you can conceive of the worst in enemies.

And so we have these possibilities of putting together a war. This compromise amendment is a staging process for that war. We really keep saying we are at war. But imagine if we were about to go to war with a foreign country that might invade the United States or, if we felt it was in our national interest to deploy thousands of troops in the Middle East to protect our national interest, imagine how quickly we would decide to appropriate the necessary funds to get the troops there to mobilize and do the logistics so we could be prepared to defend ourselves. We would do it in a moment's notice, I dare say.

Thank God that is not the case with a military intervention or a military conflict. But I submit that that is the case with the drug battle that is before us. It is time that we respond and we respond forcefully; that we respond with goals and commitments and ideals even of what we want to achieve in the use of drugs, the curtailment of drugs and the enforcement of our present laws, and that we treat our population as a partner and ask them, as political leaders, to be part of this war, to join us, to understand and to receive from them their input and their ideas of what needs to be done to win the war on drugs.

The American people are responding to that. They understand the problem. They probably do not understand why we have not acted, even though we have said we are acting. But I am certain that they will support a genuine effort, a genuine effort to go after this problem, both on the suppliers' side, those who raise the crops, those who transform those crops into drugs, those who transport those drugs into the United States, those on the border who help smuggle it in, and, of course, those who peddle it to the citizens of this country or any other country.

This is the criminal element and the enemy, and this is what a war on drugs has to attack on the demand side.

In the area of enforcement, we have to be prepared to put a full court press—as they say in basketball—on the area of cultivation, on the area of the laboratories and the production, on the area of transportation, on the area of smuggling, on the area of the ability to transport the chemicals from this country, the weapons to kill the military, the judiciary and the political people and the police in the foreign countries by the drug cartels, to put some stops on it here, to do something about the dissemination of the drugs throughout our schools and cities and countrysides. That is where the problem comes together on enforcement.

This compromise bill moves in that direction. And I say guardedly it moves in that direction. It is not going to accomplish everything. We are going to have to ask the citizens to sacrifice themselves. The State governments are going to have to ask their citizens to pay some more taxes, to allocate resources more on the enforcement side.

Then you come to the demand side, those who use it. Now that is an enemy also. That is why this war is really a little different. In the formal sense of a war, you do have some small part of your citizenry that is disloyal and you have to treat that in one manner or another. But here we have the citizenry that is uneducated, I believe, in the real understanding of what this kind of substance abuse will do to their bodies and souls and what it does to a country. And that is the enemy that we need to spend time and resources on.

This amendment, offered by a number of us, Senator BYRD and Senator HATFIELD, strikes at that in a meaningful way.

President Bush laid out his strategy and policy a couple of weeks ago. Secretary Bennett, the national drug coordinator, worked hard to put that together. He did what the Congress told him to do. He analyzed and surveyed the problem around this country. He looked carefully at good solutions and bad solutions, what needed to be done. And he put together a battle plan, you might call it, a strategy of how far do you go to war. It was not a victory celebration that you have achieved a victory and now it is all over or will be in a short period of time.

He set some goals. It is a beginning; that is what it is. Yes, we could all improve on it. I would like to see the goals much greater. I would like to see the capacity of understanding the problem of treatment much greater. I would like to see the effort to determine what programs work and which do not much broader. There is a lot more in that program that I might have been able to put in.

But I think Secretary Bennett approached it in a very important way and, indeed, brought us to where we are today. The problem is that we cannot do this war on drugs with just good intentions and with just talking about where we should go and what we should do. We know what we need to do, I think. We need to educate people. We need to offer treatment. We need to have rehabilitation programs. We need to have deterrent programs. We need to have strong enforcement. We understand that and now we have to put that together. This amendment moves in that direction, in a meaningful way, $800 million more meaningful than before. It think it is important to just review the amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee to add $3.2 billion to fully fund President Bush's drug strategy, the President's crime package, and the majority of the unfunded portion of last year's comprehensive Anti-Drug Abuse Act.

As a member of the bipartisan Senate task force that negotiated this funding package, I want to give special recognition to the tireless efforts of Senators BYRD and HATFIELD; to Tim Carlsgaard, Patty Lynch, Jim English, and so many more who spent so much time. I want to give special recognition to these people who really put in the time to make this possible. Because of their dedication and commitment to addressing this country's drug epidemic, the task force was able to adopt a funding package that will, for the first time, allow the United States to mount a major offensive against illegal drugs.

In every single poll—every one—Americans are saying the same thing: The drug crisis concerns them more than any other issue in this Nation. It concerns them more than the deficit—more than AIDS—more than nuclear war.

Make no mistake—we have a crisis on our hands. Recent reports by Federal prosecutors reveal that drug cartels, motorcycle gangs, and street posses have organized drug operations in every State in this Nation—every State. The reports describe Arizona as a major drug trafficking and distribution point for illegal drugs.

We all saw the recent Federal study that casual drug use in American is down by a third. But what does that statistic mean when cocaine addiction and drug-related violence is on the rise.

Here in our Nation's Capital, just blocks from the Senate Chambers, the street violence resembles Beirut or Belfast. It has become a disgrace for the minorities, for all of us, that have witnessed what is going on in this particular area.

The police chief from San Diego was in my office last week and told me that his jails are so overcrowded that when his officers make drug arrests, many times the drug dealer is back on the corner before the officers return to their beat.

Law-abiding citizens in this country are shot dead in their own kitchens—killed by stray bullets from drug warfare in the streets. These are the innocent victims of drugs. And the list goes on. Crack babies are causing a crisis in hospital nurseries across the country. As many as 375,000 infants may be at risk every single year.

IV drug use—a terrible crisis in itself—now poses an additional horror which is the threat of spreading AIDS. IV drug abuse accounts for nearly one-third of the recent AIDS cases. Tragically, many of these are children. Seven out of every 10 babies born with AIDS have mothers who are IV drug abusers or have mothers who have had sex with IV drug abusers.

This is the hard and brutal fact: We are outgunned and outmanned by the drug lords. The situation cries out for bold and meaningful action.

I compliment President Bush on his drug plan. While I do not believe it goes far enough, it is an honorable attempt on the part of the President to provide a plan for action.

I agree with the President that we need more police officers on the street to catch drug criminals, more prosecutors to convict them, and enough prison cells to put them away for a long, long time. I commend his stand on casual drug use and the idea of boot camps for drug offenders. I applaud his decision to send U.S. military trainers into the South American jungles where the drugs originate. Secretary Cheney has now pledged to beef up our military's role in the drug war. I welcome that pledge and hope deeply that the Secretary will follow through on his promise.

Of course, we also need to address the demand for drugs. The President is right on target when he says we need to continue our efforts with drug education and treatment. But we must go further. We must increase these efforts. We simply do not have enough treatment beds in this country.

As a result, only one out of every eight addicts who wants help can get it. We need to have a goal of drug treatment on demand, especially for all pregnant women and juvenile offenders.

It's also important that we do more with drug education. I would like to see more Federal funds go to the DARE program. That program sends specially trained police officers into fifth and sixth grade classrooms to teach kids to say no to drugs.

The DARE program is in 49 States in America. It's a good start. But we also need to consider the possibility of new, expanded drug education programs which would reach every classroom in America from kindergarten on.

In terms of supply, I was disappointed that the President's strategy did not identify any high intensity drug areas. The situation along the southwest border is critical. The 2,000-mile United States/Mexico border is this Nation's No. 1 trafficking and distribution point of illegal drugs entering the United States.

According to the State Department's 1989 International Narcotics Control Strategy report, Mexico is the No. 1 source of marijuana and heroin coming into this country and the transshipment point for a third of the cocaine. Presently, there is only one border patrol unit for every 22 miles of the Arizona/Mexico border.

By concentrating additional Federal assets and personnel in high intensity drug areas like the southwest border and south Florida, we will see a positive effect on the rest of the country.

President Bush has requested total funding of $7.9 billion for drug control in fiscal year 1990. This amount is an increase of approximately $2.2 billion over the estimated $5.7 billion appropriated in fiscal year 1989.

I am deeply concerned that President Bush's plan to fund the war on drugs falls far short of what is needed. The President has called for $716 million in offsets from current Federal programs. You cannot take money from juvenile justice grants, public housing, or other equally important social programs for the Nation's disadvantaged to fund the drug war.

If you do, you are hurting the very individuals that we have to do something about. I do not believe the $2.2 billion increase is sufficient to address this Nation's antidrug efforts.

The Byrd amendment, as I mentioned, adds $900 million in critically needed Federal grants to State and local governments for drug treatment, education, and law enforcement. The Byrd amendment and Hatfield amendment does not slash funding for programs for the needy or vital defense programs.

The Byrd-Hatfield amendment produces real money by taking 0.43 of 1 percent across-the-board cut from all discretionary programs. It is done fairly and without prejudice. The war on drugs can be won. We have a long way to go, Mr. President.

We are in a war, all right, and the stakes are very high. The world I grew up in was not necessarily better, but it was certainly safer than the world we live in now. Many of our citizens have good reason to fear stepping outside their own doors. And the reason? It can be summed up in one word—drugs.

I think we can win the war on drugs if we dare to take the battle to the enemy, if we marshal all our resources, and if we all work together. The battle will be tough. Ultimately, it will be won, I believe, as President Bush says—neighborhood by neighborhood, block by block, family by family.

As elected officials, we in Congress have the responsibility to put politics aside. There is an old saying that there is no limit to what lawmakers can do so long as we do not take credit for it. If we ever needed to remember that saying, we need to remember it now.

The drug war will not be won by Democrats. It will not be won by Republicans. Our only chance is to win it together. We cannot—we must not—make the fatal mistake of political grandstanding.

If we do, we deserve to be remembered as the politicians who cared not about the next generation but rather the next election. If we do, we will discover, like Pogo, that the enemy is us. I urge my colleagues to support the Byrd amendment.

And, again, I want to commend the tireless efforts of Chairman BYRD in formulating this bipartisan amendment. Without his leadership we would not be debating this drug funding amendment which is critical to fighting this growing epidemic.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on pending amendment occur at 2:15 p.m., that the time between now and 2:15 p.m. be equally divided under the control of the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, after the Senator from Arizona, I would yield, then, 10 minutes to the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on our side, I did yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], 10 minutes to the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], 7 minutes to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL], 5 minutes to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and 15 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY].

Mr. GORTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, today we have heard a great deal of talk about funding for a national drug program; discussions about whether to take funding from other programs across the board, how to make tough choices, the degree to which to declare the war on drugs a top priority. These discussions are appropriate as we consider Federal spending levels for 1990; the amendment we are considering represents a good start.

But an event which took place in Tacoma, WA, this weekend provides a graphic illustration that funding discussions are the easy part of this battle. The real battle is being waged not here but in our communities. Saturday night an antidrug block watch party in Tacoma's working class Hilltop neighborhood turned into a shootout with neighbors suspected of drug dealing. Miraculously, no one was hurt. But that confrontation points out the growing unease with Federal and local government responses to the growing drug problem.

A careful look at our national scourge of drugs reveals that its great, insidious danger comes not from without but from within—but one of our problems is that we want to look away rather than to face the danger resolutely. This will not do. To win the drug war, we must confront ourselves, and test our values and national character.

I offer no excuses for Colombian drug lords, and believe they and their ilk are important targets in this war. But they are nothing compared to the individual drug user in this country. Without the user, not an ounce of cocaine would cross our borders. Without the user, no gangs of pushers would terrorize our cities. And without the user, no babies would be born addicted to crack.

In fighting poverty, I am largely a supply sider. In fighting drugs, however, I am primarily a demand sider. No child will be safe, no community will be safe, until we effectively eliminate demand.

Among those who have yet to unflinchingly recognize this danger, some say the way to solve the problem is to legalize access. But drugs are not destructive because they are illegal. They are illegal because they are destructive.

Of course, if drugs were made legal they would cease to be a legal problem. But drugs would still help destroy the social fabric of this Nation. Some might argue that legalizing drugs would simply bring them to par with alcohol. But despite the dangers of alcohol and its highly destructive effects, it is something with which we have 5,000 years of familiarity, and we have cultural defenses against it. Crack is new, it is overwhelmingly addictive and destructive, and we have no means for accommodating it even if we wish to do so.

Unfortunately for the country as whole, though perhaps fortunately for the upper crust of Medellin, another well-attended school of thought is that people who use drugs are victims. I do not think they are victims: I am convinced that they are partners in crime; they victimize the rest of us.

They victimize their children, who in some cases they condemn to a birth of addiction and the torture of withdrawal, and in nearly all cases they condemn their children to lives of unrelieved misery.

Drug users victimize anyone who sets foot on the streets. They propel the wave of crime. They are responsible for the deaths of police, the murder of innocent citizens, and the violation of our homes.

The people who think that the users are victims give no credit to our traditional American values of innocence or self-discipline. And besides that, their approach can bring only one thing—destruction—ours or theirs. If we continue to consider the users as victims, then we will simply perpetuate their crimes and all its horrors.

Mr. President, we have entered, albeit slowly, a national crisis. The Nation is decaying from within, and we cannot stop that decay merely by warring with bandits in South America. We are the engine of the drug trade, the drug lords only our willing servants. If we want to stop it dead, we will have to pay a steep price at home. No other way exists, and reluctance to pay the price will cost us far more dearly, at the end of many years of neglect, in lives, property, liberty, and the elemental values by which we live.

President Bush has sent the Congress his drug war plan and he soon will forward concrete proposals for the necessary statutory authority to carry it out. I commend the President, for his plan is practical, achievable and balanced. The President is correct that we must proceed on all fronts at once, and further correct that law enforcement must receive the largest share of the resources.

This amendment, by the same token, provides an appropriate supplement to the President's program. It does emphasize the supply side here in the United States. It does so in a somewhat different fashion than I might do had I written it myself, but it does concentrate here in the United States.

We must resolve, as a nation, to pursue better drug education and treatment programs. Happily, the latest national survey on drug abuse shows that education and treatment and society's hardening attitude toward drugs have brought about a dramatic drop in total drug use in the past 4 years. Total cocaine use dropped by half. But at the very same time, frequent use of cocaine doubled.

As a consequence, we must be willing to understand that education and treatment will fail for some, and we must be ready to enforce the law, assist the courts, expand our police forces, and build the prisons necessary to reestablish the domestic tranquility to which we are entitled. We are going to have to pay for it, but the sooner we do it, the less it will cost. Besides, I believe most of us are quite willing, if only we can move decisively off dead-center. For underneath the present weakness of our resolve is something very great and powerful, something that sleeps, the spirit that made us. It will awaken when those who have written it off are most certain that they are safe.

And the spirit will move us back to core values: individual responsibility and discipline. Society will demand that users be held accountable for their actions.

We, in the Senate as part of the Federal Government, should be willing to follow the lead of our State and local counterparts, to pay the price and involve our communities in a solution. Then we will see what is ineradicable and what is not. The life of this Nation is at stake, if not immediately, then soon enough, and the Nation is rightly and properly in the mood for decisive action.

Mr. President, I look forward to working with Members from both sides of the aisle to support, and expand as necessary, the President's program.

This amendment is a good start. The debate we will have next month on substantive law changes will be an important supplement. Now there is no time to waste.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Byrd-Hatfield amendment.

While my distinguished and learned friend from Washington is on the floor, I might take this opportunity both to congratulate him for his remarks and to offer one small interpretation. He observed that we have had 5,000 years' experience with alcohol, which is true enough—he might have said 10,000—but we certainly have recorded 5,000 years. Yet we only have 250 years experience with abundant quantities of distilled alcohol. That is something new. And the species has still not learned to deal with it, although the ravages of the first century are well behind us, nonetheless, it remains a new experience. In the same way, we have had many centuries of experience with coca. Recorded Inca images give you that.

We have had a century's experience with cocaine which was developed in German laboratories in the late 19th century. And we have had exactly 6 years' experience as a species with free base cocaine which first appeared in the Bahamas in 1983.

Its appearance was reported to us—as I shall try to describe—yet we paid no attention. We are paying attention now.

I would suggest that if we think of the appearance of "crack" in these public health terms, we will find more useful outcomes to this epidemic than if we resourt to more emotional rather than research-based inquiry.

Again, let me thank the Senator for his very generous and intelligent remarks as is invariably the case.

Mr. President, I opened by saying I would like to speak about the potential that the Byrd-Hatfield amendment and the funding it involves gives us to pursue the subject of treatment of the particularly epidemic form of drug abuse in this country today—that of crack cocaine.

If I could just repeat, these concentrations of chemical substances which affect the brain are very new to the human species. They are part of the impact of technology on society. The development of techniques of distillation and the agricultural surpluses that made it possible to have something to distill produced the gin lanes of London, Europe, and our own country in the 18th century and right down to our time.

We went through the convulsive experience of prohibition in this country, adopted on this floor in an effort to deal with the impact on society of this new thing called distilled alcohol. And in much that pattern we are now groping toward an understanding of a new experience for the species which is the use of and addiction to the concentrated forms of the active ingredients in the coca leaf.

It all may seem abstract, but only the abstractions, in the end, get us to the fundamental questions and answers associated with these matters. Emotional talk and vigils and the various forms of incantation with which we deal with things we do not understand and are fearful of may make one feel better but the do not solve anything; at least we have not found that to be true. In the end, medical problems are dealt with by medical persons and medical research, or such at least is the feeling of this Senator. Indeed, such was the view that we brought to the task force which Senator BYRD, then majority leader, established on May 17, 1988.

The then majority leader, Senator BYRD, established a working group on substance abuse, and he asked our very distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Mr. NUNN, to be cochairman, and asked me to be the other cochairman. Although we were very much of the common view on these matters, we divided our work between the subject of supply and the subject of demand—supply being the question of how do drugs arrive in this country; how are they distributed and with what consequences. Demand being the use of drugs, the desire for them, and after awhile, the compulsion of certain drug users to have that drug.

In the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, we established a national coordinator, a "drug czar," and we gave him two deputies, one for supply reduction and the other for demand reduction, and demand came first. I am happy to note that one of the members of the faculty of the Yale Medical School, Dr. Kleber, who helped us think through our demand side prescriptions, has now come to Washington and is the Deputy Director for Demand Reduction. We are trying to bring the public health profession into this field. It has not been here before, Mr. President.

Let me remind the Senate of something I have said before and which I would like to have heard again. It is that this epidemic broke out in the Bahamas in 1983. It is an epidemic as sure as any other form of lethal or pathologic agent would be. By 1985, a Bahamian doctor had come to this country and in Atlanta, which is where the Centers for Disease Control is located, said, ladies and gentlemen, an epidemic is about to strike you from the offshore islands of the Bahamas. And I might add, as surely as Hurricane Hugo recently struck us.

I have an item here, Mr. President, from the Atlanta Journal from December 31, 1985. It says:

NASSAU, BAHAMAS.—A highly addictive practice of smoking cocaine "rocks" has swept this chain of islands off the coast of Florida. * * *

It goes on:

In a country of 230,000 people, the number of cocaine users treated at mental health clinics has zoomed from zero in 1982 to 209 in 1984 according to Dr. David Allen, a Harvard-trained psychiatrist who heads the National Drug Council.

This is what Dr. Allen said:

What we have is the world's first free-basing epidemic (which) could be preceding an epidemic in the industrialized United States. Anywhere there is readily available high-quality cocaine, there is this potential.

Here we have an epidemiologist, a psychiatric epidemiologist, telling us an epidemic was coming our way, and such is the low status of drug research that nobody in our country at the level of officialdom made any response at all. It was about 6 weeks after this letter appeared that the New York City Police Department made their first arrest related to free-base cocaine. The police had been noticing people standing on street corners, according to New York City Police detective Charles Bennett, cracking their wrists. Although no one at first knew the meaning of this signal—a motion like the cracking of a whip—it was later determined to be the symbol for crack cocaine.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for another 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to do this, but he must request it of the minority leader, Mr. DOLE, since the time has been allocated on the majority side. It has not been allocated on the minority side.

Mr. DOLE. Five minutes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Five minutes will do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. But the Senator from New York would also like to take note of the fact that if I were here talking about "frying the kingpins," I could have 90 minutes at any time I asked. But if I wish to talk about an epidemic—talk about health, talk about doctors—it does not quite get our attention, save the attention of the distinguished minority leader, without whom we would never have had last year's bill.

To go back to the point. On March 1, 1986, in The Lancet, a most prestigious British medical journal, there appeared an article entitled "Epidemic Free-Base Cocaine Abuse," the first formal statement that there was an epidemic.

It describes how beginning in 1983 a sharp increase was noted in the number of new admissions for cocaine abuse at the psychiatric hospital and the primary outpatient psychiatric clinic in the Bahamas. This article told the world what was coming.

That is what The Lancet did. It described the various psychotic reactions, many of which we see on our streets. The murdering you are reading about on the streets of Washington was all there in The Lancet when it first appeared 3 years ago.

That is why in The Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 we specifically provided for treatment on request. We said we have a public health emergency which requires treatment. I wrote those words. I wish now I had written "treatment on application." It does not matter. It is in the statute. It is section 2012.

It reads: "to increase, to the greatest extent possible, the availability and quality of treatment services so that treatment on request may be provided to all individuals desiring to rid themselves of their substance-abuse problem." That is part of the statement of the purpose of the act.

That is law. It is a goal. How do we make it a reality?

There is only one thing to do; that is, to follow, as I see it, from where we were last year. Over and again, I would state on this floor that we are fighting for treatment on request. We have no effective treatment. We have to develop it. We had none for polio when it first appeared. We had none for the whole range of epidemics and diseases. This is a disease of the brain. The neurochemistry of the brain is what is at issue.

I would think it would be in the range of normal expectations that, if you put enough capable people to work, you would get some response. We are aready learning some things. Anticonvulsive drugs seem to have some effect.

Very well; what do we do? It seems to me the first thing to do, or one of the first things to do, is to make drug addiction—crack cocaine addiction—eligible for Medicaid funds. We learned from The Lancet 3½ years ago that people using crack will quickly come and ask for help. It is instantly addictive. Normal cocaine is not. Crack is instantly addictive. People come and ask for help. Hospitals turn them away.

Treatment of cocaine addiction is not a service for which there are any Medicaid funds available. Treatment for heroin addiction, for which there is a pharmacological treatment—methadome—is eligible for funding under Medicaid. The drug addicted, elementally indigent—those least able to obtain help—have a clear health problem. I am not excusing their health problem, but they have it nonetheless. In turn, this becomes a community problem. And we are going to have to treat them in hospitals and clinics and learn to do so, or very little else will have any consequence.

Such, sir, is my view. Yesterday I introduced legislation, S.1673, that would make drug addition treatment eligible for Medicaid funding. In our city hospitals and emergency rooms, which are overwhelmed by 19-year-old youths walking in and saying, "I am on this stuff; I want to get off it; help," there is no help.

If you have a heart attack, they can help you. If you have been shot by your pusher, they can help you. But not if you simply wish to do what the law provides—not if you request treatment.

Mr. President, I hope we will pursue this. I hope to see this legislation added to the next bill which Senator DOLE will be bringing up in a few days.

Again, I want to thank Senator DOLE for his courtesy in allowing me to conclude these remarks. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a number of items be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Atlanta Journal, Dec. 31, 1985]

BAHAMAS "FREE-BASING EPIDEMIC" CITED

NASSAU, BAHAMAS.—A highly addictive practice of smoking cocaine "rocks" has swept this chain of islands off the coast of Florida, a side-effect of the South American-based drug trade that uses the islands as steppingstones for the journey to the United States.

In a country of 230,000 people, the number of cocaine users treated at mental health clinics has zoomed from zero in 1982 to 209 in 1984, according to Dr. David Allen, a Harvard-trained psychiatrist who heads the National Drug Council.

"What we have is the world's first free-basing epidemic (which) could be preceding an epidemic in the industrialized states," Allen said. "Anywhere there is readily available high-quality cocaine, there is this potential."

Dr. Henri Podlewski, director of the Sandilands Hospital where a special unit was created this year to treat free-basers, said free-based cocaine may be the most addictive drug known.

EPIDEMIC FREE-BASE COCAINE ABUSE—CASE STUDY FROM THE BAHAMAS

(By James F. Jekel, Henry Podlewski, Sandra Dean-Patterson, David F. Allen, Nelson Clarke, Paul Cartwright with assistance from Department of Epidemiology and Public Health, Yale University, School of Medicine, New Haven, Connecticut, USA; Community Psychiatry Clinic, Nassau, Bahamas, National Drug Council, Nassau; and Sandilands Rehabilitation Hospital and Sandilands Hospital Drug Clinic, Nassau)

SUMMARY

Beginning in 1983, a sharp increase was noted in the number of new admissions for cocaine abuse to the only psychiatric hospital and to the primary outpatient psychiatric clinic in the Bahamas. For the two facilities combined, new admissions for cocaine abuse increased from none in 1982 to 69 in 1983 and to 523 in 1984. Although there was some evidence for a rise in cocaine use during this time, as the drug became cheaper and more available, a primary cause of this medical epidemic seemed to be a switch by pushers from selling cocaine hydrochloride, which has a low addictive potential, to almost exclusive selling of cocaine free base, which has a very high addictive potential and causes medical and psychological problems. Although the use of free cocaine base is rising around the world, this is the first report of a nationwide medical epidemic due almost exclusively to this form of the drug, although similar problems are reported with smoking cocapaste in South America.

INTRODUCTION

The past decade has seen an increase in the use of cocaine in the United States and UK. This drug is not generally perceived as being as harmful as heroin.[1-4] However, data are accumulating to suggest that cocaine is indeed, a very dangerous drug.

Data from the US National Institute on Drug Abuse point to a 91% increase in cocaine-related deaths between 1980 and 1983.[5] Kleber and Gawin [7] have suggested that certain drugs have low productivity for producing compulsive-addictive behaviour, so that, say less than 15% of people using such drugs become addicted; examples are alcohol and marijuana. At the other extreme are drugs such as heroin and nicotine that lead to a compulsive-addictive use pattern in most users. Cocaine may lie at either of these extremes, depending on the method of use.[7] For example, nasal inhalation of cocaine ("snorting") or chewing coca leaves is unlikely to lead to addiction while smoking ("freebasing") or injecting ("shooting") the drug is. A switch in the pattern of cocaine use from snorting to freebasing could thus produce a big increase in the number of addicts without a change in the prevalence of cocaine use.

Some are talking now of cocaine "epidemic" because use of the drug seems to be rising steadily.[2] It would be more accurate to talk of a "long-term secular trend" because "epidemic" suggests a sudden imbalance between the forces that promote and retard a disease. However, a change in cocaine use in the Bahamas does meet a criteria for an epidemic of cocaine abuse.

Our study as initiated by physicians in the Bahamas who were concerned about an apparent rapid increase in cocaine abuse in clinical settings. Several sources were examined retrospectively to see if this clinical perception of a recent large increase in cocaine-related admissions to psychiatric facilities was accurate.

METHODS

The only psychiatric hospital in the Bahamas is the government run Sandilands Rehabilitation Hospital (SRH) on New Providence. Patients are referred there from the other islands. In 1980, almost two-thirds of the Bahamian population lived on New Providence, most of them in Nassau. The other three hospitals in the Bahamas (two on New Providence and one on Grand Bahama) seldom accept drug abuse patients and have few psychiatric patients.

The main community mental health clinic in the Bahamas is the Community Psychiatry Clinic (CPC) in Nassau. Most patients who do not go to private psychiatrists or other private physicians use the SRH outpatient services or the CPC. The two small government clinics in Freeport and Eight Mile Rock saw 47 cocaine addicts in 1984, only 14% of the total seen by Bahamian mental health clinics and only 9% of those seen at all government facilities. Drug abuse patients seen in emergency rooms are referred to SRH. Data from the CPC and the SRH on psychiatric cases provide a more complete picture than could be obtained in most areas of the world. Unfortunately, age and sex specific population data from the 1980 census were not yet available so we could not calculate incidence rates. However, because the population was stable over the period of this study, data on trends of new cases are almost as interpretable as rates. An incident case of cocaine abuse was defined as the first admission to the CPC or the SRH for cocaine abuse, even if other diseases were present. If the predominant drug in a polydrug user was cocaine, the case was considered a cocaine abuse admission.

Data Sources

The CPC publishes a monthly summary of cases. We focused on new patients. Alcoholism, non-cocaine-related drug abuse, and cocaine-related drug abuse were studied from the beginning of adequate records in 1982 up to June 30, 1985. Monthly admission to the SRH were available for 1980–84 and these data indicated the number admitted for alcoholism and/or drug dependence (and whether or not cocaine was the primary drug) and distinguished first from repeat admissions. Admissions to CPC and SRH for alcoholism showed a slow, steady increase and will not be discussed further.

Drug abuse patients among the wealthy minority on the Bahamas will usually seek care outside the CPC or SRH (including the United States) and some cases from the family islands are treated by local physicians. However, there is no evidence of a change in the accessibility of care or the referral patterns in the Bahamas so changes in the pattern of new admissions reported here do reflect changes in the scale of cocaine abuse in the community. Some patients may have been admitted to both the CPC and the SRH, there being no central data system to exclude such duplicate entries. However, doctors who work at both places feel that overlap will have been very small. During the study period, only 4 drug patients admitted to the SRH were referred from the CPC. Likewise, in discussion with most of the few private psychiatrists on New Providence, it was clear that few of the Bahamian drug abusers they see are not referred to the CPC or the SRH. We conclude that the combined incidence data on new drug abusers from the CPC and the SRH cover most people in the Bahamas whose use of cocaine or other drugs caused problems severe enough for them to seek medical assistance.

RESULTS

Community Psychiatry Clinic

The CRC opened in 1980 but new and returning patients were not distinguished in the clinic statistics until 1982. Quarterly numbers of new cocaine-related admissions have risen from none in 1982 to 299 in 1984, there being a probable decline in 1985. During the early phases of cocaine apearance in the CPC, some of the cocaine use may have been recorded only as "drug abuse" or "drug dependence", but the number of such cases would have been small. If the patient used several drugs (as most did), the drug that seemed to have precipitated the problems for which they sought help was recorded.

Drug abuse increased from 1% of the clinic's patients in 1982 to 9% in 1983 to 39% in 1984, and was 31% in the first 6 months of 1985. The big increase in 1984 was due almost entirely to cocaine dependence. Cocaine-related new admissions really begin in the third quarter of 1983. New cases of depression and/or schizophrenia have been fairly stable over time, suggesting that the increase in drug patients was not primarily due to increased clinic awareness.

Sandilands Rehabilitation Hospital

SRH has a long tradition of treating acutely ill alcholics and drug addicts from the whole of the Bahamas. 86% of the 1984 drug admissions were from New Providence.

Although there were a few cocaine-related admissions during the first three quarters of 1983, a marked increase began in the last quarter of 1983. The number of first drug admissions for which cocaine was the primary cause increased sharply from 1 in 1980 to 224 in 1984. The number of first admissions due primarily to other drugs was more stable. So great was the increase in admissions for cocaine abuse that recording of admission numbers became less complete after November, 1984; numbers for the last quarter of 1984 are estimated from those for October and November.

Often a patient would be admitted with drug abuse and symptoms suggestive of underlying psychiatric disease. Usually the paranoia, halucinations, and so on were due to the drug use, so whenever cocaine or other drug abuse was indicated as being important, the patient was considered a drug admission.

Mode of Cocaine Use

Smoking (freebasing) accounted for 98% of cocaine-related referrals in 1984. Cocaine base (known in the Eastern USA as "crack") is produced when cocaine hydrochloride power is treated with alkali. It is a volatile with modest heating and is easily absorbed through the lungs and rapidly transmitted to the brain. Some experienced addicts made their own freebase cocaine in the early 1980's but most did not know how to do it or did not bother, and the predominant form used to be snorting. By 1984 the pushers were selling only the freebase form, smoked using a home-made pipe ("camoke"). When cocaine is smoked up to 80% of it reaches the brain, and the "rush" can begin in 8-12 s, producing a short period of ecstasy. This fleeting sensation is most powerful on the first use of cocaine and though addicts seek to repeat it the same sensation is not experienced again.

The most common patterns of usage varies from a few hours, during which time the user may consume 4–5 g cocaine, to a few days of intermittent use, usually over a weekend, during which time up to 10 g may be consumed. Most patients report using the drug at freebasing parties or "base houses".

Clinical Spectrum

Cocaine-dependent individuals usually seek help during or after some crisis, financial, social, medical, or psychological. For example, an addict whose money had gone might seek help on his own initiative or under pressure from family, friends, or employers. Others, who had had to steal to support the habit or whose addiction had made them violent, were referred by the courts.

The most common physical problems were seizures, severe itching ("the cocaine bug"), loss of consciousness ("tripping out"), cardiac arrhythmia, vertigo, pneumonia, gastrointestinal symptoms, and avitaminosis associated with severe malnutrition. Several addicts were referred from maternity wards.

The cocaine addicts often presented with severe depression, manifest by unkempt appearance, insomnia, anorexia, withdrawal, and suicidal ideation. There were at least 10 cocaine-associated deaths, 5 of which were suicides. Cocaine psychosis was common; the patient would present with severe agitation, impaired judgment, paranoid ideation, intense denial, violent behaviour, threats of suicide or homicide, and hallucinations. In periods of lucidity they would try to mislead the physician, and a relative or friend was needed to confirm the psychotic state.

Demographic Characteristics

For 1984, 81% of cocaine admissions to SRH were males and male drug abusers in general were aged 11–56 years (mean 25). Cocaine users tended to be slightly older than other drug users (26 vs 22.5 years). Female drug addicts were aged 15–39 years (mean 24 years). Almost all patients were Bahamian.

Other Forms of Surveillance

Most patients seen at the Sandilands Hospital drug clinic were referred after discharge from the SRH so data from this clinic were not included. About 60% of the patients seen were using both cocaine and cannabis, although it had usually been cocaine that had precipitated the hospital admission. Neither suicide nor drug-related death is usually recorded on death certificates in the Bahamas so we decided not to use vital statistics as a surveillance method. Police statistics showed some increase in street drug arrests in 1984, but not of the magnitude suggested by the clinic and hospital admission data. In 1980–83 drug arrests averaged 1094 a year with no clear trend over time. There were 1501 arrests for 1984, an increase of 37%.

DISCUSSION

In the Bahamas, data from public psychiatric services demonstrate an epidemic of cocaine abuse requiring medical care. Cannabis and alcohol were often used to control adverse symptoms from cocaine use. In early 1983 something—a major change in the incidence of new drug users, especially cocaine users, or in the method of use—upset the previous drug-use equilibrium, suddenly forcing hundreds of people to seek treatment for complications of drug abuse.

The most obvious explanation is that cocaine was suddenly introduced to the islands or that its price fell. Former addicts, who were on cocaine in the 1970s, confirm that cocaine powder had been available, if expensive, for years, but that in late 1982 or early 1983 the drug suddenly became much more plentiful as production in South America increased. The street price cocaine in Nassau fell to one-fifth of its former level.

Ex-addicts also told us that at about the time that cocaine became more plentiful and cheaper drug pushers switched from selling powdered cocaine ("snow") for nasal inhalation or injection to the pure alkaloid form ("rocks" or "freebase") which is used exclusively for smoking. It suddenly became very difficult to obtain powder in Nassau. By making this change, the drug pushers were forcing all cocaine users to become addicts. Many pushers are themselves addicts and have to sell the drug to feed their own habits. Selling freebase guarantees an eager market for the increasingly available cocaine.

Smith [10] claims that an important reason for the increase in cocaine deaths in the San Francisco area was higher potency cocaine. Siegel [1] reported that the recovery of cocaine freebase from pure cocaine hydrochloride, using various street kits, ranged from 41% to 72% and, although the kits removed some of the adulterants, some lignocaine and ephedrine, for example, was often left with the cocaine. Ex-addicts indicated that the street cocaine powder in Nassau had usually been "cut" (diluted) about 50% before sale. Although we have no direct data about cocaine purity, the sources for the cocaine remained similar; nor is the extraction process perfect. Changes in levels of purity seem to be an inadequate explanation for our findings.

We conclude that the medical epidemic of cocaine-related physical and psychiatric problems in the Bahamas was related to the interaction of the availability of cheaper cocaine and a switch from powder to freebase.

Monitoring the method of selling may be critical both for Western nations, the targets of the cocaine market, and for developing nations such as the Bahamas via which the drug is shipped and those South American countries that produce it. We found surveillance of medical services to be a quick and effective way of monitoring some aspects of the drug situation in the Bahamas, and it could be in the self-interest of target nations to assist producer and trans-shipment countries not only to control drug abuse but also to maintain an intensive surveillance system. As cocaine freebasing becomes more popular and particularly if the vending pattern switches to the freebase form (as is starting to happen in some US cities), emergency rooms, mental health clinics, and psychiatric hospitals will need to prepare for an unprecedented influx of drug addicts.

THE ANTI-DRUG ABUSE ACT OF 1988

Sec. 2012. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this subtitle with respect to substance abuse are—

(1) to prevent the transmission of the etiologic agent for acquired immune deficiency syndrome by ensuring that treatment services for intravenous drug abuse are available to intravenous drug abusers:

(2) to continue the Federal Government's partnership with the States in the development, maintenance, and improvement of community-based alcohol and drug abuse programs;

(3) to provide financial and technical assistance to the States and communities in their efforts to develop and maintain a core of prevention services for the purpose of reducing the incidence of substance abuse and the demand for alcohol and drug abuse treatment;

(4) to assist and encourage States in the initiation and expansion of prevention and treatment services to underserved populations;

(5) to increase, to the greatest extent possible, the availability and quality of treatment services so that treatment on request may be provided to all individuals desiring to rid themselves of their substance abuse problem; and

(6) to increase understanding about the extent of alcohol abuse and other forms of drug abuse by expanding data collection activities and supporting research on the comparative cost and efficacy of substance abuse prevention and treatment services.

COMMITMENT TO DRUG TREATMENT IS THE LAW

To the Editor:

Anthony Lewis calls upon President Bush to make a commitment to provide treatment to drug users (column, Sept. 10). This proposal is frequently heard, but the commitment has already been made. Section 2012 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 states it is the act's intention "That treatment on request may be provided to all individuals desiring to rid themselves of their substance abuse problems."

I know the provision is there; I put it there. On May 31, 1988, I proposed to the Democratic task force drafting the act that we declare a national policy of "treatment on request," and this was agreed to. (Wish I had written "on application," but there.) I bring this up only to make a further point. The senators involved knew that while we were establishing treatment on request as law, there was in fact no treatment available for crack cocaine addition. I stated this repeatedly. In passing the act, we were in effect committing the nation to developing a treatment.

I believe it fair to say that the details of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act were sketchily reported at the time. This is understandable. The bill drew heavily on a private communication from Prof. James Q. Wilson. It was drafted by ad hoc committees, without the usual apparatus of hearings and mark-up and passed in the final hours of the 100th Congress. But it is time to be clear that the legislation set forth a strategy beginning with treatment.

The executive summary of the President's proposal cites four "fundamental themes" without mentioning treatment. Perhaps because the statute is so little known, it is little noticed that the President's proposal does not really follow through. On the other hand, Mr. Bush has appointed Dr. Herbert Kleber of Yale University Medical School as deputy director for demand reduction. Dr. Kleber was of great help in drafting the act.

DANIEL PATRICK MOYNIHAN,
U.S. Senator from New York,
WASHINGTON, Sept. 11, 1988.

[From the New York Times, Feb. 26, 1989]

YES, WE DO NEED A "METHADONE CLONE"

(By Daniel Patrick Moynihan)

WASHINGTON.—Recent calls for developing a "methadone clone" for cocaine are altogether right. We have a public health emergency on our hands, and there is no prospect of an effective response without some pharmacological treatment.

May I offer two comments in the context of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act, which passed in the closing hours of the 100th Congress? The basic thrust of the legislation was to get beyond the definition of drug abuse as a law enforcement problem. It is surely that. But it is also, and more importantly, a public health problem.

Conceptually, we spoke of reducing "supply on the one hand and demand on the other." Supply is the realm of law enforcement: smuggling, dealing. Demand is finding a way to reduce drug use. We put these ideas in the statute. There was to be a "Director of National Drug Control Policy." The celebrated czar William J. Bennett has been confirmed in this post. He is to have two deputies: Deputy Director for Demand Reduction and a Deputy Director for Supply Reduction. Note that demand comes first.

The central policy initiative embodied in the act calls for "treatment on request." Specifically, Section 2011, entitled "Purposes," calls on the Federal Government "to increase, to the greatest extent possible, the availability and quality of treatment services so that treatment on request may be provided to all individuals to rid themselves of their substance abuse problems." [My emphasis.]

This was and is a sweeping proposal. We understood this. And we had no illusion that large-scale treatment could be provided by existing therapies. A pharmacological block for cocaine will be indispensable. Until one appears, "treatment on request" must remain an aspiration rather than a program.

I believe we also understood that a "methadone clone" for cocaine, while absolutely necessary, would not in itself be sufficient. Few cocaine addicts, it should be noted, use cocaine alone. For them, overcoming addiction means swearing off alcohol, heroin, PCP, marijuana. Drug addiction is a chronic relapsing disease.

But crack is the most vicious form that the species—us, that is—seems ever to have encountered. It appeared in the Bahamas in 1983, in New York in 1985 and has since spread in a classic epidemiological pattern. From first use to debilitation takes only about six weeks. At that point victims are likely to look for treatment or at least to be prepared to try treatment if it's offered. A pharmacological block will be needed to mount any effort proportionate to the size of the afflicted population.

And the size? No one knows, but responsible estimates put the number of crack users in New York City alone at as many as 600,000. The city has only 1.1 million inhabitants between the ages of 15 and 24. That much I offer as fact. What follows comes under the heading of conjecture. Important, as the saying goes, if true. It has to do with prestige in science.

Treatment in the form of methadone maintenance was developed by Drs. Vincent P. Dole and Marie Nyswander in New York City in the early 1960's. The drug works by "blocking" the effect of heroin—a trade name, incidentally, of the Bayer aspirin folk. Tested on employees in Germany a century ago, it made them feel "heroisch."

Once a patient is taking methadone, the various "talking" therapies have a chance. The medication works. Arguably, it broke the heroin epidemic of the 1960's. Were Dr. Dole and Dr. Nyswander thanked? Shall we say, sort of? The medical profession cared little about the disease, and correspondingly little about its treatment. Last year, Dr. Dole received a Lasker Award, his partner (and wife) having, in the meantime, died. That's about it.

There is such a thing as prestige in science and it tends to allocate resources. The person who cracks the AIDS puzzle will get a Nobel Prize, We should make it clear that we will be just as appreciative of those who discover a pharmacological block for cocaine. There is work in progress. And some clues. But no guarantee.

In the meantime, Ronald Reagan's last budget cut the research funds available to the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In an unusual move, the Chair wishes to state to the Senator that he thinks his remarks were magnificent, and I hope they are heard by all parties in the Senate and elsewhere. They were to the point on the subject that is very, very unknown and very difficult for the American people to understand.

I thank the Senator. I am sorry the time is up.

The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I too want to congratulate the Senator from New York. We will take a look at his proposal. It makes sense to me. I do not know what the cost would be. But certainly it deserves our look.

I thank the Senator from New York for his thoughtful comments.

Mr. President, I yield myself about 5 minutes. I know of no other request for time on this side. It would be my hope after I complete to yield back the time on this side, which might move the vote up a little earlier because I know the majority leader would very much like to finish this bill and get back on the Defense appropriation bill.

I thank him for the requests for time and for the opportunity to speak again on the amendments. So I hope we can accommodate the majority leader.

DRUG NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. President, for the past 1½ weeks, 18 of our colleagues having been meeting for hours on end, well into several nights, on the so-called drug bill.

It has been a tremendous effort to craft an agreement.

I want to first state very clearly that these negotiations were undertaken following the lead of President George Bush and his Drug Control Director Bill Bennett. As I have stated previously, the President's strategy is sound, will be effective, and deserves bipartisan support.

THE AGREEMENT

The President called for increasing antidrug and crime activities by the Federal Government by $2.7 billion over last year's level, to a total of about $8.4 billion. The Senate agreement will increase this amount by $410 million—that is $400 million for treatment and education and $10 million for State and local law enforcement.

The bottom line, as far as the American people are concerned, isn't how much money we can spend: It is how effective are we going to be in a real crackdown on drugs and crime.

There are four matters contained in the President's drug strategy that will be offered on the Transportation appropriations bill—increased accountability and data assimilation by treatment providers, requiring drug-free school plans in all elementary, secondary, and higher education institutions, providing transfers to the special forfeiture fund for use by the Drug Control Director, as well as a waiver of two provisions of current law to permit the Andean cocaine reduction initiative to go forward.

While the negotiators were unable to agree on the final request of the President—a requirement that all State and local arrestees, prisoners, and those on probation and parole be drug tested. Again, the agreement contemplates a future drug bill for consideration of this and other antidrug amendments.

Mr. President, the agreement also calls for consideration of the President's crime bill this year. We simply cannot adjourn for the year talking tough on drugs without addressing the fact that the drug problem in our country is also a crime problem; that violent crime increases are directly attributable to drug activity, and that it is well past time to get tough on drug manufacturers, traffickers, dealers, and users. We have agreed to the money portion of the crime bill, now it is time to back up the rhetoric and the spending by giving police, prosecutors, and the courts the tools they are crying out for to combat crime—starting with habeas corpus reform, a good faith exemption in the exclusionary rule and the Federal death penalty. The American people are way ahead of us on this one—they know you cannot win the war on drugs if you won't wage a war on crime.

I would also like to get some agreement on supplemental appropriations, to prevent future "piling on" as we have witnessed on the drug strategy. In my view, we have done all the spending the American taxpayer can stand. It is time to deliver—on drugs and crime.

I would like to pay tribute to the Republican negotiators—Senator MARK HATFIELD, who served as the Republican chairman, Senators STROM THURMOND, TED STEVENS, JOHN WARNER, PHIL GRAMM, WARREN RUDMAN, PETE DOMENICI, ORRIN HATCH, and AL D'AMATO along with their Democratic counterparts, led by Appropriations Committee Chairman ROBERT BYRD.

The President, Bill Bennett, OMB Director Dick Darman, Chief of Staff, John Sununu, Defense Secretary, Dick Cheney, and others in the Cabinet including Attorney General Dick Thornburgh and Treasury Secretary Nick Brady deserve our highest respect and admiration for the countless hours they spent in preparing the strategy as well as assisting with the negotiations here in the Senate.

They did a remarkable job on a very difficult and wide ranging set of issues which are of paramount importance to the American people. The Senate has been well served, but more importantly, so have the citizens of our country.

I think it has been said earlier on the floor by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD], who pretty much explained the compromise, that there was a lot of effort. Everybody deserves to be commended for their efforts.

I think it is clear to all of us and most everyone else that the negotiations were undertaken following the lead of President Bush and his Drug Control Director, Bill Bennett.

As I have stated before, I think the President's strategy is sound. It is going to be effective. It deserves bipartisan support. I think it has had bipartisan support. We may nibble around the edges. We may have different ideas on some programs, but all and all we mandated the President to give us the strategy, and he will have to in fact. The drug czar, Mr. Bennett, has to report again next February with more goals, and whether or not he has been able to meet his early strategy. So we pretty much outlined what the President should do. He did it.

We have also outlined by statute what the so-called drug czar should do, and he will do it. In the meantime, we will have ideas. We may want more money for certain things and less for others.

But it seems to me that the President called for increasing antidrug crime activities by the Federal Government by about $2.7 billion over last year's level, to a total of about $8.4 billion.

I am not naive enough to think if we are still here 5 years from now we will be talking about $40 billion, $50 billion, or more. We are not going to whip this problem in 1 year, 2 years, 3 years, or 4 years.

But the President's approach was, let us find out what works. Let us spend what money we need to spend, and then we will have some experience to build on the Senate agreement.

Senator BYRD, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who has had a long history of involvement on this floor with drug legislation—1986, 1988—it was his view and the view of others on the Democratic side that, well, $8.4 billion was not enough.

So we had the Byrd amendment. We had about 7 or 8 days of negotiations by Republicans and Democrats. And the bottom line is we are going to increase the amount in outlays about $410 million, about $400 million for treatment and education, and $10 million for State and local law enforcement.

I think the bottom line to the American people is not how much money we can spend but how we spend it. Can it be effectively spent? We are going to have a real crackdown on drugs and crime. A lot of things we can do to crack down on drugs and crime do not cost a lot of money; certainly treatment does, education does, interdiction does. A lot of things that we will have to do will cost a great deal of money, but the counties and States have some responsibilities; the parents have responsibilities, as do the churches and the schools. So you put in all the resources we have available, and it is going to be an enormous effort on behalf of all of us.

There are four matters contained in the President's drug program to be offered on the Transportation appropriations bill: Increased accountability and data assimilation by treatment providers; requiring drug-free schools in all elementary, secondary, and higher education institutions; providing transfers and a special forfeiture fund for use by the director, as well as a waiver of two provisions of current law to permit the Andean cocaine reduction initiative to go forward.

We were not able to agree to the final request of the President, the request that all State and local arrestees, prisoners, and those on probation and parole be drug tested. The agreement contemplates a further drug bill for further contemplation of this and other drug amendments.

Mr. President, what I am saying is that we are off to a pretty good start. we are going to have differences on both sides. I do not think every Republican or Democrat will agree with the President. We will not all agree. So I just conclude by saying that we have started, and we are going to continue to wage this fight against drugs. We want to save a generation, if we can, and it may take a generation to do it.

So I thank the negotiators on this side—Senator MITCHELL has thanked the negotiators on that side—led by Senators MARK HATFIELD, THURMOND, STEVENS, WARNER, GRAMM, RUDMAN, DOMENICI, HATCH, and D'AMATO, along with their Democratic counterparts led by Appropriation Committee chairman, ROBERT BYRD. They worked hard. I do not know how many hours they put in last week in addition to their regular work, 30, 40, 50 hours.

I also want to recognize the efforts of the drug czar, Bill Bennett, OMB Director, Dick Darman, Chief of Staff John Sununu, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, and others, because we had a number of meetings in my office while the others were meeting, as well as the Attorney General, Dick Thornburgh, and Treasury Secretary Nick Brady for their help in putting this package together.

So I am pleased that we are moving forward. I am pleased we have been able to do it without slowing down any appropriations bills, and I know that my colleagues will soon vote on this amendment. I would assume that the vote will be unanimous.

Mr. President, I yield back any time on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair now recognizes the senior Senator from Alabama for 5 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise to support this plan to fight drugs in America. I have been supportive of all of the proposals that have come out to try to rid this Nation of the disease that we see that is striking this country and causing a great deal of harm, a great deal of ills, and it certainly could be called a drug plague.

When the President came out with his proposal, I embraced it and pledged my support. I said I felt that it could be improved, particularly in regard to education. This amendment improves the President's plan; it provides more for law enforcement, more for education, more for rehabilitation, and I think that these additions which the President has agreed to now will add to our ability to be able to combat this war. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I held hearings in my State in three large cities. We had law enforcement groups that represented the entire area of law enforcement. We had those in charge of the gulf coast, pertaining to the Coast Guard, the Director pertaining to customs in the gulf coast; FBI agents in charge; DEA agents that were in charge of the entire gulf coast relative to trying to fight drugs and to see that drugs do not come into this country.

In addition to this, at the hearings there were a great number of other law enforcement officers, sheriffs, police chiefs, the policemen on the beat. Every one of these law enforcement officials told me at the hearings that if we were going to win the war on drugs, that it had to be won in the schools. They approached the problem realizing that they would do everything they could in law enforcement, but if we are going to win the war on drugs, we have to cut down on the demand side, and the schools are the areas that could have the most effect pertaining to the cutting down on the demand side.

So I am pleased to add my voice to support this amendment that has come out. I think we now have a good overall plan dealing with drugs. We must have the cooperation of the American people, the cooperation of the family, the cooperation of the church, the cooperation of the teachers in the schools, in order to try to turn peer pressure around from where it has been in the past, where peers have tried to make their counterparts use drugs; we must now turn it around, where in effect school children ostracize those who even think about using drugs. So I am hopeful that we are starting on a new era relative to drugs, and that is the eradication, eventually, of the use of drugs in this country.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired. The Senator from Iowa is recognized for 7 minutes, yielding time from the minority leader.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I want to thank the distinguished minority leader for yielding me this time. I want to voice my strong support of the revised amendment offered by Senator BYRD on behalf of all of us who worked so hard on the antidrug package before us.

I congratulate Senator BYRD for his leadership and his diligence, his continuing tireless efforts to get all of us together. I was fortunate and proud enough to be on the task force with Senator BYRD which was responsible for drafting this compromise antidrug package. He kept us all there and kept us together until we worked out this package which represents a very commendable compromise. I also want to recognize and to thank Senator HATFIELD for his strong efforts, and again, his stick-to-itiveness to make sure we reach this compromise. To all my colleagues, both Republicans and Democrats on that task force, fighting the war on drugs is not a partisan issue. It is something that ought to be totally bipartisan, and that is the spirit of what we have here before us today.

As others have said when the President announced his national drug strategy package I was very supportive and I still support President Bush's proposal to fight drugs. However, there was a gap in his program in that not one new dollar was added for education. That is what we have taken care of here. The President's package added only a small amount for treatment and rehabilitation.

The Byrd package adds more. The Byrd amendment is a real call to battle on the drug war. It does not hide behind rhetoric and unrealistic expectations. The Byrd amendment seeks to fight the drug war with real bullets and not words. This amendment puts our money where our mouth is, and pays for it through realistic and achievable savings. The Byrd amendment will provide a total for our war on drugs that is necessary and is meaningful and is one that will go a long way toward really answering the problem that we have.

But putting all the money on interdiction alone cannot solve the problem. I am convinced that we must reduce the demand for these drugs and we can achieve this, in part, by seeing that drug addicts enter treatment programs and that all children of all ages, regardless of income, where they may be born or raised, are educated about the danger of drugs.

This year under the drug-free schools a total of about $14,000 a year will go to each school district in America. That is not even enough money to hire one drug counselor in each school district. The Byrd amendment before us boosted that by about 70 percent. That will give the school districts the ability to not only hire a counselor but plan, program, and fund ongoing educational programs in all of our schools across America.

As a result of the Byrd amendment, my home State of Iowa will see the level of drug education funding increase from $3.2 million to more than $5.5 million, putting real dollars in hands of those who seek to set our children on the right path. Our children are on the front lines of the war on drugs; we must get to them before the druggers do.

Earlier this year, President Bush went to Pennsylvania, where he pointed out that drugs are not just an urban problem, they are also a rural problem. I am glad that he said that because the Byrd amendment includes an adequate level of funding to reach all areas of the country including the rural States where the problem has also grown.

Lastly, I point out that the Byrd amendment also includes more money for treatment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at this point a listing of all of the amounts of money and the programs to which the money goes and a description of those programs that fall under my jurisdiction under the Labor, Health, Human Resources and Education Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Employee Substance Abuse Program—+$2,000,000.

This program provides grants to employers for developing or expanding substance abuse prevention activities in the workplace including employee assistance programs that focus on treating and preventing drug and alcohol abuse. Funds are also used for training activiites on the interaction of drugs and hazardous chemicals.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

Health Resources and Services Administration

Health Care for the Homeless—+$10,000,000.

This program provides grants to local public and private non-profit entities for the delivery of primary health care services, substance abuse services, and mental health services to homeless people.

Centers for Disease Control

Preventive Health Services Block Grant—+$3,500,000.

An additional $3,150,000 has been provided for the Preventive Health Services Block Grant to be used by the States and the network of county health offices for counseling, referral, demand reduction/information and outreach for substance abuse programs.

Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration

Grants to states

Consolidated Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health block grant—+$462,584,000.

The Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Services block grant provides funds to states for substance abuse prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation services.

New Treatment Grants, crisis areas—+$10,000,000.

This new program, proposed by the administration, would provide treatment grants to areas with highest incidence of drug abuse. The Committee has increased funds to expand the capacity of high-impact areas to treat drug addicts.

National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA)

Research—+$25,000,000.

The Committeee has increased funds for NIDA research on the effectiveness of drug abuse treatments, prevention, the effects of drug abuse, and other relevant projects.

Treatment demonstrations—+$40,000,000.

The additional funds have been provided to support community-based projects providing drug treatment and vocational training, treatment for pregnant and postpartum women and their infants, and prevention and education for incarcerated IV drug abusers.

National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA)

Research—+$20,000,000.

These additional funds will support research on the biological and behavioral elements of alcohol abuse, the interaction of alcohol and drug abuse, effective treatments, alcohol-related medical disorders, and other relevant projects.

Substance abuse homeless demonstrations—+$8,000,000.

The Committee has provided an additional $8,000,000 to this program, which is jointly administered by the NIDA and NIAAA, to support demonstrations that include outreach services, treatment and recovery, case management, transitional housing, and vocational training.

Office of Substance Abuse Prevention (OSAP)

Prevention programs—+$45,000,000.

The Committee has provided an additional $45,000,000 to support grants for substance abuse prevention targeted to high-risk youth, and pregnant addicts and their infants.

Pregnant Women Substance Abuse Demonstrations—(+$25,000,000).

In FY89, approximately $4,500,000 is available for model projects for treatment, prevention, and education of pregnant and post-partum women and their infants. The Committee has added $45,000,000 for OSAP prevention demonstrations in FY90, of which not less than $25,000,000 shall be available for projects for pregnant and postpartum women and their infants.

Community youth activity program—+$7,500,000.

The Committee has increased by $7,500,000 the amount provided to this program, which funds block grants to States, competitive State grants, and projects of national significance.

New community prevention grants—+$20,000,000.

The Committee has provided an additional $20,000,000 for grants to establish programs operated by community-based coalitions representing parents, schools, businesses, and youth in developing comprehensive prevention programs.

Training—+$25,000,000.

The Committee is concerned that shortages of substance abuse counselors sharply limit the ability to expand treatment programs. The additonal funds will support continuing education for substance abuse prevention for counselors, health professionals, social workers and community organization staff; and training of faculty at health professions schools to develop model teaching curricula.

Treatment improvement project—+$40,000,000.

The Committee has provided $40,000,000, as requested by the administration, for a new treatment improvement project. The funds will be used to expand treatment capacity by 6,000-7,000 treatment slots for adolescents, minorities, pregnant and postpartum women and their infants, and residents of public housing projects. Projects funded under this program will be evaluated to determine their effectiveness and to seek means of improving treatment services.

ADAMHA/IHS Program on Substance Abuse Treatment—+$5,000,000.

The extensive Indian Health Service primary care service system has the capacity to diagnose and treat alcohol abuse, but lacks the ability to effectively diagnose and treat drug abuse. The Committee has included $5,000,000 to allow ADAMHA and IHS to develop a program to enhance treatment capacity for drug abuse and to improve the efficacy and efficiency of treatment delivered to the American Indian population. The effort would be combined with an existing intra agency agreement.

Family Support Administration

Community Services Block Grant—+$10,000,000.

A variety of anti-poverty services are provided through a nation-wide network of more than 900 local Community Action Agencies, including assistance to the homeless and emergency feeding activities. The $10,000,000 recommended would permit these agencies to launch new efforts providing drug counseling and referral services for low-income persons.

National Youth Sports Program—+$1,000,000.

The National Youth Sports Program provides young people with the opportunity to be involved in a positive sports and educational program as an alternative to involvement in drugs and crime in their communities. The additional $1,000,000 recommended will allow these local programs to expand existing activities, emphasizing drug abuse education.

Human Development Services

Program for Children, Youth and Families, Family Crisis Program

Abandoned Infants—+$6,000,000.

The number of abandoned infants born addicted to drugs or with other serious problems because of substance abuse by their mothers is growing daily. An additional $6,000,000 is provided for programs to begin to deal with this problem.

Runaway and Homeless Youth—+$2,500,000.

The Committee has provided an additional $2,500,000 for Runaway and Homeless Youth. The Committee is concerned that there is an inadequate program to shelter homeless youth. Too young for adult shelters, youth are being turned away from runaway and homeless youth shelters because of a lack of capacity. This additional funding will provide expanded facilities.

Human Services Research, Training, and Demonstration

Runaway Youth Activities—+$13,000,000.

The homeless youth situation is exacerbated by the limitation on the number of days which a youth may remain at a runaway and homeless youth shelter. This problem, coupled with a lack of sufficient funding for drug counseling and prevention efforts, more often than not leave homeless youth particularly vulnerable to prostitution and involvement in selling and/or using drugs. The Committee has, therefore, provided $5,000,000 for Transitional Living, $5,000,000 for Runaway Youth Activities-Drugs, and $3,000,000 for Youth Gang Substance Abuse programs.

Temporary Child Care-Crisis Nurseries—+$3,000,000.

An additional $3,000,000 has been provided for temporary child care-crisis nurseries. This program provides grants to states to support the establishment, maintenance and expansion of programs to provide care to children who are abused or neglected or at high-risk. Unfortunately, cases of abuse or neglect are on the increase as a result of substance abuse.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Drug Free Schools and Communities Act

State Grants—+$172,000,000.

This program is the primary federal effort in assisting local school districts in educating the nation's children as to the dangers of drugs. This additional amount will bring the total Senate recommendation for this program to $491,194,000. While the President cited a major initiative in his recent national address for drug education, his budget request was not amended above the original Reagan request for a $10,000,000 increase for the Drug Free Schools program. Since the State grant funds flow by formula to almost all of the nation's 16,000 school districts, the additional $172,000,000 will still result in relatively small payments to individual school districts.

Urban and Rural Emergency Grants—(+$25,000,000).

President Bush's February budget request included $25,000,000 for "Urban Emergency Grants" as a free-standing authorization for grants to urban school districts with especially acute drug abuse problems. The amendment expands the use of these funds to include grants to rural areas facing similar problems. Funds for these expanded purposes are provided to each Governor as part of the State Grant program. The expanded focus and distribution mechanism for these funds reflects the authorizing legislation for this activity as reported unanimously by the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources. The amendment anticipates that regulations controlling the use of these funds by the Governors will reflect the authorizing legislation.

National Programs—+$2,000,000.

This line-item supports regional technical assistance centers which assist local school districts in developing and implementing drug prevention curricula. Model demonstrations are also supported out of this program including programs at colleges and universities and programs for Indian youth and Native Hawaiians. The amendment anticipates that the funding provided will be allocated on a pro-rata basis among the authorized activities within the "National Programs" account.

Teacher Training—+$7,500,000.

This program was first authorized in the 1988 Drug Act and funded in fiscal year 1989 at $7,000,000. The additional amount provided will bring the total Senate recommendation for this program to $15,000,000, $5,000,000 below the authorized ceiling for fiscal year 1990. Funds are used to support grants to establish, expand, or enhance programs that train teachers, administrators and other school personnel concerning drug abuse education and prevention.

Innovative Alcohol Abuse Programs—+$2,000,000.

This program was also first authorized in the 1988 Drug Act within the Education Department's Fund for Innovation (Title IV of Public Law 100-297). Fiscal year 1990 will be the first year of funding for this activity. Funds will be used to develop and disseminate model programs addressing alcohol abuse, especially for the children of alcoholics. Alcohol remains the "drug" of choice for America's youth in almost all areas of the country. It is also the "drug" with which children have the earliest contact. The children of alcoholics are far more likely to abuse alcohol than their peers.

ACTION

Drug Prevention Volunteer Demonstrations—+$1,500,000.

This activity has been funded for the last three fiscal years and was originally authorized in the Omnibus Drug Act of 1986. It was reauthorized in the 1988 Drug Act. The additional funding would bring the total recommended by the Senate to just below the authorized ceiling. This program supports model community-based programs involving volunteers in drug prevention activities. Ten percent of the funds provided may be utilized by the agency for staff support needs related to these drug prevention efforts.

Mr. HARKIN. In Iowa, for example, about 125,000 people in my State are in need of drug abuse treatment according to the Iowa Department of Public Health. But Iowa only has slots for 25,000. As a result, there are people who are knocking on our doors asking for treatment. There are a whole host of other people out there who have not knocked on the door yet and we wanted to reach out. That is true in Iowa, I know it is true in the President's home State of Kentucky, in Wisconsin, New York, or other States. There are waiting lists of 6 weeks and some up to 6 months.

We all heard the story of people who come in for treatment, get sent out on F Street and told to come back in 6 months or 7 months because that is how long the waiting list is. We have to treat these people. We should have a goal in this country of treatment on demand. If someone who is addicted to drugs wants treatment, that individual ought to get treatment at that point in time and not be sent back on the street. In 40 States, there are about 1.2 million people currently in treatment, but about 10.2 million on the waiting list just for treatment.

This amendment increases treatment money so we can reduce waiting lists and get the people who are presently waiting to get treated, treated.

Last Mr. President, the Byrd amendment not only fully funds the President's request but goes on to give the States the funds needed to do this job. Congress envisioned in its 1988 anti-drug bill that 50 percent of the money would go to address supply side problems with, 50 percent for the demand side—education, treatment, rehabilitation.

The only flaw that I saw in President Bush's proposal was that 70 percent went for interdiction and law enforcement, while only 30 percent went for education, treatment, and rehabilitation. The Byrd amendment intends to right that. Fifty-three percent of the money in the Byrd amendment goes to law enforcement, 47 percent goes to education, treatment, and rehabilitation.

I believe that is closer to the mark that Congress established last year and that President Reagan agreed to. We cannot win the war on drugs alone just by drying up the cocaine field in Colombia and Bolivia. They will move someplace else and ship their illegal drug across our borders. We have to mount a determined and full frontal attack on demand for drugs. That required helping our children early on in their lives with continuing education, so that they can really learn how to say no to drugs.

Mr. President, I rise to voice my strong support to the revised amendment now offered by Senator BYRD which would provide almost $3.2 billion in additional funding for drug programs over funding included in the regular fiscal year 1990 appropriations bills. Almost $1 billion of this total, $944 million, is for programs under the jurisdiction of the Appropriations subcommittee that I chair, the Labor, HHS, Education Subcommittee. I was very pleased to work with Senator BYRD, the chairman of the full Appropriations Committee, as well as Senator SPECTER, the ranking minority member of the Labor-HHS Subcommittee, in the development of this effort.

The Byrd amendment is a real call to battle for the drug war. It does not hide behind rhetoric and unrealistic expectations. The Byrd amendment seeks to fight the drug war with real bullets, not words. This amendment put our money where our mouth is, and pays for it through realistic and achievable savings. The Byrd amendment will provide a total for our war on drugs in fiscal year 1990 which will be $1.1 billion more than the amount requested by President Bush as part of his September drug strategy.

Mr. President, in the interest of time, I would like to confine my comments of support to those programs within the jurisdiction of my Labor-HHS-Education Subcommittee. These are the programs that help reduce demand for drugs. They do this by providing treatment and counseling, and by providing education to school-age children. While all the efforts to reduce the flow of drugs into this country are of critical importance, this alone cannot solve the problem. I am convinced that we must reduce the demand for these drugs. And we can achieve this at least in part by seeing that drug addicts enter treatment programs and children of all ages are educated about the dangers of drugs.

The largest single item included in the $1 billion package is an increase of $462.6 million for the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Services Block Grant Program. This will bring the total Senate recommendation for the block grant up to $1.278 billion, considerably closer to the authorized level for this program. These funds go to each of the States by formula and support, along with State funding, drug treatment and rehabilitation programs. In my State of Iowa, for example, we have 29 such drug treatment centers that serve all 99 counties of Iowa. The waiting list for treatment in these programs has doubled and tripled in the last several years, and an expansion to the fully authorized level is well justified. The Byrd amendment will go a long way toward attacking the waiting list in my State.

The next largest increase included in the $944 million subcommittee package is for the Drug Free Schools Program in the Department of Education.

The Byrd amendment includes a $183,500,000 increase for State grants to schools. At the current funding level, each school district receives roughly $14,000, not even enough to hire one trained counselor. This increase will give a significant boost of more than 70 percent to our various school districts across the country. As a result of the Byrd amendment, my home State of Iowa should see its level of drug education funding go from $3.2 million to more than $5.5 million, getting some real dollars in the hands of those that seek to set our children on the right path.

Earlier this year, President Bush traveled to Conestoga Valley High School in Lancaster, PA, to highlight the fact that drugs are threatening the quality of life throughout America, not just in our major cities. President Bush said:

> You know we often think of drug abuse as an urban inner-city phenomenon. Millions of Americans think of their own communities and they say, "it can't happen here." Well, the people of rural Pennsylvania know that's not true.

Well, all I can say is that the people of rural Iowa know it just as well. So I am glad that the Byrd amendment includes an adequate level of funding to reach all areas of the country including the rural States where the problem is also growing.

Mr. President, this package of drug demand reduction programs includes many other smaller initiatives.

Drug and alcohol abuse research funding is increased, as well as additional drug treatment demonstration projects needed to document the effectiveness of new treatment protocols. The Office of Substance Abuse Prevention is increased over $97 million for community youth programs, community prevention grants and training for additional drug counselors.

Within the additional amounts provided in the amendment, I wish to make special mention of a number of initiatives designed to address the needs of addicted pregnant and postpartum women and their infants.

Twenty-five million dollars is set aside for prevention grants within the Office of Substance Abuse Prevention solely for demonstration programs involving pregnant women. There are also a number of other programs in the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration which are receiving additional funds under this amendment and specifically address the needs of pregnant women.

Mr. President, President Bush requested an increase of $165 million for the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Services Block Grant Program, and $135 million for other drug abuse research and demonstration programs. While I applaud the President for his initiative, I believe that more must be done to reduce demand, to reduce the interest of our children in experimenting with and using drugs, and to reduce the long waiting lists for people who want to cure their addiction by enrolling in a drug treatment program. The Byrd amendment fully funds the President's request, then goes beyond that request to give the Federal Government and the States the funds urgently needed to do this job.

Finally, Mr. President, I wish to take a moment to commend the very hard work of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, who also chaired the bipartisan task force which developed this revised amendment. Chairman BYRD demonstrated extraordinary patience and perseverance through numerous meetings of the task force until a deal could be hammered out. The amendment before us is a testament to his very hard work as well as his deep concern for the drug issue which I share.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FORD). The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KOHL] is recognized for not to exceed 7 minutes.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise today to support the agreement reached by the leadership.

Now that we have resolved the broad issue of whether we are going to spend more money on the drug war, we need to make sure that we spend it wisely—that we target what are very limited resources to programs which will work and which address critical problems created by substance abuse. This agreement, which I hope will be approved by our colleagues, is an attempt to do just that.

For the last few months, we have heard a great deal about what we have come to call "crack babies." I chaired a hearing on this issue in the Governmental Affairs Committee. Along with almost 30 of our colleagues, we wrote to President Bush and asked him to address this at-risk population in his drug plan. And, in his speech to the Nation, the President responded to that request. His efforts to focus attention on this issue have been most helpful.

A number of Senators have also attempted to address this problem. Senator KENNEDY, as chairman of the Labor Committee and Senator DODD as chairman of the Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs and Alcohol, have been leaders on this issue long before it became the subject of popular discussion. Their work has been absolutely essential. Senator GLENN used his position as chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee to allow me to focus on this issue. His support and cooperation made it possible for all of us to learn a good deal more about this issue. Indeed, after participating in hearings I chaired in the Governmental Affairs Committee, Senator WILSON also became concerned about this problem and has proposed increased funding for it.

Building on that work and taking advantage of the increase in funding, there is a consensus that we ought to do more—and this amendment does that.

When the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, made it clear that he wanted to find ways to increase spending on treatment and prevention programs, a number of us began to think of ways we could use those additional resources to get at the problem of parental substance abuse. In that process, I have worked closely with Senator SIMON, in particular, whose concern for "crack babies" and whose desire to address the needs of addicted pregnant women are beyond question. The Office of Substance Abuse Prevention demonstrations that he initiated last year are the backbone of our efforts here today.

In any event, Mr. President, I am very appreciative of the fact that this agreement includes three proposals that I have authored. I strongly believe that funding of these three programs will allow us to redouble our efforts against maternal substance abuse.

First, we will provide $50 million for a grant program for comprehensive treatment of substance abusing women and their children. The attention paid to the "crack baby" issue has revealed that far too many women are endangering the lives and health of their children by doing drugs while they are pregnant. We also know that those children, once exposed, often lead lives which are diminished in terms of mental and physical development. We have to deal with this problem. And we know how to deal with it. We just have not had the resources to do it well. In my own State of Wisconsin we have one residential treatment program for pregnant women and children. It has done some marvelous work. But it only has the resources to work with 10 women at a time—even though in Milwaukee County alone there are 500 pregnant women who need drug treatment this year.

Even this grant program will not provide comprehensive treatment on request to all women who are seeking it, but it will dramatically strengthen our effort.

Second, this agreement will increase grants to States for emergency child protective services. As recent events demonstrate, the child protective service system is overwhelmed by infants born exposed to drugs, and children living with a parent abusing drugs or alcohol. Despite this crisis, States now have access to only $9 million in grants under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. My proposal increases those grants by roughly $40 million to encourage States and local agencies to address this crisis.

Third, the amendment would target existing child abuse prevention grants to community-based efforts to reach substance abusing parents before they abuse or neglect their children.

And finally, the amendment includes a proposal by Senator SIMON to authorize a National Resource and Information Center for Perinatal Addiction. The Center will serve as an invaluable resource to hundreds of thousands of health care professionals confronting the crisis of maternal substance abuse. In addition to the coordination and dissemination of research, the Center will develop and distribute training and educational information, will act as a treatment program clearinghouse, and will develop and manage a national toll-free hotline.

There are few victims of cocaine and crack that are as vulnerable or as in need of our help as are pregnant women and their infants, Mr. President. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] is now recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, point of parliamentary inquiry. I believe the Senator from Nebraska has pressing commitments, if I could just yield to him for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would the Senator be yielding some of his time?

Mr. KERRY. I hope not, Mr. President.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the distinguished minority leader has yielded me 3 minutes of his time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the bipartisan congressional acceptance of the Byrd amendment that I have strongly supported from the beginning. Right after the President's speech, I saluted the President for bringing the attention to the Nation, as only the President of the United States can, to the drug menace that faces this country.

At that time, I said I had some misgivings about some of the balance to the program. I predicted at that time that there would be a bipartisan agreement between the leadership of those on the majority side and the minority side of the aisle. It has come to pass.

I salute and thank Senator BYRD for his leadership in this area. I was a cosponsor of his amendment. Many of the other Senators here addressed the problems that all the States have. We in Nebraska have vivid evidence. The experts have told us that there is a crying need for more treatment for those who are crying out for help right now. Education was shortchanged. This measure I hope goes far enough. I suspect that we are going to be doing some more in the future. But this has come to pass.

I thank those that have been involved in this. I believe this is an important step in the right direction. I assume we will have near 100-percent support for the amendment that is being offered by Senator BYRD that I have cosponsored.

I thank the minority leader for offering me a portion of his time and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] is now recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. KERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I first of all would like to express my appreciation and admiration both to Senator BYRD and to Senator HATFIELD for their leadership in the negotiating process and to Senator BYRD for his leadership with respect to this initiative. As a member of the negotiating effort, I was privileged to be able to watch these two veterans of the Senate work their magic in this process. I must say, it was both educational as well as interesting.

I also want to thank Senator BYRD for fulfilling a promise that he made here on the floor of the Senate when we had a confrontation over the question of transferring star wars for drug wars prior to the summer recess. At that time, when the Senate declared its intent to try to fully fund the bill, the drug bill, Senator BYRD made a commitment that he was going to try to find that money somewhere else but that he would try to do it. And indeed he has done that.

Mr. President, I have listened to the comments of both sides. I would like to simply add this Senator's perspective to where I think we are and what the meaning of this particular amendment of Senator BYRD's is.

I heard the distinguished minority leader suggest that most people are now in agreement and that there will be some nibbling at the edges but that nibbling at the edges is all that this is really about. In the previous weeks, we have heard discussion about Democrats who want to throw money at the drug problem. This is not about nibbling at the edges, Mr. President. This is about gobbling up the whole pie, about the pie of the so-called war on drugs.

This is not about money. It has absolutely nothing to do with money exclusively except insomuch as money reflects a strategy and goals sufficient to win a war.

We heard that we declared war on drugs in 1982. We heard it again in 1983, 1984, 1985, and 1986, right through 1989. This is not the first declaration of war on drugs that the American people have heard. It is time for the Senate and the House and the administration to face up to the fact that the Amercan people are going to judge us not by the rhetoric, not by the promises, but by the reality of whether or not there is in fact improvement in this situation and whether or not there is a real war on drugs.

I respectfully suggest to the distinguished minority leader that this is about goals and about strategy and about the sufficiency of what the President has proposed.

I support what the President has proposed. But I do not believe that what the President has proposed is adequate to permit this country to be able to wage a full-fledged war on drugs. I believe that what Senator BYRD has done is take us a step closer to that but, because of the restraints within which the negotiating team was operating; that is, the limit on available resources, even this negotiating effort is insufficient to be able to permit the full promise of a full war on drugs.

What do we mean specifically when we say that there is a difference in strategy and a difference in goals? Well, Mr. President, in the first place, the mere fact that we have taken a significant amount of money that was earmarked for eradication and interdiction in law enforcement and shifted it into narcotics education and treatment means we have already shifted the strategy. We have decided that the strategy was not sufficient in those areas and that it could be changed and shifted in order to deal with treatment and education.

But, Mr. President, if you have a war on drugs, presumably, as to law enforcement, criminal justice, treatment and education, you are going to undertake a streategy that declares goals that meet the demand of a war.

Well, look at the criminal justice system. The criminal justice system of our country is near bankruptcy with respect to its ability to wage a war. Forty-five of the 50 States of this Nation are currently with prison systems that are under court order or about to be under court order. Criminals all over this country know that if they are caught the chances of being found guilty are negligible, the chances of going to jail for a lengthy period of time are negligible, and in fact we are undermining the very notion of deterrence in a system that has revolving doors with respect to prison sentences.

If you are going to declare war, you say to the criminals and the people of America, if you commit this crime you will go away and you will fulfill the full sentence. That requires Federal assistance in terms of building State prisons. There is none in this strategy.

Mr. President, in 1979, when I was prosecuting, we had priority prosecution units and we had goals. And the goals said that we will take any major criminal off the streets of America and try that criminal's case within 90 days from date of arrest until date of conviction. There is no such promise with respect to drug cases.

We have housing courts, we have traffic courts, we have night court sessions for traffic and housing and other matters. But there is no promise in this bill that any drug case that has to be tried will find a special court session or a special courtroom in order to be able to be prosecuted within those 90 days from date of arrest until date of conviction.

Mr. President, there is a promise in the President's strategy of $350 million to the States for assistance in law enforcement, $350 million in 1989 money. In 1975, 14 years ago, the Federal Government was willing to spend $875 million as part of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration in order to assist the States to be able to prosecute and find the judges and find the court personnel to make the criminal justice system work. So here we are supposedly declaring war in 1989 with $350 million when in 1975, without a declaration of war, we were ready to put up $875 million in 1975 money.

Mr. President, in addition to that, there is no promise about the transfer of information between jurisdictions. There is no goal to have a criminal justice system that will actually be able to deal with the numbers of prisoners that you will have once you have the increased law enforcement.

What about education? The Senator from Iowa has pointed out how there was not one new dollar for education in the President's strategy. Moreover, there is no mandate on the States.

It suggests that the States should have certain programs in place.

Mr. President, I believe, if we are serious about declaring war, we do not start educating in the 8th, 9th, or 10th grade. We start, as most of the experts have suggested we should, in kindergarten, and we deal with peer pressure and values and choices, escalating as they grow older into real choices about drugs and other things where communities are not providing those standards today.

We do not make it a pie-in-the-sky hope that all communities will join in this effort. We say to them: If you do not meet these Federal standards of 15 hours minimum per year of education, we are going to deny you the other Federal assistance that comes from the Federal Government.

It seems to me that is a worthwhile and appropriate strategy and goal.

Mr. President, what about drug treatment?

Under the President's plan—his goal, his strategy—19 out of 100 addicts in this country will get treatment. Mr. President, if you declare war on drugs you cannot be selective about treating people. You treat all the people who need the treatment.

The great anomaly in this strategy is the President suggests steps that will increase the number of people who will come and ask for treatment but does not provide for the capacity to be able to treat them.

So today in America we have something like 58,000 addicts who say they need help and, under the President's plan, of those who already asked for help, we are only going to be able to serve about half of those. And that is not all the addicts in the United States. That is just those asking for help.

Recently, in Massachusetts, we had an addict who came into a center, asked for help, was told by the center: I am sorry, 6 weeks' waiting list; went away, 1 week later, dead.

What is going to happen, Mr. President, is that those who seek help are going to be disappointed by the system. Those within the criminal justice system and those outside, expecting it to work, will be disappointed; those who we are supposed to be educating will not be reached and will not be educated. Indeed, we will fuel another cycle of cynicism and disappointment because we have not, once again, been willing to reach out and do enough.

Mr. President, I believe—and I think Democrats who have been looking for an alternative believe—we ought to have treatment on demand. Is it expensive? Yes, Mr. President, it is going to cost more, probably four times more than we are already willing to spend on treatment alone. But the fact is, if we are saying this is the No. 1 priority in this country and it is the No. 1 national security threat and it is tearing apart Colombia and has helped to lose us Panama and lose a lot of other interests that we have in foreign terms, not to mention the domestic losses in terms of human suffering and our health care costs and our families torn apart, it would seem to me that, measured against the $300 billion that we spend for the defense of this Nation, to be quibbling over the now $7.9 plus the additional that we have spent, around $9 or so billion, is to really say to the American people we still have not got our priorities straight with respect to a war on drugs.

With respect to the strategy in the foreign commitment, in the interdiction, Mr. President, the President's strategy does not set as a goal that we will have the Defense Department fully operational in the interdiction border system within 6 months. It does not deal with the question of international money laundering, suggesting that the banks of other countries must comply and we will take steps to specifically seek their compliance with our own restrictions placed on our banks with respect to money laundering.

Mr. President, this is the not time or place, because we will debate the strategies and goals of this bill. We will debate them with specificity. But this is the time to assert what this negotiation has been about.

I reiterate, this negotiation has not been about mere additional dollars. It is not about a desire to simply throw money at a problem. It is about a desire to be honest with the definition of this problem and the nature of the solution to it, Mr. President. We cannot resolve the problem of education, of treatment, of a criminal justice system that will not work, of international interdiction, of money laundering, without taking some risks and without spending some money.

But, more importantly, we have to set the goals that the American people themselves have made clear they want us to set. The American people have said, again and again and again, they are ready to fight the war. They are ready to pay more in order to do it. They are tired of seeing communities torn apart, tired of seeing family life changed, of seeing all kinds of costs thrown onto them because of higher insurance, risks of going out, health care, and a host of other things.

Mr. President, it seems to me there is much that many of us believe we could have done as a matter of strategy, as a matter of goals in order to make more clear to those who commit the crimes and to those who wish to be free from them, that the United States has a better sense of how to fight a war than we have currently set out for ourselves.

It seems to me, based on the experience of what we call low-intensity conflict in Southeast Asia, where we were willing to leave troops out in the field without a clear definition, strategy, without a winning policy, without support from the Nation, without the resources necessary, that we are dangerously close to being on the same path with respect to this, our newest definition of war and our newest conflict.

My hope is that we will recognize beyond rhetoric the importance of really fighting a genuine war. It seems to me if we would do so we would reduce the cost to society enormously.

A real war, Mr. President, would have said: Anyone caught committing the crime of selling drugs will, indeed, be taken off the street, even if it means finding the Federal space to do so.

It is my hope as the debate goes on in the next several days the Senate will find its definition for the war on drugs and will provide funding for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

The time under the control of the majority leader has expired.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, is it in order to suggest the absence of a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires unanimous consent at this time.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a quorum call be in order, with time to be taken from the one side who remains having time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remaining time allocated is in the control of the Republican leader.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the time be taken from the Republican leader. Seeing no other Senator, I think it is unanimous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent request is agreed to.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I do want to indicate that I was asked by the leader, during the course of the negotiations on the drug bill to sit in and to monitor those proceedings. I certainly want to state that I am deeply appreciative of what Senator BYRD accomplished. He, indeed, was exceedingly patient and guided as to where he wanted to go.

Senator HATFIELD, on our side of the aisle, was superb in his dealings and negotiations. I know that without his patience and the patience of Senator BYRD, it would not have been accomplished, without any question on that. So I commend them both and appreciate that they have eased our burden.

I did sit in on one of the joint sessions and many of the sessions with those on our side of the aisle. One of the frustrating things to all of us as we negotiate money here is that we always seem to be never quite appropriate with our numbers when we look back a year later, 2 years or 3 years later. I made the comment during one of the deliberations that I had been here 11 years and I had never yet seen any figures that were correct, as we look at something 4 years back or 3 years back.

I would not want to have that reflected as a criticism of Senator BYRD or Senator HATFIELD or their committee. It was just a very real observation on my part that it seems to me we spend a great deal of time either passing or killing legislation on the basis that it is going to cost too much or that there is not enough in it. The issue is not money; the issue is a serious national problem, and it was not a good pattern, as we saw developing, where we were simply seeing people of both parties upping the ante for no purpose whatsoever but political gain.

I just want to, in the 2 or 3 minutes before the vote, say that the President presented us a pretty nice package. I would not want to leave that goal unaddressed. The President and Bill Bennett spent many months on a package and how to fund it. And Dick Darman assisted in educating on how that should be funded, and there it was. It was not something ill-considered. It was not something done without good, thoughtful consideration.

I think that is important as we look at this good result which is good to pass unanimously, I would think, that the President and the drug czar and Dick Darman presented an awfully nice package. That should not be lost in this package. I think it did get a little lost in the process with both parties involved in the discussion of money.

The thing I think the American people want to remember is that we have discussed this and now we come to a vote and I have not heard anybody on either side of the aisle throwing harpoons into this particular piece of legislation. No one has really talked about the substance of this legislation. I think that is an awfully important part of the debate. It seems to me it has been somewhat overlooked. I have not heard a single soul in committee; I have not heard it at hearings with Dr.

Bennett, that anybody was really zeroing in on the bill itself as an improper or bloated or impossible piece of legislation.

I do again commend Senator BYRD and Senator HATFIELD and all of those on both sides of the aisle who gave us, indeed, a very important bill based on a lot of tough negotiations and based upon a bill which was very good in its substance and remains so. I thank the Chair.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I want to express my strong support for the amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD. I am pleased to be a cosponsor.

Mr. President, it is time to put real resources into the war against drugs. The plague of drug abuse is infesting every region of our country—from impoverished inner cities to affluent suburbs, to small, rural towns. It is a plague that must be addressed, and it must be addressed now.

President Bush's antidrug plan is a good starting point. But it is only that—a first step. Even if fully funded, the plan would leave too many addicts without treatment, too many children uneducated about the dangers of drugs, too many young mothers with babies born addicted to drugs.

Senator BYRD—and his counterpart, Senator HATFIELD—deserve enormous credit for putting some punch behind this plan. They have worked long and hard. And they have produced a funding scheme that I think can be supported by Senators on both sides of the aisle. Is it perfect? Of course not. Is it enough? I do not think so. But it's the most for which we can get bipartisan support.

This plan will ensure that the President's plan is fully funded—right down to the last penny requested. The focus of that plan is on law enforcement. So, for example, we are going to provide a billion dollars for the Federal prison system; $97 million for the FBI; $64 million for the Drug Enforcement Administration.

But we are going to go well beyond the President's plan. First, we are going to strengthen support for law enforcement. The $100 million in additional funds for law enforcement should put about 2,000 more police on the streets.

We are also going to go after demand—the root of this problem. The amendment will provide an additional $800 million for treatment of drug addicts, for education of our children, for rehabilitation.

Mr. President, I am particularly pleased that the amendment includes funding for a program I developed last year, the Public Housing Drug Elimination Act. As drug dealers have taken over many public housing projects, tenants have been forced to live in virtual war zones. It is a particularly serious problem in many of our depressed urban areas.

The Public Housing Drug Elimination Act gives tenants and housing authorities the tools they need to fight back. Funds can be used not only for additional security personnel, but for innovative programs designed to reduce the use of illegal drugs. Public housing authorities and tenants already are clamoring for these much-needed resources.

Mr. President, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have worked to strengthen the war on drugs. I urge my colleagues to support this major expansion of our efforts.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I support the Byrd amendment, which would add $1.1 billion to the amount requested by President Bush 3 weeks ago.

Mr. President, I am particularly pleased that this amendment would provide the majority of new funding for treatment and prevention activities. I was very disappointed that the Bush proposal maintained the current inequities in the relative amount of money being spent on the supply side of the drug problem versus the demand side. I have long advocated that we need to put greater emphasis on drug treatment and prevention activities if we are going to have a realistic chance at turning the tide on the drug crisis.

The Byrd amendment before us recognizes that fact and would add $800 million for prevention and treatment programs.

Mr. President, I am particularly pleased that $50 million would be provided to the Department of Veterans Affairs for substance abuse treatment programs for veterans. This builds on efforts I began in 1986 to increasee VA's capacity to provide drug and alcohol abuse treatment to veterans. The 1988 drug law included, at my request, a $15 million special authorization of appropriations for VA substance abuse treatment activities. The Senate version of the fiscal year 1990 VA-HUD Appropriations Act provided $10 million for those efforts.

Thus, I believe that the additional $50 million provided by this legislation would help ensure that VA efforts can be expanded. Like community drug treatment programs, VA is unable to provide care to all veterans seeking treatment on an immediate basis. This additional funding should help meet those needs.

Mr. President, I would like to clarify with the Senator from West Virginia one issue concerning drug abuse prevention activities. First, I would like to congratulate the Senator from West Virginia for substantially increasing drug prevention programs, which I believe must be a cornerstone to our overall efforts against drugs. I have been very concerned that inadequate resources have been placed on drug abuse prevention programs—particularly those that focus on community efforts. Communities represent an untapped resources in our war against drugs. I believe, with some assistance, community coalitions would be a very effective force in helping young people stay off of drugs.

Last year, in the 1988 drug law I authored a provision giving authority to the Office for Substance Abuse Prevention to provide assistance to communities to develop comprehensive long-term strategies for the prevention of substance abuse. I was delighted when President Bush proposed providing funding for such community prevention efforts, and congratulate the Chairman of the Labor-HHS Appropriations Subcomittee for including $40 million for these programs in the fiscal year 1990 Labor-HHS Appropriations Act, which the Senate passed last night.

The legislation before us would further increase funding for community prevention programs by $20 million. I understand under the original Byrd amendment, $40 million in additional funding would have been provided.

Mr. President, I believe that this money will be well invested. However, this is a substantial amount of new money for which very little Congressional direction is provided. I believe—to ensure that the program has the greatest chance to succeed—we should more clearly spell out its intended use.

Early this summer I introduced legislation—S. 1233, the Comprehensive Community Substance Abuse Prevention Act of 1989—that would provide a blueprint for a program to support community prevention efforts. My legislation would complement the appropriations action. It would provide direction for what community prevention coalitions should be composed of and provide guidelines for assigning priority to grants. It would also stipulate that 35 percent of the funding must go to communities to populations of no more than 250,000 individuals. Finally, my bill would set up a substance abuse prevention training program.

Specifically, it would authorize for 3 years an initiative to assist communities in planning, developing and implementing a substance abuse prevention and intervention program. Recent research has found that a comprehensive community program—involving schools, businesses, parents, community organizations and leaders, and the media—is the most successful in preventing drug and alcohol use.

I have seen such coalition in action, and I have been greatly impressed by their ability to rally people to develop innovative responses to the drug problem. Through such coalition efforts, parents band together to learn more about drugs and to get more involved with their children's schooling, businesses and civic clubs develop after-school programs to provide young people with real alternatives to the drug culture, and the media cooperates to reinforce the anti-drug message.

My legislation would help ensure that Congress knows how the funding for community prevention efforts is spent. I had intended to offer my bill as an amendment to the pending legislation. However, I understand that another bill dealing with drug issues will be coming before the Senate in the next couple of weeks. I want to clarify with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] if it is his understanding that my bill in the form of an amendment would be in order to be considered in the context of that legislation.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] is correct. Any amendment concerning drug issues would be considered germane to that bill. I thank the Senator for waiting for that vehicle to have his legislation considered.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator from West Virginia and again congratulate him on his outstanding efforts to bring this legislation before the Senate. I look forward to working with him on the forthcoming drug bill.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I first want to commend my colleagues, both Republican and Democrat alike, for all of the work they did to fashion this compromise. I know they worked long, hard hours and that there was a lot of give and take. Each and everyone of them deserves a lot of credit.

The other person who deserves much of the credit is President Bush. It is his national drug control policy which served as a catalyst for this agreement. His attention to this issue and the seriousness with which he attacked the problem inspired the Congress to act quickly. Now, we not only have a comprehensive strategy to fight the war on drugs, but we have a way to pay for it. I am also pleased that we have included the President's crime initiatives in this package.

Mr. President, I have said before that drugs are a cancer, and cocaine is a white cancer, eating away at our kids. And that we must do everything we can to cut it out of our society. So I am pleased that we are taking the President's lead and approaching this problem from all angles: criminal justice; treatment; education; community involvement; research; interdiction; intelligence; and international affairs.

We are funding initiatives to make such that drug offenders, users and sellers alike, are punished. I commend the efforts of some of my Republican colleagues to include additional funds for State and local law enforcement. These are the people who are on the front lines and they need our support.

The additional funds for Federal drug enforcement are also welcome. It seems that the drug lords have discovered that the Big Sky country with its wide open spaces is a perfect location for stashing and manufacturing drugs. The additional funds provided under this legislation will help the State of Montana curtail these activities.

However, it is most important to remember that demand is what creates supply, and the war on drugs will only be won with the involvement of the family, schools, churches, community-based groups, and the State and local governments. The funds provided in this bill for education and prevention programs will help facilitate this involvement. We must further encourage these efforts by calling on concerned parents and community leaders in our States to get involved.

I think that the key to our success will be the commitment of all Americans to fight this war. The President, the leadership, and all members of this Senate have demonstrated our commitment to overcoming the drug problem. The funds allocated today will go to worthwhile programs to start the work, but it is only with the commitment of every concerned citizen to do their part that we will win this war.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to commend and congratulate my good friend and distinguished colleague, Senator BYRD, and all of my colleagues who have worked tirelessly during the past several days to craft a comprehensive, bipartisan funding strategy for the Nation's anti-drug abuse effort. The plan before us today—which strengthens efforts to reduce the demand, as well as supply, for illegal drugs—is a noble and realistic one. It is worthy of our strong support.

We all know how serious America's drug problem is. The people of my home State of New Mexico and of every other State in this country know the devastation that it has caused. Indeed, in a Washington Post-ABC News Poll last month, 44 percent of those polled ranked drugs as the number one problem facing our Nation today.

But when the President unveiled his national drug control strategy earlier this month, once again we saw a proposal that focused the bulk of its resources—nearly 70 percent—on interdiction efforts. Once again, we were going to try to turn the tide on the drug problem by limiting the flow of drugs into our country, our communities, and our schools. Yet, virtually everyone is in agreement that our Nation's drug epidemic will not be eradicated, or even lessened, until the demand for drugs is controlled. This end can be achieved only through education.

Effective and comprehensive strategies intended to change both behaviors and attitudes are essential if we are to reduce the mounting economic and societal costs associated with the drup epidemic. Perhaps the greatest of these costs is the threat to the health and well-being of our children. But the President's strategy included no new money for education and very little for treatment and rehabilitation.

The strategy before us today seeks to correct these crucial deficiencies. It fully funds the President's drug control plan. But even more importantly, it increases our commitment to education, rehabilitation, and treatment. I am pleased that nearly half—47 percent—of the funding proposed in the Byrd amendment would go toward strengthening programs in these key areas. This split is much more in line with the strategy we in the Congress committed ourselves to last year when, with much fanfare and talk, we passed the Anti-Substance Abuse Act of 1988. Unless we accept the Byrd amendment today, all of our talk about winning the war against drugs will be just that: Talk. And it is far too late for talk. We need action, commitment, and education.

Currently, the Federal Government spends $2.4 billion on drug abuse prevention programs. The State of New Mexico spends approximately $5.8 million. Yet, drug rates among adolescents have risen 10 to 30 times in my State since the early 1960's. New Mexican youth are reporting the use of alcohol and drugs at alarmingly younger ages. Local studies have revealed that 42 percent of sixth graders surveyed report the use of alcohol; 22 percent of high school youth report having used hallucinogens; and approximately 10 percent have used cocaine. These statistics underscore the need for effective education and prevention efforts that target this key segment of our population. These programs must begin early—when children are entering school—and must extend throughout the educational process.

To be most effective, these programs must also extend into the community, the home, and the family. Drug abuse is not a problem that is suffered by individuals. It is suffered by all of us: Individuals, families, communities, employers, governments, and nations. It is not a problem that will be solved with simple solutions. If we are ever to make any progress, we must reduce the demand, as well as supply for illegal drugs. We must commit ourselves to working together to find solutions and create lasting change. We must do it for this generation and for all those to follow. Thank you.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise to address the insidious plague and national tragedy of substance abuse, which has become the common enemy of all Americans. There is not a community or a family in the Nation that has not been affected by substance abuse. It cripples individuals, destroys families, torments communities, and undermines nations. I know from personal experience the trauma drugs inflict upon our young people. With the leadership of our President, we are watching a nation rise to the challenge of rescuing itself from a genuine threat to our personal freedom and national survival.

The substance abuse statistics are staggering. Approximately 37 million people in the United States used illegal drugs in 1987. This works out to 1 in every 10 Americans. According to a recent national household survey on drug abuse, 29 million Americans used marijuana at least once in 1985, and 18 million had used it within a month of answering the survey question. The same survey found that nearly 6 million Americans use illegal amphetamines, barbiturates, and hallucinogens. Although recent studies indicate that drug abuse has stabilized as their evils are made known and the population gets older, the use of cocaine, particularly in its most dangerous crack, form is rising. It is estimated that 12 million Americans used cocaine in 1985, and over 3 million used it more than 12 times that year. And most disturbing, is that these figures do not include those who abuse alcohol or prescription drugs.

The effects of substance abuse are severe and many. It contributes to early death, social dependence, frequent unemployment, deep poverty, incapacity to meet responsibilities, and crime. Drug abuse affects our youth and future generation in ways that not only are destructive to themselves, but also to society. Nationally, drugs are a factor in: 67 percent of all street crime; 56 percent of all traffic accidents; 65 percent of all drownings; 80 percent of all high school dropouts; 90 percent of all teenage pregnancies; 60 percent of all teen suicides and homicides; and 90 percent of all incest cases.

In a study conducted by the Cocaine National Hotline dated July 10, 1988, 64 percent of the callers had stolen from their families, friends, or employers to buy drugs either for themselves or for their friends. Drug use in schools is particularly destructive as it ruins the learning process.

Thus, substance abuse takes a physical, emotional, and economic toll on everyone. The user risks everything, job, reputation, health, and life. Loved ones and others are emotionally seared, they fear for the user's well-being and for themselves due to the resulting crime. Ultimately, society must bear the costs of law enforcement, lost productivity, and health care. This cost was estimated as being $60 million in 1983 by the Research Triangle Institute while the June 1988 Final Report of the White House Conference for a Drug Free America estimate the total cost of drug abuse, indirect and direct, is $100 billion.

Mr. President, I come to this issue with great concern and exposure. I know first hand the pain and suffering millions of families experience when a member of their family abuses drugs. There can be nothing more heartwrenching to a parent than to have a child struggle with chemical dependency. I also know that with love, prayer, and proper help, families and individuals can overcome a chemical dependency problem. And in so doing become stronger for it. Coming from Minnesota, a State known for its chemical dependency education, prevention, and treatment I appreciate the power of education and treatment to overcome the often overpowering attraction of drugs, both legal and illegal. My wife, Penny, is pursuing a professional career in chemical treatment.

Although I have considerable exposure to chemical dependency issues on a personal level, my positions on the Senate Labor and Health and Human Resources Committee and Senate Finance position give me a unique perspective to the chemical dependency problem. I view it as a health care problem, that needs to be treated just as cancer and heart disease are treated.

I have listened to my State. Last summer I toured the State of Minnesota with Surgeon General C. Everett Koop holding informal hearings on substance abuse. At these hearings the Surgeon General and I were told repeatedly of the need to address not only illegal drugs, but also the problem of alcohol abuse and cigarette smoking. In Rochester, MN, Jane Hendricks, who coordinates drug awareness programs, said that while illegal drugs are a problem, alcohol abuse is much more pervasive and damaging. At the same hearing, Bill Walker made the profound statement that, "we need to treat the person, not the amount of dollars a person has." I agree, completely. Similarly, Anna Griesbach, a teacher at Red Lake Falls, stressed the importance of aftercare for substance abusers if the individual is to be truly rehabilitated. This view was echoed by Betsy Inger Diver at the Duluth hearing.

This year, I have listened to many Minnesotans react to President Bush's national drug strategy. While supporting the goal and pleased with the President's focus on the issue, Minnesotans feel that drugs are not a problem that Government can solve by itself. It results from a broad set of problems that involves values, economics, self-esteem, and self-identity. Much of the work to solve the problem must be done on an individual basis and involve families and friends, neighborhoods, and churches.

Thus, it is from this personal, individual level that Minnesotans are very skeptical of politicians touting this drug plan or that drug plan. They have heard this song too many times. Their primary concern is that the Federal Government does not get in the way of good State and local programs, like those in Minnesota. The good initiatives of State and local governments must not be suffocated by Federal requirements; rather they should be encouraged. Innovation is needed. There is no silver bullet to the drug problem. Therefore, I am a strong supporter of a well-funded and unhindered Federal grant program.

Minnesota is lucky when it comes to dealing with chemical dependency because the State has many treatment facilities. In fact experts say we have more than enough—an indication of the importance we place on treatment. With so many resources committed to treatment, Minnesota experts have learned that direct treatment alone may not succeed without aftercare or posttreatment care. Individuals who have kicked a drug habit often need to have continued reinforcement to assist them in staying drug free. Yet, such reinforcement or aftercare is not available. The Federal Government should step in to provide this essential service.

Minnesotans believe in a drug-free environment, and they include all addictive substances like alcohol and nicotine. Besides having adverse health affects, alcohol and cigarettes have been found to serve as introductions for our young people to other drugs.

Finally, the only answer to the drug problem is to show people that drugs are not an escape from their personal woes, from poverty, or a way up the social ladder. This can only be done through a long-term effort to build self-esteem and self-worth of our children. This can be done by drawing a direct link between the youth serves program and drug prevention.

Reacting to this threat, the Nation has been waging a war on drugs. Yet, Mr. President, I believe the war cannot be solved overnight, through legislative fiat. The experience of the last several years has taught us that the drug problem is not merely a law enforcement problem. No amount of police, prosecutors, jails, penalties, including the death penalty, border guards, international task forces, and financial incentives to other nations will clear the scourge of drugs while America has a multibillion-dollar appetite. Instead, we must curb the Nation's appetite for drugs and this can best be done by taking a long-term, big picture view and promoting a drug-free society through education and rehabilitation.

29-059 O-90-12 (Pt. 16)

Solving the Nation's drug abuse problem cannot be done through quick fixes and throwing billions of dollars at it. Rather, it requires complete attitudinal changes. We must work toward a drug-free society that does not tolerate the abuse of drugs, including alcohol and prescription drugs.

We must use all options: Our homes, schools, communities, businesses, churches, and media to make our children aware that drug use is not acceptable, that it is dangerous. The Federal Government should develop effective standard drug education programs and provide educators and community leaders the resources they need to implement the program. In addition, we must provide greater rehabilitative opportunities to those who wish to cure themselves of their addiction.

Mr. President, since 1961 Congress has passed at least 91 different pieces of legislation addressing the drug problem. The legislation focuses on three issues: interdiction and international drug production, crime prevention, and treatment and education. Simultaneously, Presidential executive and administrative moves have been taken to streamline the Federal Government's drug enforcement efforts. Many bills build upon previous efforts as well attempt to address the problem in a comprehensive manner.

Legislation that addresses the international aspect of the drug problem takes a carrot and stick approach to those nations that produced drug crops. The Foreign Assistance Act—Public Law 92-129—authorized the suspension of U.S. foreign assistance to nations that did not cooperate in efforts to stop the flow of drugs to the United States.

The act was extended and strengthened frequently in the following years. The International Security and Development Acts of 1980, 1981, and 1985—Public Law 96-533, Public Law 97-113, and Public Law 99-83—provided drug-producing countries, particularly Colombia and Bolivia, drug eradication equipment and funding.

The connection between drugs and crime has been a key attack point for Congress. Such legislation attacked the production, distribution, and use of illegal drugs. Bills like the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970—Public Law 91-452—which included the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations provisions, made it easier to attack drug dealing networks. The Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 was the Nation's first effort at across-the-board control of drugs combining many of the previous drug-related statutes. Among other things the act identified and classified illegal drugs which assisted in the standardization of penalties for use and possession. It further made the arrest and conviction of drug violators easier. The Crime Control Act of 1973 and 1976—Public Law 93-83 and Public Law 94-503—amended the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 to provide greater Federal funding to State and local law enforcement agencies as well as money for treatment.

In 1984 Congress passed the Comprehensive Crime Control Act that revamped Federal criminal laws applicable to those involved in the trafficking, production, and distribution of drugs. It stiffened penalties and expanded the definition of illegal drugs to include chemicals used to create synthetic drugs. It also places reporting and licensing requirements on companies that produced such precursor chemicals. Attacking the large organized drug trafficking and distribution networks, the act made it more difficult for the networks to move their profits by money laundering schemes. Finally, it created the National Drug Enforcement Policy Board, an inter-agency council to coordinate Federal drug law enforcement activities.

Again in 1986, Congress passed the Anti-drug Abuse Act of 1986—Public Law 99-570. This omnibus legislation addressed nearly every aspect of the Federal anti-drug effort. It included provisions tightening money laundering laws, sanctions for uncooperative drug-source countries, new programs and funding for State and local law enforcement, treatment, and education, additional penalties for drug-related crimes, and expanded the Customs Service's drug-interdiction authorities. It authorized increased spending of $1.7 billion for fiscal year 1987.

Treatment, rehabilitation, and education, though not given the priority international interdiction and crime prevention are given, has also been addressed by previous Congress'. Although previously mentioned in legislation like the Narcotic Rehabilitation Act of 1966—Public Law 89-793—the first expansive treatment legislation came with the passage of Drug Abuse Office and Treatment Act of 1972. This Act created the Special Action for Drug Abuse Prevention [SAODAG] within the Office of President which is to coordinate and direct Federal drug abuse control efforts related to rehabilitation of drug-dependent persons, education, training, and research. In 1976 SAODAG was replaced by the Office of Drug Abuse Policy. In 1979 drug abuse prevention duties were given directly to the President by the Drug Abuse Prevention, Treatment, and Rehabilitation Amendments—Public Law 96-181. Simultaneously, the amendments brought State and local officials into the Federal drug abuse decision-making process as well as giving greater research authority to the National Institute of Drug Abuse.

Just as Congress was acting to stem drug abuse, the President was acting through executive and administrative order to streamline the Federal Government's drug enforcement efforts. In 1973, the Drug Enforcement Agency was created within the Department of Justice to handle Federal activities relating to the prevention of drug trafficking. In 1982 the Federal Bureau of Investigation was given concurrent jurisdiction with the Drug Enforcement Agency.

To coordinate Federal interdiction efforts President Reagan announced in 1983 the creation of the National Narcotics Border Interdiction System headed by Vice President Bush. Recognizing that international drugs and the threat they pose to the Nation, President Reagan signed a National Security Decision Directive designating the international drug trade as a national security threat. On March 23, 1987, the President created the National Drug Policy Board, with the Attorney General as chairman, and Secretary of Health and Human Services as vice chairman.

Most recently, the Federal Government has been pursuing a zero tolerance policy. Based on the principle that there is no level of acceptable drug use and that those who use illegal drugs must be held accountable for their illegal activity. Thus, all individuals found with drugs in their possession regardless of amount would be arrested and their possessions seized. This was a change in previous Federal policy and has been controversial.

An additional tactic is drug testing. There is evidence that people who use drugs are adversely affected in their work, and in some cases threaten public safety.

The military, specifically the Navy, has led the way. After a 1980 survey of Navy enlisted men showed that 48 percent of them used drugs. This was confirmed after half of those killed in an accidental explosion on U.S.S. Nimitz showed traces of marijuana use. This led the Navy to institute sweeping drug testing, which was followed quickly by the Air Force and the Army. The results were significant, by 1987 random drug testing showed that only 3 percent of Navy personnel used drugs.

Using this evidence that on-the-job drug use is a problem that can be solved through drug testing has led the Reagan administration to push for its use throughout the Federal Government. Blanket Government drug-testing has been controversial and yet to be implemented. However, Congress has supported drug-testing for those employees that are involved in activities that directly affect public safety such as airline pilots and railroad engineers.

An additional facet of the drug war is the use of the military's manpower and expertise to assist interdicting and eradicating drugs. In May 1988, Congress approved a limited military role, primarily using the military's superior surveillance and identification equipment and personnel to assist civilian law enforcement agencies.

I have supported most of Congress' drug-efforts since arriving in the Senate in 1978. However, I oppose the death penalty and across the board drug-testing. Similarly, I believe Congress' emphasis on interdiction, eradication, and crime-prevention, at the expense of education and rehabilitative treatment, is off-base. In fiscal year 1986, according to the Government Accounting Office, the Federal Government spent $1,877.7 million and in fiscal year 1987 $2,971.2 million on interdiction, eradication, and law enforcement. By contrast, the Federal Government spent only $391.8 million in fiscal year 1986 and $959.9 million in fiscal year 1987 on prevention and treatment. Yet, despite the amount of money being spent on interdiction and law enforcement, the amount of drugs imported into the country has increased for all drugs but marijuana.

This leads me to believe that interdiction is not the answer to the Nation's substance abuse problem. While those involved in drug-related crimes need to be punished severely, we should not do the same for those who are addicted to drugs and seek rehabilitation. Instead, society has a responsibility to assist the addicted user to kick his or her drug habit and become a productive member of society. Simultaneously, we must educate our children through our schools and by family and community example that drugs are not cool, and are dangerous.

Pursuing my view that rehabilitative treatment needs to be available, I sponsored an amendment to the 1986 drug bill that set up drug and alcohol education, prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs for Federal employees. It also required all Federal agencies to establish employee assistance programs and contained a sense of the Senate resolution that private employers should provide adequate coverage for substance abuse treatment for their employees. Finally, it called for a study to determine the feasibility of private-sector health insurance plans cover substance abuse treatment.

I believe the best way to address the Nation's substance abuse problem is to stem the demand. And the best way to do this is to deter people using drugs in the first place and education is the place to start. The most effective educational programs are administered at the elementary school level because they get information to children before they use drugs. Drug abuse most commonly starts in elementary school or soon after as a result of peer pressure. The results of a questionnaire given by Weekly Reader in 1987 to a sample of American fourth through sixth grade students show that the number one reason why kids use drugs is to fit in with others. The second reason was to have fun, and the third was that drugs made the kids feel older.

To be successful, education programs must deal with personal and social pressures connected with drug abuse. Purely factual programs are not as successful according to testimony in 1986 before the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control.

A drug-free environment must also exist for drug-free education to be successful. A study found that children who are brought up to value individual responsibility and self-discipline are less likely to use drugs than those who are not. Communities also need to take part in the war on drugs to help create the right atmosphere and attitude toward drugs. This has been done in some places already with drug-free activity centers. Drug-free parties and activities have been set up to encourage abstinence from drugs. Therefore, educational and community programs should stress self-discipline and personal accountability, as well as reinforce the family structure where these attributes are ingrained.

Another way you educate young people is the volunteer advertising program done by the Media-Advertising Partnership for a Drug Free America today. This program has proved successful in creating a negative image of drug use and has increased awareness of the dangers of drugs.

Yet, Mr. President, education alone will not solve our current drug problems. To do this we must recognize that once an individual abuses drugs, it is often difficult to kick the habit without professional assistance and treatment.

Treatment programs generally have a 50 percent success rate after 1 year. In-patient treatment centers are very structured and intensive, but are also expensive and not always accessible for lower-income individuals and families. A variety of out-patient treatment programs are available which are less expensive and more obtainable for lower-income individuals and families but often there are not enough to meet the demand. Historically, treatment programs have been aimed at the older, hard-drug abusing individuals in the past. But recently these programs have shifted to the younger group to catch drug problems at earlier stages acknowledging that the earlier a drug problem is caught, the easier it is for the user to recover. I believe this trend should be continued.

Because the connection between drug use and crime is so pervasive. Drugs are a factor in 63 percent of all street crime. Thus, we cannot overlook the role the criminal justice and penal systems can serve in creating a drug-free society. Washington, DC tests all those arrested for drugs, those who are or promise to remain drug-free are given preferential treatment, i.e., are more likely to be released before trial. Failure means longer stays in jail. While this may not deter drug use, it does deter crime and reduces the burden on the judicial system. Yet, using drug tests and threats of jail is not a long-term solution to stopping the individual's drug use nor does it benefit society. Jail is expensive and often counter productive.

The hardcore incorrigible criminal needs to be removed from society for punishment and public safety. However, for those that are not incorrigible, particularly the young, the judicial and penal systems must provide adequate treatment rehabilitative programs. Such treatment should assist inmates to overcome their addiction, teach them the dangers, and provide them the education and job training they may need.

Mr. President, in the final analysis, what the Federal Government must do is encourage and reenforce efforts, both public and private, that lead to a drug-free society. This cannot be done by closing our borders to drugs, even if it were possible. Nor can it be done by arresting, prosecuting, and giving long-term prison sentences to everyone who uses drugs. Instead, the Federal Government must redirect its effort.

First, we must reinforce family, school, and community efforts to educate their children of the hazards of drugs and alcohol. The most important determinant of drug use is each person's sense of community values. We each need to shoulder our own responsibility, as parents, teachers, bosses, religious leaders and community leaders to communicate the message that substance abuse destroys lives and cannot be tolerated. And the younger the child who gets that message the better.

Second, the Federal Government must support rehabilitative and treatment programs for drug users. Such programs must be made available to all drug users who want it. If we do not welcome, and give them access to the help they seek, we are sending them back to the enemy.

And perhaps most importantly, we need to acknowledge that 535 drug plans will not win the war on drugs. President Bush and National Drug Coordinator Bennett are to be commended for developing our first national drug strategy. If ever we needed a genuine bipartisan effort, and a unified effort between the President and the Congress, it is now. The President has put a plan on the table, the Congress today helps provide the resources to carry it out. That is a good start, but it is only that.

We begin today a battle that will be with us for decades to come. And the measure of our success will not be the number of dollars we spend. It will be the change we can bring to many young children to value a life free of chemicals. It will be the number of current substance abusers who can find and benefit from treatment. It will be the degree to which Americans learn to respect the laws of our land, or pay the price. And it will be the unity of these United States, in every walk of life and region and age, to taking responsibility for their own part of this problem. Individually, this is a hopelessly large task, but working together, there is nothing we cannot accomplish.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the amendment before us. This amendment is the product of a long and careful negotiation between Senators on both sides of the aisle and represents a sound and effective plan for escalating the Nation's war on drugs.

Mr. President, when the President sent his national drug control strategy to Congress earlier this year he signaled his commitment to fighting the war on drugs. No one can doubt that his funding proposals would allow us to win more of the drug battles which plague our Nation. However, many of us felt that he had not proposed enough funding to truly win the war.

This amendment takes us a step closer to winning that war. When Congress passed the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 it set forth the goal of equal funding for demand and supply activities. Congress recognized that fighting drugs would take more than increases for guns, prisons, and DEA agents. What we also need is treatment, education, and prevention programs. No matter how much law enforcement we provide, in the end we have to destroy the demand for drugs in order to solve our problems.

In 1986, I served as a member of the Democratic Working Group on Drug Abuse which drafted the first comprehensive drug abuse law. That law was a valuable first step inasmuch as it addressed all aspects of the drug control problem—interdiction, enforcement, education, and treatment—and avoided the piecemeal approach which had failed in the past.

Last year, the Democratic Substance Abuse Working Group, on which I also serve, reviewed the 1986 law and recommended a number of changes which were enacted into law. The new law includes additional resources, both for law enforcement and for education and treatment.

The 1988 law recognized that there are no simple answers to the drug problem. Congress looked at each area of the drug abuse problem in terms of what is needed and what concrete steps we can take now.

The 1988 law also included increased funding for education and treatment. I am pleased to have served as cochairman of the group that drafted this section of the 1988 law. I think we all realize that in the long run the only real solution to the drug problem is to teach our citizens to avoid drugs.

Tennessee received $3.7 million for drug and alcohol education in 1988. That sounds like a lot of money—in fact, it is a lot of money. But it is only $2.50 per child. The additional education money included in the 1988 law will allow us to give each school system enough money to develop a realistic education program.

By the same token, our unmet needs in alcohol and drug treatment are staggering. In Tennessee, for every person in a treatment program, there are six people waiting. The average wait for treatment is 10 to 12 weeks. The funds we are providing in today's amendment will enable use to significantly increase the number of treatment slots available in Tennessee.

The President proposed to spend 73 percent of his total $7.9 billion antidrug package on the law enforcement side—leaving only 27 percent for programs aimed at reducing demand for drugs. Recognizing the need to provide additional support for education, treatment, and prevention activities, the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee proposed to increase total antidrug funding to $10.1 billion—$2.2 billion over the President's original proposal. The original Byrd amendment attempted to correct the imbalance in the President's plan by allocating 57 percent for supply and 43 percent for demand.

Mr. President, I believe that fighting the war on drugs is not and should not be a partisan issue. While we may disagree on how we achieve them, we all share the same goals. That is why Senator BYRD and other Democratic sponsors of his amendment agreed to sit down with our Republican colleagues and negotiate a bipartisan drug package. The result of that negotiation is before us today.

This proposal is entirely funded through spending reductions. When finally implemented it will not add a single dime to the Federal deficit. We are serious about the war on drugs and we are willing to pay for it.

Furthermore, we are committed to the principle that everyone must bear a fair share of the pain. This amendment fairly apportions the cuts necessary to offset the spending increases by applying a 0.43 percent across-the-board reduction to every appropriations subcommittee. There are no special gimmicks and no slights of hand. Everyone will share the tab.

Mr. President, arriving at this bipartisan compromise took some time. It also took a great commitment. As I voice my support for this amendment, let me also praise the efforts of the distinguished President pro tempore, Senator BYRD who has worked so diligently to reach this point. Let me also extend my congratulations to Senator HATFIELD, the head of the Republican negotiating team, as well as to all the Members of the bipartisan negotiating teams.

Mr. President, this amendment takes a step in the right direction. It fully funds the President's antidrug and crime proposals while at the same time providing additonal money for critical education, treatment, and prevention activities. Furthermore, the amendment provides real offsets for these spending increases, thereby ensuring that the amendment will not add to the deficit. I fully support the amendment and I commend Senators BYRD and HATFIELD for their leadership.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, last year when we enacted the Anti-Drug Abuse Act we made a commitment to attacking the problems of drug use in our country. We agreed to remove drug dealers from our streets; to treat crack-addicted pregnant women; and to punish casual drug users. Unfortunately, because it was passed so late in the year, we were unable to provide the resources to fully fund the drug bill.

However, if we approve the compromise agreement before us today we can live up to the commitment we made last year. I commend the President and those Senators who served on the Drug Funding Task Force for their diligent struggle to reach this compromise.

This agreement will fully fund the President's national drug strategy which includes many of the initiatives passed in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. It will increase support for State and local law enforcement, penalize casual drug users, provide additional foreign aid to coca-producing countries, and most importantly, increase funds for treatment, education, and prevention programs. The President has developed a sound national drug policy designed to simultaneously reduce both the demand for and supply of drugs. I wholeheartedly support the President's efforts this compromise agreement that will fully fund his drug strategy.

The compromise agreement provides an additional $900 million for antidrug programs, $100 million of which will go to local law enforcement efforts. Our police are the front-line offense against the drug war in our communities and these funds will provide critical additional support for their efforts.

The remaining $800 million will be allocated to drug treatment, education and prevention programs. As long as there is a demand for drugs, there will be a supply of drugs. It is essential that we prioritize on programs which discourage drug use. Prevention and education programs can turn our children away from using drugs before they become addicted. Treatment programs can help addicts get back on track. It is imperative that we continue to increase funding for these successful programs, as the drug compromise will do.

My support for the agreement does not come without concern. I have strong reservations about the across-the-board cut that we are using to fund the drug war.

The proposed 0.43 percent across-the-board cut may resolve our drug funding problem, but it does not reflect any budget priorities. Instead of targeting wasteful Government spending, it calls for cutting all discretionary domestic and international programs regardless of their worth. This is not the approach I would have preferred.

It will result in reductions in some programs which indirectly help fight the war on drugs. For example, the Even Start Illiteracy Program teaches children and their parents how to read. Children who are literate and have confidence in their reading and writing skills are much less likely to drop out of school and fall victim to drug use.

The Teen Care Program educates and counsels youngsters to help build their self-esteem and steer them away from suicide, dropping out, unwanted pregnancies and drug use. The program is not considered as a drug program. Thus, although subject to the across-the-board cut, it will probably not receive additional funding under the drug compromise because it is not viewed as a program which directly attacks the drug scourge—its indirect value in fighting the war on drugs will likely be overlooked.

When the President submitted his national drug strategy to Congress, he suggested several funding reductions to offset its cost. He targeted programs such as the Economic Development Administration and the Single Channel Ground and Airborne Radio System. I support the President's efforts to eliminate or reduce funding for programs that are ineffective and wasteful. If we are going to establish the drug war as a national priority, then we must be willing to reduce spending for programs that do not warrant such priority. Unfortunately, that is not what this plan calls for.

I will support the compromise agreement, but I do so with reservation. We must live up to the commitment we made last year by funding the President's national drug strategy as well as other important antidrug programs—and we must do it now. It is my hope, however, that in the future we will make the difficult decisions and cut those programs which are less deserving of support.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Is there objection to proceeding with the vote at this time?

Hearing no objection, the question is on agreeing to the Byrd amendment No. 727, as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 97, nays 2, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Sasser

So the amendment (No. 727), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the pending question now is on agreeing to the underlying committee amendment, as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I designate Senator KENNEDY to offer the amendments on our side, and I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to offer these amendments en bloc, that they not be subject to further amendment, and that there be 20 minutes of debate on the amendments, equally divided between Senators KENNEDY and HATCH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLE. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 867

(Purpose: To establish a National Resources and Information Center for Perinatal Addiction and to provide grants for substance abuse treatment for pregnant and post-partum women and their infants)

AMENDMENT NO. 868

(Purpose: To provide for emergency protective child services grants)

AMENDMENT NO. 869

(Purpose: To provide grants for the training of drug treatment professionals)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send three amendments to the desk and ask for their immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendments.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] proposes amendments numbered 867 through 869 en bloc.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 867

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . (a)(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration or his designee, shall use amounts made available under paragraph (4) to make a grant to an institution of the type described in paragraph (20 for the establishment of a National Resource and Information Center for Perinatal Addiction.

(2) The grant under paragraph (1) shall be awarded, after a competitive search, to a private nonprofit institution that has an extensive background and experience in performing research on maternal substance abuse and in disseminating such information to professionals, policymakers, the general public and the media, as well as experience in proving educational services to maternal substance abusers and their exposed infants.

(3) The Center established under paragraph (1) shall—

(A) coordinate and disseminate research on maternal substance abuse, treatment options for such women and infants of such women, and prevention strategies;

(B) develop and distribute training and educational information and materials concerning maternal substance abuse;

(C) act as a clearinghouse for information on treatment programs for pregnant women who are addicted to illegal substances;

(D) develop and manage national toll free hotline to provide information and referrals;

(E) provide policy analysis and program evaluation to the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

(F) provide any other services designed to carry out the purposes of this subsection.

(4) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this paragraph, $2,500,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1991.

(b) Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 509H. GRANTS FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT FOR PREGNANT AND POST-PARTUM WOMEN.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration or his designee, shall make grants to entities to provide assistance to outpatient and residential substance abuse treatment programs relating to pregnant and post-partum women and their infants, that meet the requirements of subsection (b).

"(b) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) DISTRIBUTION.—In making grants under subsection (a), the Administrator shall ensure that grants are reasonably distributed among projects that provide outpatient and residential treatment.

"(2) SERVICES.—An entity shall not be eligible for a grant under subsection (a) unless such entity provides the Administrator with an assurance that such entity will use assistance provided under such grant to provide, arrange for the provision of, or refer individuals to, services that shall include—

"(A) intervention services for pregnant and post-partum women, including—

"(i) substance abuse and addiction treatment services;

"(ii) support services (such as child care and transportation services);

"(iii) education and skill building services (such as parenting and job seeking skill services);

"(iv) integration and coordination of substance abuse treatment services with prenatal or post-partum health care services;

"(v) innovative methods of outreach to identify and recruit target populations for services early in the pregnancy of individuals of such populations;

"(vi) medical screening procedures of pregnant women for past and present substance use and abuse; and

"(vii) after care services;

"(B) interventions where infants are at risk, including—

"(i) direct intervention, treatment, or rehabilitation of infants, which may include other siblings, to reduce or prevent the impact of maternal substance abuse on such children; and

"(ii) supportive services for biologic or foster parents of infants affected by maternal substance abuse;

"(C) service delivery strategies that may include—

"(i) strategies for the coordination, for purposes of identification or service delivery, of family violence and homeless shelter programs, programs under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, and section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, crisis pregnancy centers programs, public housing programs, and prison programs, with other likely points of access for high risk women;

"(ii) strategies concerning the involvement of significant others (such as male partners of pregnant women) as direct intervention targets or strategies to aid in the outreach and service delivery processes for women;

"(iii) strategies for co-locating multiple facilities to facilitate the delivery of services; and

"(iii) innovative strategies (such as case management) to ensure the coordinated utilization of generally unrelated service systems; and

"(D) other services necessary to improve pregnancy outcomes, reduce substance abuse among women of childbearing age, and increase the stability of the family home environment.

"(c) APPLICATION.—The Administrator shall not make a grant under subsection (a) unless—

"(1) an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary;

"(2) with respect to carrying out the purpose for which the grant is to be made, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary;

"(3) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Administrator determines to be necessary to carry out this section; and

"(4) the application contains an assurance that the applicant will provide funds, other than Federal funds, in an amount that is not less than 10 percent of the amount of the grant under subsection (a).

"(d) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the Secretary to discriminate in the awarding of grants under subsection (a) against applicants that propose or provide residential or outpatient rehabilitation services under applicable requirements of State law, including applicants that provide services to substance abusing pregnant and post-partum women that receive treatment by order of a court or other appropriate public agency, so long as all such applications include measures that encourage substance abusing pregnant and post-partum women to seek prenatal care and rehabilitation.

"(f) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $50,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal year 1991.".

AMENDMENT No. 868

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . (3) The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101) is amended by adding after section 8 the following new subsection:

"SEC. 8A. EMERGENCY PROTECTIVE CHILD SERVICES GRANTS.

"(a) ESTALBISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible entities to enable such entities to provide services to children whose parents are substance abusers.

"(b) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive a grant under this section shall be State or local agencies that are responsible for administering protective child services or child abuse intervention services. Such agenices shall include those agencies responsible for administering foster care, child welfare, child protective services, and child abuse intervention programs.

"(c) APPLICATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an entity shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(2) ASSURANCE OF USE.—An application submitted under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) contain an assurance that the applicant operates in a geographic area where substance abuse has placed substantial strains on social service and law enforcement agencies and has resulted in substantial increases in the need for services that cannot be met without funds available under this section;

"(B) identify the responsible agency or agencies that will be involved in the use of funds provided under this section;

"(C) contain a description of the emergency situation with regard to children of substance abusers who need services of the type described in this section;

"(D) contain a plan for improving the delivery of such services to such children;

"(E) contain assurances that such services will be provided in a comprehensive multidisciplinary and coordinated manner; and

"(F) contain any additional information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

"(d) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds received by an entity under this section part shall be used to improve the delivery of services to children whose parents are substance abusers. Such services may include—

"(1) the hiring of additional personnel by the entity to reduce caseloads;

"(2) the provision of additional training for personnel to improve their ability to provide emergency child protective services related to substance abuse by the parents of such children;

"(3) the provision of expanded services to deal with family crises created by substance abuse;

"(4) the recruitment of additional foster care famlies;

"(5) the recruitment of additional adoptive families; and

"(6) the establishment or improvement or coordination between the agency administering the grant and—

"(A) child protection and welfare organizations;

"(B) hospitals and health care providers;

"(C) public health and mental health professionals;

"(D) judicial and law enforcement officers;

"(E) child advocates;

"(F) public educational institutions;

"(G) community-based organizations that serve substance abusing parents, including pregnant and post-partum females and their infants;

"(H) public housing officials;

"(I) providers of shelter to abused and homeless females and families and

"(J) parents and representatives of parent groups.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section, $40,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in each subsequent fiscal year.".

(b)(1) Section 402(A) of the Joint Resolution entitled "A Joint Resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes", (approved October 12, 1984, Public Law 98-473, 98 Stat. 2198, 42 U.S.C. 5116d) is amended—

(A) by inserting after paragraph (3), the following new paragraph:

"(4) parental substance abuse places children at great risk of abuse and neglect;"; and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (5), (6), (7), and (8) respectively.

(2) Section 405(4)(A) of such Act (98 Stat. 2198, 42 U.S.C. 5116c) is amended by inserting "services to substance abusing parents, including pregnant and post-partum women," after "perinatal bonding,".

AMENDMENT NO. 869

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . Title V of such Act is amended by inserting after section 508 (42 U.S.C. 290aa-6) the following new section:

"SEC. 508B. GRANTS FOR TRAINING OF DRUG TREATMENT PROFESSIONALS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible institutions to enable such institutions to provide training services to increase the supply of drug treatment professionals.

"(b) ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS.—Institutions eligible to receive a grant under this section shall include medical schools, schools of osteopathy, school of nursing, schools of public health, school of chiropractic services, schools of social work, and other appropriate educational institutions that submit an application in accordance with subsection (c).

"(c) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an eligible institution shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) FISCAL YEAR 1990.—The Secretary shall use amounts appropriated under section 508 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, to carry out this section in fiscal year 1990.

"(2) SUBSEQUENT FISCAL YEARS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section in each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992, such sums as may be necessary.".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I understand that there is a time limit of 20 minutes to be equally divided, so I will just yield myself 3 minutes.

The first amendment would bring assistance to a group that should have the highest national priority: pregnant drug abusers and their children.

Babies whose mother use illegal drugs are often born irreparably damaged—and the problem of pregnant drug abusers has reached epidemic proportions. According to Dr. Ira Chasnoff, the director of the National Association for Perinatal Addiction, Research, and Education, as many as 375,000 infants are born annually to mothers that use illegal drugs.

What is the impact on the child of prenatal drug use? According to Neal Halfon, director of the Center for the Vulnerable Child Ambulatory Services at the Children's Hospital in Oakland, CA:

Direct effects of perinatal drug exposure include: * * * premature delivery in twenty top forty per cent of cases, intrauterine growth retardation and reduced brain growth, anomalies and malformations of the heart and urinary tract, and strokes and cerebral infarctions. Associated risks include infection with HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases.

The National Center for Clinical Infants Programs found that—

Four facets of the babies' exposure to drugs deserve special mention. First if the sheer increase in the number of babies born in the United States who have been exposed to drugs in utero. * * * Second, HIV infection in young children is inextricably linked to drug use in adults. * * * Third, the explosion in the numbers of drug exposed babies and drug using parents is threatening to overwhelm already overtaxed foster care systems. * * * Finally, drug-exposed babies are being born in times that are difficult for mental health and social services programs.

Dr. Chasnoff adds to this sad litany the finding that such children have a high rate of prematurity and seizures and are at risk for congenital malformations and strokes and long-term developmental disabilities appear frequently.

The most important cost of drug abuse during pregnancy is the human tragedy it creates for both mother and child. But the financial cost to society is far from negligible. Dr. Chasnoff estimates that the additional medical costs of caring for cocaine affected infants at $60 million—just in the State of Illinois and just in the immediate post partum period.

The sad fact is that the tragedy of drug-affected babies is frequently avoidable—but only infrequently avoided. Dr. Chasnoff's program of comprehensive care for pregnant drug abusers costs only $7,000 per mother, but has an extremely good record of success in keeping mothers clean throughout the pregnancy and after. The key is the comprehensiveness of the program provided. There are other exemplary programs around the country, but they are few and far between. Indeed, one survey of hospitals found that two-thirds reported that they had no place to refer substance abusers for treatment.

This amendment will address this shameful and shortsighted lack of treatment opportunities directly. It will provide a new, $50 million program of grants to assist in the provision of comprehensive drug treatment, parenting, and social services to pregnant drug abusers and their babies. In addition, it will authorize the establishment of a national center to study this problem and help develop and disseminate solutions.

I am indebted to Senators KOHL, SIMON, and DODD for their contributions to this amendment. They have been working in this area for many months to document the need and develop solutions to the problem. Senator KOHL's July 31 hearing analyzed this subject in depth and helped bring the problem of drug addicted pregnant women to national attention. Senator DODD has long been a leading defender of children. Senator SIMON has been laboring in this vinyard since last year, when he proposed the current demonstration program for substance abusing women. All these Senators have made an immense contribution to designing this important new grant program and insisting that it be included in this bill. I also appreciate Senator HATCH's contribution to the development and acceptance of this amendment. Senator WILSON is the cosponsor of the amendment.

At a recent hearing chaired by Senator KOHL, a drug abusing mother who had been helped by one exceptional treatment program, the Family Center at Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, made this statement:

Drug addicted mothers love their children just like any other mother. I love my children. But it is not easy to stop using drugs.

This mother and her baby found the help they needed. But hundreds of thousands of women across this country can find no help—and they, their children, and society pay a heavy price for this lack of care. This amendment will bring hope and help to these women and their children.

The second admendment deals with providing help and assistance to the social service agencies that are dealing with the abused children that are a result of drug addiction. There are no more tragic victims of the drug epidemic than the abused and neglected children of drug addicts.

All over the country, child protective service agencies are overwhelmed by the demands created by the drug epidemic. This amendment responds to those needs.

It establishes a new, $40 million program of grants to assist agencies in areas that are especially hard hit by the drug amendment to cope with these problems.

All abused and neglected children have a special claim on the compassion and help of this Nation. This amendment provides the help the children of drug addicts need and deserve.

I would like to thank Senator DODD, in particular, for his contribution to the development of this amendment.

He is a tireless defender of children in a number of areas, and the drug crisis is no exception. This amendment is offered for myself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. BIDEN.

The final amendment deals with the training of drug treatment professionals. This amendment would provide essential troops for our Nation's war on drugs.

The Nation currently suffers from a serious shortage of drug treatment professionals, a shortage that can be expected to worsen as we expand badly needed treatment resources. This amendment establishes a new grant program to help establish and expand drug treatment training programs in our Nation's medical schools, schools of nursing, schools of social work, and other educational facilities.

I appreciate the assistance of Senator HATCH in developing this amendment.

This amendment is offered by myself, Mr. WILSON, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. BIDEN.

So I want to again express appreciation to all of our colleagues. These amendments have been worked out by Republican and Democrat. Especially, I want to thank the members of our committee who have been very much involved in both the amendments for pregnant women and child abuse. The latter has been an area of special need, special concern to our subcommittee under Senator DODD. I know Senator WILSON has been active both in the expectant mothers and child abuse areas.

With regard to training of drug abuse professionals, I see Senator ADAMS who has been active, and I want to thank Senator HATCH, who is our ranking minority member; in all of these areas, he has been extremely constructive and positive, not only in the fashioning and shaping of this amendment but in dealing with these problems in our committee.

I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut and then whatever remaining time to Senator ADAMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I want to express my support for this amendment sponsored by Senators KENNEDY, KOHL, SIMON, HATCH, and myself to expand and improve critical drug prevention and treatment programs. I would also like to thank Senator BYRD and the other Senate negotiators who have worked so hard to ensure that additional Federal funds will be available next year to fund these and other new treatment initiatives, including the amendment before us.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs and Alcoholism, I have a particular interest in those provisions of the pending amendment which affect drug treatment for women and children, an area which must be addressed as our Nation escalates the war on drugs in America.

Without a doubt, the most tragic victims of the current drug crisis are also the most defenseless members of society—our children. An estimated 375,000 infants a year are born with traces of illicit drugs in their bloodstream. Many more are affected by their mothers' substance abuse some time during pregnancy. In New Haven, an estimated 10 percent of all newborns are exposed to drugs. Fetal alcohol syndrome continues to affect many children, and exposure to multiple drugs—alcohol, crack, heroin—is common. But a large part of this epidemic is due to infants exposed to cocaine.

Cocaine-exposed infants are at risk for a host of problems, including low birth-weight, prematurity, and neurological impairment. Many of these children spend their first few months struggling for life at the end of respirator and intravenous tubes. We are only beginning to guess at the long term effects on their development and the corresponding implications for our educational system.

The effects of drug exposure are compounded by the inadequate prenatal care the mothers receive. A recent study of cocaine-exposed infants in Connecticut found that only 6 percent of their mothers had anywhere near the recommended number of prenatal care visits. Not surprisingly, few had received drug treatment services either. In parts of New Haven, more than 15 percent of all births are to women who obtained no prenatal care or received care late in their pregnancy. Most of these women, by the way, are drug abusers.

Research has shown that providing prenatal care and stopping cocaine abuse early in a pregnancy significantly reduce the infant's risk of complications. One study suggests that this is the ideal time to intervene, as women may be motivated by their pregnancy and the prospects of child-rearing responsibilities. Yet, we do not reach out to ensure these women receive the care they need. Only a handful of programs are available to provide treatment and support to pregnant addicts. Even fewer have residential facilities where a woman can live with her children while receiving treatment. Many women may not seek treatment and vital prenatal care because they meet with misunderstanding in the doctor's office or they are afraid of losing their children to foster care.

The risk to children does not end at the neonatal ward. We have all read newspaper accounts of small children found in crack house raids. In my own State of Connecticut, I have heard from social workers, educators, and pediatricians who tell of children coming to school dirty and hungry because their parents do not see to their basic needs; children who are badly injured or even killed by parents on drugs; children 10 and 11 years old who are so accustomed to being rejected that they no longer ask for help. They turn to dealing drugs to buy their own food and clothes instead.

Child welfare agencies in many cities around the country are overwhelmed by drug-related cases of abuse and neglect. Frequently, their choices are to remove the child from the home—often with no satisfactory foster home waiting—or to leave the child in the home and hope for the best. These are choices, frankly, we cannot afford for our children.

Senator KOHL, and particularly I want to thank him and his staff, sponsored a provision, along with Senators KENNEDY, HATCH, SIMON, and myself now part of the Democratic initiative before the Senate, to amend the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act to better help child abuse agencies cope with exploding caseloads due to drug abuse.

Under this initiative, agencies receiving grants could hire more workers to reduce their caseloads. They could train their staff to work with families where substance abuse is present. They could recruit more foster parents to care for children who must be removed from their homes. And they could recruit adoptive families where no hope exists for keeping the family together. Finally, these agencies could promote coordination among the organizations that affect these children and their families—health care providers, the courts, schools, community organizations serving substance abusing parents, and housing authorities. These people and organizations must work together if we are to protect our children and address substance abuse as a family problem.

Another vitally important aspect of this initiative is the establishment of a national clearinghouse for information on treatment programs for pregnant, addicted women. The treatment of crack addiction is an emerging field. The capability of sharing information and matching resources to the needs of these women in a timely manner is particularly critical for this population of substance abusers. I am pleased to see that an organized national effort is underway.

Although perinatal addiction is on the rise in this country, there is at present a dearth of comprehensive treatment facilities. This initiative will direct that 40 percent of the new grant program funds in the Office of Substance Abuse Prevention [OSAP] be for the establishment and expansion of full continuum treatment services for addicted women and their affected children.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

I thank specifically the staff who worked hard: Patty Cole, from my office; Sherry Hayes, along with Marsha Renwanz, from Senator KOHL's office; David Nexon and Mary Jeka from Senator KENNEDY's office; Vicky Otten from Senator SIMON's office; Nancy Taylor from Senator HATCH's office; and Paul Bland from Senator BIDEN's office. They did an excellent job and we thank them for their assistance in drafting this language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask the time be extended by Senator KENNEDY for 30 additional seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS Mr. President, I just rise in strong support of this amendment. The work that has been done is very, very important. In my home city of Seattle as you visit the abused children that resulted from this crack epidemic we know that prevention treatment and research into the basics of this are as important as law enforcement.

I support the amendment and I am very pleased we are here today passing it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent as acting manager I be permitted to allocate the time on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I will allocate myself 10 minutes for such time I may require.

Mr. President, this is going to be, I think, a very useful piece of legislation to agencies throughout the country who have been somewhat ahead of their time but not ahead of need, ahead of public recognition but decidedly not ahead of need been dealing with the problem of child abuse through the umbilical cord which is to say the problem of pregnant women abusing substances, alcohol to exess and dangerous drugs.

We do not need, I think, any further elaboration of the seriousness of that practice. It can lead to tragic results. It can lead to not only the innocent addiction of the newborns themselves but producing in them a virtual guarantee they will go through life without a decent break.

The problem has been that we have frankly been unable to offer to those in need of help seeking to clean themselves of this habit before or early in their pregnancy the kind of outreach, the kind of educational and treatment opportunities that would offer them some realistic hope of avoiding injury.

If that sounds strange to people who are listening, they need to understand that with a substance as fiercely addictive as crack it is not an easy thing for the addict to overcome the addition. In fact, it is very, very difficult if not impossible to do it without assistance.

It is for that reason essentially that if we are to be realistic about preventing a recurrence of the birth of children with addiction and all of the consequences that flow from it, the mental retardation, the possible physical deformities, the emotional dysfunction, then there has to be aggressive outreach and the ability across the land to provide rehabilitation and rehabiliation of all kinds.

We have to be able to deal with the situation of the young mother who discovers that she is in fact to be a mother who while using drugs learns that she is pregnant and decides rightly and properly and with some courage that she will go and seek treatment. There clearly must be an opportunity for her to find treatment to engage in the kind of rehabilitation that is necessary to minimize the damage to her child as well as to herself, and it will not be an easy thing for many to do so.

There is ample testimony in the hearings before the Government Affairs Committee where we heard eloquent testimony from users who had undergone residential round the clock rehabilitation for a period of 14 to 18 months. We heard from those in Philadelphia. We heard from those from Oakland and indeed the testimony of one of the recipients of assistance of that kind of the Mandella House in Oakland was that though very strong she could not have cured herself. She needed the kind of help that she found in that supportive setting away from the temptation that lurked outside the very doors of Mandella House, a residential rehabilitation facility for only 6 women.

Mr. President, that kind of care is expensive. It is not nearly so expensive as the failure to provide it because this woman and many like her, like the pathetic Cheryl, who was the focal point of a front page story in the Wall Street Journal some 2 months ago, have without this kind of help produced one addicted child after another; in Cheryl's case seven.

It is not an easy thing to beat this addiction. Help is required, and under this legislation there will be help provided for those who are strong enough to come early in their pregnancy and seek the treatment that they need.

There will also be treatment for those who are not strong enough to come and seek it voluntarily but who are referred by a public agency, by a court, by the Child Protective Services, by a district attorney, and that has already happened across the land, and it seems to be increasingly the trend. The reason is that of the difficulty of cure. It does require help even with an established success like the Phoenix House where they are a achieving a success rate of about 75 percent with people who have been there for 18 months in an around the clock residential setting. It is very difficult, very difficult, I have been told by women who have given birth to these children for them to break the habit without a great deal of support and a great deal of care.

So I thank the sponsor of the amendment, my friend from Massachusetts, for accepting an amendment which I do not have to offer which in fact will lead to providing both inpatient and outpatient care both for voluntary referral, self-referral and for those who are referred by a public agency.

Mr. President, we are making a beginning. This money which is more than a tenfold increase over what we have thus far authorized and actually spent for this purpose is only a beginning and I will repeat to you that it will be necessary for us to spend this money if we are not to spend much more and if we are to avoid the incalculable misery that will otherwise be visited upon innocent children.

The clearing house of which Senator KENNEDY spoke is a highly desirable opportunity for us to make known to those throughout the land the success stories that have occurred in other places. It will be an opportunity for the sharing of information so that a great deal of time can be saved. But what we have done here, in short, is to encourage to the maximum extent the seeking of prenatal care which I must say is a bargain in terms of what it avoids. We are also encouraging to the maximum extent the seeking of rehabilitation as early as possible and to the extent that it is required in the event of those who are not strong enough there will be in some cases by referral of public agencies mandatory rehabilitation.

Let me say an explicit word on that point. There are some who are concerned that rehabilitation not be mandatory, that instead come about only as result of being sought voluntarily by the recipient. I mentioned earlier the success of Phoenix House. It has become a prototype for many other like establishments. The founder of that institution, Dr. Mitch Rosenthal has been very clearly on record as stating do not let anybody tell you that those who are bought to rehabilitation cannot success in becoming rehabilitated. To the contrary many who did not seek it have benefited from it and we do have to be realistic and understand the difficulty often taking that first step to seek treatment. Many will not. Many will in fact be referred against their will to the kind of treatment which in fact will benefit not only them but far more importantly prevent the recurrence of the tragedy of innocent addicts and of lifelong affliction.

Mr. President, this is a good beginning, but it is only a beginning. If you consider what it cost per day per recipient of rehabilitation, if you consider that a thousand plus addicted children are being born across the United States every day, we are looking at major, major costs.

I repeat: Far better that we come to an understanding of what is necessary in a preventive way than to face the virtual certainty that thereafter, for failure to prevent, we are compelled to engage in far more expensive, far less humane and far less probable of success measures that are remedial.

This is an effort at prevention. It is humane. It is cost effective. It is the right way to proceed.

Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). The Senator from California has 18 seconds remaining.

Mr. WILSON. I reserve those 18 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I thank the Senator for yielding and I thank him, by the way, for his leadership on this issue. I do not know as much of the detail about the program as the Senator from Massachusetts does, but I would like to make one observation.

I think the Senator from California just made a compelling case. He points out the cost to help these women is significant but the cost in failing to help is considerably more.

That is why I want to once again rise and make the point: Many of us disagree with the President's strategy. There are 375,000 women per year—375,000 women per year—that fall in the category the Senator from California and the Senator from Massachusetts are speaking to. And with all the money that we are adding to this bill, all the money that the President initially opposed, if every single woman voluntarily marched in and said "I want treatment," we would not be able to treat as many as 50,000 of them. But I am sure the Senator from California joins me in pointing out that the President's program is inadequate.

We heard today the Senator from Wyoming standing on the floor saying he had not heard anybody disagree with the goals of the administration. We have a fundamental disagreement. This is one small step, to steal a phrase from another circumstance—I want it noted I acknowledged that—one small step but many more have to be taken. And that is why I hope when we are back here in a supplemental, if we are, we will have the help from the Senator from California and other Republicans who feel strongly about this to help the President do the job we know must be done.

We cannot even talk about coercive treatment for these women. There are 50,000 out there with their hands raised now saying "I need help," and we cannot help them. And there is another 300,000 that we have to get to.

So I am going to keep reiterating, I am going to sound like a broken record over the next days, weeks, months, and year. We must deal with this straight up. We made a small incremental gain here in helping these women thanks to the help of the Kennedy amendment and others. But there is a lot of distance to go. This, at most, will get the 50,000 of the 350,000 women out there who need help.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. May I have some time?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Utah 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I understand we have effectively exhausted the time on the amendments. I have certainly no objection to the Senator from Utah having 5 minutes. Maybe we might have 10 minutes evenly divided. I do not expect to use up that time but there are others who are cosponsors who want to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, let me direct an inquiry to the Chair. My understanding was that there were 40 minutes equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There were 20 minutes equally divided and the Senator from California has only 17 seconds remaining.

Mr. WILSON. Twenty minutes equally divided?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. WILSON. I had the understanding it was 40 equally divided. I join the Senator form Massachusetts in seeking additional time because it was my understanding that we had double the time that apparently was allotted.

I ask that the Senator from Massachusetts or that the majority be granted an additional 10 minutes and the minority be granted an additional 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Hearing none, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise in support of the Kennedy-Wilson-Hatch amendment. This amendment expands services to pregnant women who abuse drugs and to their babies, as well, who suffer as a result of this drug abuse.

This legislation targets additional child abuse service for children who are victims of abuse by parents who are addicted to drugs. This amendment authorizes programs to train substance abuse professionals. In that regard, I want to compliment my distinguished colleague and friend from Massachusetts for always being at the forefront, the vanguard, of this type of issue and for having such great concern. It is a pleasure to work with him. We work on these issues in a very bipartisan way.

I think it is safe to say that both of us have been proud to do so and have been stimulated by the work of the distinguished Senator from California, who I think deserves a great deal of praise with regard to this amendment and so many other things as he serves here in the U.S. Senate.

But I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts and again express my appreciation to him personally for being able to always work out the difficulties that we have on these public health issues that are in the best interests of the people at large.

One of the great tragedies of the drug epidemic is the effect on the children delivered by women who use illegal drugs. Our understanding of the impact of the cocaine and the crack epidemic is currently where we were in the early seventies with the fetal alcohol syndrome. Preliminary studies suggest that cocaine-addicted mothers are more likely to:

One, lose their fetuses or have smaller, less healthy babies;

Two, the baby is more likely to have permanent brain damage, retarded growth, abnormalities of the urinary organs, seizures, and neurological problems;

Three, the baby has low birthweight, is shorter in length, and has a smaller head circumference; and Four, the baby is frequently left in the hospital as a boarder baby by their addicted mother.

There are currently 375,000 or 1 in 10 babies born in the United States each year to mothers who abuse drugs of one kind or another. In addition to the physical problems associated with children born to mothers who are using drugs, there are additional public health issues associated with this population. It has a higher incidence of sexually transmitted diseases than among the non-drug-using population; that is, the rate for gonorrhea is 36 percent among crack users versus 6 percent among a control group. In addition, they are at a greater risk of HIV infection through increased promiscuity and intravenous drug use.

I am pleased to note that we have agreed to set aside funds to assist pregnant women who are using illegal drugs. This is just the beginning of addressing this problem, but it is a very auspicious beginning.

According to OSAP, many drug treatment programs refuse to treat women who are pregnant. Also, many maternal health care clinics are not prepared to treat women with alcohol and drug problems. In addition, it is difficult to get the abusing women to come into the clinic and retain them after they are identified. Today we have taken the first step toward addressing these problems.

So I want to thank my distinguished colleagues, Senator KENNEDY, Senator WILSON, Senator KOHL, Senator DOLE, Senator DODD, and others and their various staff members who have contributed so much to seeing that this legislation has this very important add-on that will make it even better legislation.

I think the President, it is safe to say, will be very pleased with this amendment and I am proud of being part of putting it together and again thank my colleagues for having done so.

I yield the floor and yield back whatever time I have remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the time, but I will yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I compliment the minority and majority on this. I played no part on this, I want the record to show, but I am glad to be able to be here and witness the changes taking place.

I want to compliment the Senator from Utah. I am not being facetious when I say it is reassuring to know the President would support this and I hope we are going to be able to do something about the other 300,000 pregnant women who are out there. I am confident working with the Senator from Utah and the leadership of the Senator from Massachusetts we will be able to make some progress.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BIDEN. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I would certainly like to compliment my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for the work he has done trying to put together this bipartisan agreement. So many people have worked on this. I know at all times he has been concerned about the feelings of the distinguished chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee and myself as the ranking minority member and in this case equally the distinguished Senator from California. I want to compliment him and thank him for his help in this matter.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, first I want to thank the Senator from Utah for his very generous comment. Second, I would say to my friend, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, this document, with which I am sure he is well familiar, "National Drug Strategy," there is indeed Presidential support. It is especially aimed at trying to deal with this most frightening aspect of the problem.

I will have to agree, I think neither the Congress nor the administration yet has fully come to grips with it. We will, because we will have no choice.

Mr. President, let me say I am grateful, too, that the legislation I introduced earlier, S. 1444, Child Abuse During Pregnancy Prevention Act, is largely contained in this Kennedy-Wilson-Hatch amendment. We are seeking to provide to the pregnant woman all of the assistance that she will, in fact, require in order to change a lifestyle, and literally to change the life of the child that she will bring into the world.

Our purpose is not just to prevent tragedy. Our purpose is, in fact, to deal with the reality that in terms of these costs, in this case not an ounce of prevention, but let us say at $50 a day, we are going to prevent far more expensive neonatal intensive care, not to mention all of the costs in special education, all of the costs that are associated through life which, in my State, on average work out to be about $134,000 per year.

The fact of the matter is for every one of these children in whom we can prevent suffering, innocent addiction from birth, and all the afflictions that may flow from that condition, we will find we are able to provide the funding for the rehabilitation of three to four pregnant women. That is a pretty good cost-benefit ratio.

Let me conclude by saying I think this is a good beginning. I commend those who have been involved, the chairman and ranking members of Health-Labor-HHS. When we revisit it, as inevitably we must, it will be with additional information, hopefully gained by that time.

It will be with the understanding, I think, because of the comparative basis provided, as grants are awarded for inpatient and outpatient care as we are able to determine the success of voluntary seekers and those who are referred by public agency, we will have a basis for knowing what really works.

Mr. President, I am happy to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I am going to be a broken record on this. The President's rhetoric supports this. His actions do not support this. The funding to do the job the President states he wishes to do is not provided for nor suggested by the President. The rhetoric is there. The substance is not there. This goes an additional step toward providing that substance.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, may I add 30 seconds more?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not want to disagree with my distinguished friend from Delaware, but let me just say something. The President wanted a $35 million increase for OSAP which is targeted primarily to pregnant women, and he got it. Maybe the distinguished Senator from Delaware would like even more above that, which is not unusual around here. But the President has argued pretty forcefully and vociferously for these types of treatment.

That does not mean we in a bipartisan way cannot improve upon this bill, which is what this does. And I give the distinguished Senator from Delaware great credit, along with the others I mentioned, for helping to bring that about. But I think we ought to be careful about being too critical of the President.

First of all, he has come up with this plan that almost everybody admits is a good, broad, comprehensive plan. I guess anybody can argue you can always put more money on everything, but he decided to go with it. He understands that we are going to try to improve it up here.

I suspect he will support this strongly. I think his heart is with us, and I personally want to correct the RECORD to make sure nobody takes shots at the President that are unjustified under the circumstances.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, we wish to engage in a short colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the Labor-HHS Appropriations Subcommittee, Senator HARKIN. Now that we have completed a vote authorizing several new programs and modifying others with respect to parental substance abuse and children at risk, we would like to visit the issue of appropriations. Given the crisis before us, it is imperative that we fund these programs. We congratulate our distinguished colleague from Iowa for his attention to this.

Mr. KENNEDY. It is our understanding that under the leadership package we have just enacted, $45 million is dedicated to the Office for Substance Abuse Prevention [OSAP]. Of this additional funding for OSAP, $25 million is earmarked—at a minimum—for the Model Projects for Pregnant and Postpartum Women Program. Is that correct?

Mr. HARKIN. The Senators are correct. And, $15 million of the original

$57.8 million from the Committee recommendation for OSAP will also be targeted for this program. I can therefore assure my good friends that $40 million at a minimum will be earmarked for this population.

Mr. KOHL. We thank our distinguished colleague and also draw his attention to the child abuse initiatives in this package.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank my colleagues and share their concern over the countless children at risk of abuse and neglect due to parental substance abuse.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I appreciate the good faith efforts that have been made by both sides to strike a compromise on the amendment dealing with pregnant, substance-abusing women. I want to especially thank my colleague from California for his perseverance and patience in our discussions earlier today. It is clear that he is deeply committed to doing everything that he can to address the crisis posed by cocaine and crack use by pregnant women.

In an effort to keep the leadership package together, and with the help and support of Senators KENNEDY and HATCH we have hopefully struck a balance to address the concerns of the Senator from California with regard to the availability of mandatory treatment.

The language contained in the compromise amendment explicitly clarifies that grant applications for programs that involve mandatory treatment in compliance with State laws shall not be subject to discrimination on the basis of that type of treatment. At the same time, those programs are required to fulfill the comprehensive requirements laid out in the amendment and are subject to the same peer review and standards of quality as are the competing grants.

In the July 31 hearing held by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, numerous reservations and concerns were expressed by several witnesses about the efficacy and potential effectiveness of mandatory treatment programs.

Teresa Hagan, supervisor of clinical services at the Family Center in Philadelphia operates a comprehensive program that includes outpatient and residential care serving individuals on both a voluntary and mandatory basis. She testified that those individuals who are mandated to treatment, "* * * are very resentful about the fact that they have been mandated. They are not ready. * * * Those individuals who are not highly motivated, sir, to be honest, are not going to have good outcomes. And there is no magic in this. There is no magical way that anybody in the treatment system is going to be able to have a good outcome for someone who simply is not ready to face the challenges that confront them."

Molly McNulty, National Health Law Program, Inc., writes:

> Punitive sanctions probably would be ineffective, if not downright counterproductive. In the States that have attempted to criminally punish women for harmful behavior during pregnancy, or which have policies of automatically depriving women of their newborn babies, reports abound of frightened women who refuse to come into treatment for fear that they will lose their children, their liberty, or both. If the goal of legislative attention is to prevent birth defects and to halt maternal drug use, the sole way to achieve that end is to provide treatment and education for needy women.

In a letter concerning the bill proposed by our colleague from California, representatives from the National Council on Alcoholism write:

> These punitive sanctions * * * will serve to discourage alcoholic and drug addicted women from seeking either prenatal care or help with their drug program for fear of criminal prosecution.

Clearly reflected in the statements above, is a concern that promising pregnant women help on the one hand—while threatening them with jail sentences on the other—may not be the best way to encourage people to seek treatment.

My other concern is that we are trying to fix something that is not broken, Mr. President. The bill before us expands the money which can be spent on programs which help substance abusing women and their children. There is nothing in present law which discriminates against States or programs which require mandatory treatment. It is my understanding that there is not a program receiving funding which does not accept women referred to them by judges.

It is my understanding of this proposal, Mr. President, that what we are doing there today, and all that we are doing here today, is to maintain those programs' access to these vitally needed funds. This Senator is not endorsing the validity of mandatory treatment. By adopting this language, the Senate is not sanctioning mandatory treatment as a effective means of drug intervention. All we are saying is that programs that are functioning in compliance with existing State laws shall not be discriminated against as a result of those State laws. And that such programs shall not be given preferential treatment, but rather shall compete, under a strict review process, with all other grant applicants.

In evaluating grant proposals involving mandatory treatment, the Director should consider the comparative quality of the proposals submitted for funding; the probable impact of mandatory treatment requirements on the utilization of such programs by pregnant and postpartum substance abusing women in a given geographic area served by the proposed grant and the available scientific evidence of the impact of mandatory treatment requirements on the effectiveness of such programs.

These considerations should apply to the consideration of all grants and it is with this understanding that I reluctantly support the added language.

It is my sincere hope that the Senate will be able to more seriously and thoughtfully address this issue and that we might somehow address the difficult issues surrounding such treatment programs in the near future.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise to support this amendment to expand Federal support for programs reaching out to substance abusing pregnant women and their children. I applaud all those who have worked so hard, spurred on by the compassion and commitment of my colleague from Wisconsin, Senator KOHL, to develop a program that makes sense, a program that will really begin to address the tragedy of substance abusing pregnant women and what happens to the children of these women.

Last year, for the first time, we in Congress recognized the uniqueness of this population. This year, we go a step further in recognizing the interrelationship between the issue of drug abuse and other problems—poverty, lack of adequate health care, lack of education or job skills. We must address all of these issues together if we are going to begin to break the horribly destructive cycle of addictions. The new categorical grant program included for substances abusing women and their children does exactly that in allowing for a mix of treatment options, prenatal and postnatal care, after care services, and support services like child care, transportation, education, and job training assistance. We can make a difference, with this level of money and a comprehensive approach to these women and their children.

We have also included money to establish a national resource center on perinatal addiction. There is greater and greater demand for a central source of information on how to train professionals to not only detect substance abuse in women but to work with these women, information on what kinds of treatment programs work, what type of treatment programs are available, Federal and State grants that might be available, laws and programs that have an effect on this population. Those dealing with this problem in their communities and in their States are desperately seeking advice and guidance and the designation of a national resource center would help make this an easier task.

Mr. President, in recent weeks, two different studies were released that fly in the face of earlier assumptions about substance abusing pregnant women and their children who are born addicted. The results of both of these studies make the need for additional resources and creative, coordinated approaches to the problems of substance abusing women and their children even more compelling.

The National Association for Perinatal Addiction Research and Education [NAPARE], a Chicago-based organization that has been in the forefront of efforts to reach out to this special population, has been involved in two studies looking at different aspects of the problem.

The first study is really the first follow up study of children exposed to drugs prior to birth. My office has heard from Head Start workers in Illinois who are seeing these children in early childhood education programs for the first time—the country's first generation of cocaine babies are about to enter school. NAPARE's intensive study of these children found that, unlike other children who were exposed to other drugs during pregnancy, babies exposed to cocaine and to crack do not appear to catch up with their peers over time. In fact the NAPARE study showed that by age 2, children exposed to crack and cocaine tended to have smaller heads, which may be directly related to long-term development problems, can't concentrate, become easily distracted and frustrated with slightly complex tasks, lack basic socializing skills and the ability to interact with either peers or adults. Talking with people in Illinois, it is becoming clear that the problems of these children are different enough that our present system of special education may not be equipped to reach out to this special population. The good news is that these children are not brain damaged and the vast majority are within the normal intelligence range. They can and must be brought into the education system—it will most likely take some new and creative approaches to working with those with developmental disabilities.

The second study looked at drug usage among 715 women in Pinellas County, FL, in both public and private obstetric care in the county.

In conjunction with a Florida based drug treatment program, Operation PAR, researchers conducted blind urine tests on every woman enrolled in prenatal classes at five Pinellas County public hospitals and every woman enrolled in similar care at 12 private obstetric practices between January 1 and June 30 of this year. According to Dr. Ira Chasnoff, president of NAPARE and director of a treatment program for substance abusing pregnant women and their babies at Northwestern Memorial Hospital in Chicago, Pinellas County was chosen because it approximates many other American States and communities—with both an urban and rural population, and a good racial and ethnic mix as well.

The researchers found a slightly higher rate of drug use among white women (15.4 percent) as compared to that among black women (14.1 percent). Marijuana was the drug most used, with white women having a higher rate of marijuana use (14.4 percent for white women as compared to 6 percent for black women) and the reverse for cocaine (7.5 percent cocaine use during pregnancy for black women as compared to 1.8 percent for white women). Perhaps the most startling result of the study was the difference in reporting rates for child abuse (Florida has a mandatory reporting law): Minority women who used drugs or alcohol during pregnancy were 10 times more likely to be reported to child abuse authorities than white women.

Mr. President, I know that some view efforts to criminalize the problem of substance abusing women as one of several options we as a Nation, and individual States should be pursuing. It is my strong belief that this is the wrong way to go—we do nothing to move these women away from their destructive addictions and back into lives that allow them to care for themselves and their children. In those areas where there is mandatory treatment—involuntary placement in a treatment program, which may or may not be appropriate for the individual or mandatory incarceration—we are already beginning to see that women will not receive prenatal health care. As long as women are keeping themselves out of the health care system there is not a hope that professionals—doctors, nurses, social workers, educators, job training specialists, and so forth—can reach out to these women and help them break the cycle. And the Pinellas County study shows that, while there appears to be a fairly comparable rate of usage among white and minority women and among poor women and middle class and wealthy women, mandatory reporting, treatment and incarceration will involve a much higher rate of poor and minority women.

Again, I applaud all who have worked on this series of initiatives to reach out in a comprehensive, nonpunitive manner to bring these women into a health care system that cannot only help take them through a pregnancy drug-free, but also provide the additional services that will allow these woment to become independent of drugs and, ultimately, of the Government and take care of themselves and their families. Let us not lose another generation of Americans to drugs and let us use all the resources we can garner to bring those currently dependent on drugs back into society.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise as a cosponsor of this amendment offered by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] to authorize $40 million for a vital new program to coordinate care for drug-addicted pregnant women and their infants. Making sure these women and infants receive the social and health care services they need is absolutely critical if we are to make any headway in getting these women off drugs. The emphasis of this amendment is appropriately on the coordination of services because we know that without addressing the many needs of this population, any one treatment program or service is unlikely to succeed.

For several years now I have worked in Congress to help make medicaid health care services available for more poor pregnant women and infants. I think policymakers as a whole have recognized the importance of prenatal care and its link to successful births. The National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality has helped educate the public about the problem of infant mortality and the fact that the United States ranks behind 18 other industrialized countries in its infant death rate. Many of us in Congress continue to work to improve the availability of prenatal care for all pregnant women and primary care for children. But we know that for many poor families adequate health care is only a part of the solution; this is especially true for drug-addicted pregnant women.

Our efforts to decrease the U.S. rate of infant mortality will not fully succeed unless we address the problem of drug addiction. A recent survey of hospitals showed that 11 percent of all pregnant women use illicit drugs. One expert estimated that 75 percent of these women are using either cocaine or crack—the most difficult addiction to treat. As many as 375,000 infants each year may be affected and, for those who are, the effects are heartbreaking.

Babies born to drug-addicted women are much more likely to be born prematurely or at low birth weight, which dramatically raises the risk of infant mortality. Those who survive often have serious medical and developmental problems. Many are addicted to their mother's drug and suffer from withdrawal.

The economic and social costs are enormous. Hospital treatment for these babies in neonatal intensive care units can be as much as $1,768 a day. And some of these babies stay hospitalized for months. Just recently the Washington Post exposed this city's "boarder baby" problem. Many hospitals are having to rear the babies of drug-addicted mothers because, after providing the intensive care treatment the babies need, their mothers never return to bring them home. The problem is burdening the health care system and overwhelming foster care services.

Mr. President, we must make sure that comprehensive treatment programs are available to drug-addicted pregnant women and infants. We must get these women off drugs, for the sake of their babies, their families, and themselves.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the understanding of the Chair that all time has been yielded back.

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendments (Nos. 867, 868, and 869) were agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senate Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think under the order the Republican leader can designate a Member to offer an amendment. I designate Senator GRAMM for the drug-free school amendment.

I think we can get a time agreement; 10 minutes equally divided? Is that agreeable to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, that is fine.

Mr. DOLE. Oh, there are second degrees?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Senator HOLLINGS and I have a second-degree amendment. We would take maybe 3 minutes if the Senator wants to incorporate that; 3 minutes to a side.

Mr. DOLE. Senator MITCHELL is coming right in.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I also have a second-degree, but 10 minutes equally divided on each side is sufficient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. Ten minutes equally divided on this amendment.

The Senator from Texas is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 870

(Purpose: To require Drug-Free School plans)

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] proposes an amendment numbered 870.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. .DRUG-FREE SCHOOLS AND CAMPUSES.

"DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE PREVENTION

"SEC. 1212. (a) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, no institution of higher education shall be eligible to receive funds or any other form of financial assistance under any Federal program, including participation in any Federally funded or guaranteed student loan program, unless it certifies to the Secretary that it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol by students and employees that, at a minimum, includes—

"(1) the annual distribution to each student and employee of—

"(A) standards of conduct that clearly prohibit, at a minimum, the unlawful possession, use, or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol by students and employees on its property or as part of any of its activities;

"(B) a description of the applicable legal sanctions under local, State, or Federal law for the unlawful possession or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol;

"(C) a description of the health risks associated with the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol;

"(D) a description of any drug or alcohol counseling, treatment, or rehabilitation programs that are available to employees or students; and

"(E) a clear statement that the institution will impose sanctions on students and employees (consistent with local, State, and Federal law), and a description of those sanctions, up to and including expulsion or termination of employment and referral for prosecution, for violations of the standards of conduct required by paragraph (1)(A); and

"(2) a biennial review by the institution of its program to—

"(A) determine its effectiveness and implement changes to the program if they are needed; and

"(B) ensure that the sanctions required by paragraph (1)(E) are consistently enforced.

"(b) Each institution of higher education that provides the certification required by subsection (a) shall, upon request, make available to the Secretary and to the public a copy of each item required by subsection (a)(1) as well as the results of the biennial review required by subsection (a)(2).

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall publish regulations to implement and enforce the provisions of this section, including regulations that provide for—

"(A) the periodic review of a representative sample of programs required by subsection (a); and

"(B) sanctions, up to and including the termination of any form of financial assistance, for institutions of higher education that fail to implement their programs or to consistently enforce their sanctions.

"(2) The sanctions required by subsection (a)(1)(E) may include the completion of an appropriate rehabilitation program.".

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

(b)(1) Part D of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 (20 U.S.C. 3171 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section 5145 to read as follows:

"CERTIFICATION OF DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE PREVENTION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 5145. (a) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, no local educational agency shall be eligible to receive funds or any other form of financial assistance under any Federal program unless it certifies to the State educational agency that it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and alcohol by students or employees that, at a minimum, includes—

"(1) mandatory, age-appropriate, developmentally based drug and alcohol education and prevention programs (which address the legal, social, and health consequences of drug and alcohol use and which provide information about effective techniques for resisting peer pressure to use illicit drugs or alcohol) for students in all grades of the schools operated or served by the applicant, from early childhood level through grade 12;

"(2) conveying to students that the use of illicit drugs and alcohol is wrong and harmful;

"(3) standards of conduct that are applicable to students and employees in all the applicant's schools and that clearly prohibit, at a minimum, the possession, use, or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol by students and employees on school premises or as part of any of its activities;

"(4) a clear statement that sanctions (consistent with local, State, and Federal law), up to and including expulsion or termination of employment and referral for prosecution, will be imposed on students and employees who violate the standards of conduct required by paragraph (3) and a description of those sanctions;

"(5) information about any available drug and alcohol counseling and rehabilitation programs that are available to students and employees;

"(6) a requirement that parents, students, and employees be given a copy of the standards of conduct required by paragraph (3) and the statement of sanctions required by paragraph (4);

"(7) notifying parents, students, and employees that compliance with the standards of conduct required by paragraph (3) is mandatory; and

"(8) a biennial review by the applicant of its program to—

"(I) determine its effectiveness and implement changes to the program if they are needed; and

"(II) ensure that the sanctions required by paragraph (4) are consistently enforced.

"(b) Each local educational agency that provides the certification required by subsection (a) shall, upon request, make available to the Secretary, the State educational agency, and to the public full information about the elements of its program required by subsection (a), including the results of its biennial review.

"(c) Each State educational agency shall certify to the Secretary that it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol by its students and employees that is consistent with the program required by subsection (a) of this section. The State educational agency shall, upon request, make available to the Secretary and to the public full information about the elements of its program.

"(d)(1) The Secretary shall publish regulations to implement and enforce the provisions of this section, including regulations that provide for—

"(A) the periodic review by State educational agencies of a representative sample of programs required by subsection (a); and

"(B) sanctions, up to and including the termination of any form of financial assistance, for local educational agencies that fail to implement their programs or to consistently enforce their sanctions.

"(2) The sanctions required by subsection (a)(1)(4) may include the completion of an appropriate rehabilitation program.".

(2) The Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 is further amended in section 5126(c)(2) by—

(A) striking out subparagraph (E), (F), and (G); and

(B) redesignating subparagraphs (H) through (M) as subparagraphs (E) through (J), respectively—

(3) The provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, this amendment is the President's amendment. This amendment is the result of the work of Secretary Bennett, the Department of Education, the administration, and those of us who have worked to help put this package together.

This is an accountability package. We are on the verge of providing tremendous assistance and increases in that assistance, to try to provide for drug-free schools.

I submit there is no more fundamental an area to attack the drug problem than in our schools.

I taught for 12 years and I can assure my colleagues, teaching is hard under the best of circumstances. It has to be impossible when people are using illegal drugs or using illegal alcohol.

The objective of this amendment is to have some accountability standards to go along with the money. The amendment is very simple. It establishes a policy of having zero tolerance in our colleges and universities, and in our school systems. It sets out standards that have to be met by those school systems, those colleges and universities that want to have public funding.

It establishes a procedure whereby they have to set out a policy that can include up to and in fact include expulsion of students, termination of employees; it sets up a procedure to review these policies to see that they are effective. It has penalty provisions for those colleges and universities that refuse to comply. It sets up a procedure in the States, and basically it is a straightforward program that seeks to rid our schools and our colleges and universities of illegal drug use.

It is a policy that says we will accept no use of illegal drugs on campus. Those who violate the rules are going to be punished. We are going to require that there be a policy in place. That policy will include the listing of various counseling programs that people can go to if they have a problem.

But what it says in the simplest of all terms is we will not tolerate illegal drug use in the schools of America. I think it is a good amendment. I do not think there is anything controversial about it. I think it is a reasonable complement to providing more money. We need really two policies: First, to provide more resources; and, second, to have a get-serious, get-tough policy to go with it. This is the get-serious, get-tough policy that goes with funding on education. I think it is vitally important; I think it is well thought out; I think it is reasonable. I think we should adopt it.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this amendment requires that both elementary and secondary schools as well as institutions of higher learning submit drug-free school plans to their State departments of education, and for the State departments to certify to the Department of Education that drug-free plans are in place at all schools receiving any Federal assistance.

This language has caused some concern, since all education funds—not just those related to drugs—could be withheld from institutions which refuse to submit plans to the State departments of education.

However, there is a big difference between this amendment and the amendment which would withhold treatment money unless plans are in place. For treatment, the plans must be approved by the Federal Government. There is not similar requirement for schools.

Therefore, even if the Secretary of Education believed a plan to be inadequate, no funds could be withheld unless a school cavalierly refused to submit any plan. I cannot imagine any schools would risk the loss of funds for failing to draft its own strategy to eliminate, or at least address, drug abuse among students, faculty, and employees.

Quite frankly, this amendment may appear to be without any teeth, but it is a start. It will force schools to begin to focus attention on drug abuse at schools throughout our country.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, after parents, the school is one of the most important influences in the life of a child. It is where they spend most of their time; next to the family, and perhaps the church, and it is where we have the greatest opportunity to have a positive influence on our children. Unfortunately, it is also where many of our young people obtain their first exposure to drugs.

America's schools have been voluntarily educating their students about drugs for 20 years. About 75 percent of the students have had at least one drug education course by the time that they graduate from high school. The President's proposal addresses the remaining 25 percent that we have been missing.

I would like to note my support for the President's plan as outlined in the drug strategy. One in three of American children has been approached to buy or use drugs by the age of 16. I understand that the age of first approach is going down, making elementary education very important. The President proposes a stronger program to help children develop refusal skills. These skills will be reinforced by tough, fair policies on use, possession, and distribution of drugs. We all know that when expectations are high they are frequently met.

The President proposes that we have a firm program in our colleges and universities as a condition of eligibility for the receipt of Federal funds. I recently had an opportunity to review a copy of Peterson's "Drug and Alcohol Programs and Policies at Four-Year Colleges." I was dismayed to see the large number of schools that do not have policies on substance abuse on their campuses for either employees or students. The President's proposal will result in the establishment of clear policies that will lead to an understanding by employees and students alike on how a drug-free campus will be maintained.

It is important to note that the President's proposal also establishes a requirement that local educational agencies receiving Federal funds also adopt and implement a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and alcohol by students and their employees. These programs will provide a clear statement of standards of conduct for agency employees and students, sanctions, counseling, and rehabilitation programs, parental involvement, and a biennial review of program effectiveness. I have been told by a number of people that the key to successful programs is the linking of school, home, and community all working together for this to succeed. We have made major strides in supporting this linkage in both the 1988 Anti-Drug Abuse Act and the action that we have taken today. It can be further strengthened by supporting the President's legislative proposal.

The proposal goes further to outline the requirements for the educational component of these programs while retaining local autonomy for designing these programs. In Utah we have had a great deal of success with our K-Through-12 Program, an approach that is very similar to the concept provided for the President's plan. In addition, the Labor Committee just yesterday heard about the success of a program at the W.R. Thomas Middle School in Miami. This program involved an increased emphasis on resisting drug use and increased community involvement. Jeffrey Miller the principal at W.R. Thomas reported on the dramatic turnaround as a result of tough policies with community support.

In closing, I am pleased to note that the President's plan acknowledges that alcohol must be addressed on an equal basis in these programs. We have been told by the experts about the role that alcohol plays as a gateway drug for a majority of users and its involvement in polysubstance abuse. Across this Nation most of those with drug problems also have a problem with alcohol.

Mr. President, I asked that my colleagues join in supporting the President's plan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I will be as brief as I can. The Senator from Texas is absolutely right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator HOLLINGS, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator acts, is all time yielded back on the first-degree amendment? Is all time yielded back on the first-degree amendment?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, it is my understanding we never had a unanimous-consent agreement. I would be happy to yield back the remainder of my time but none was ever agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I believe there was a unanimous-consent agreement for 10 minutes equally divided on this amendment.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, this side yields back the remainder of the time on the Gramm amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 871 TO AMENDMENT NO. 870

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator HOLLINGS, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], for Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. EXON, Mr. DOLE, Mr. WILSON, Mr. LOTT, Mr. BOND, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. WARNER, Mr. COATS, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. HATCH, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. BURNS, and Mr. CHAFEE) proposes amendment No. 871.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this amendment provides for drug and alcohol testing for safety related transportation personnel. It is virtually identical, with only very minor and technical changes, to a bill which was passed by the Senate twice during the 100th Congress, once on a rollcall vote of 83 to 7.

The drug-testing aspects are substantially the same as regulations already promulgated by the Department of Transportation. Therefore, with respect to drug testing, it does little more than codify Department of Transportation regulations. It does add alcohol testing to the Department of Transportation Testing Program.

Mr. President, I think that the need for this legislation is obvious. It has been widely recognized by the Senate and the 100th Congress. Since the Chase, MD, disaster, in which 16 people were killed 3 years ago, there has been an average of one train wreck every 10 days in which testing has subsequently disclosed drug or alcohol use.

The incident with the USAir plane where the pilot and copilot disappeared last week raises further questions of drug and alcohol use in transportation.

Obviously, this is a matter whose time has come. Therefore, on behalf of Senator HOLLINGS and 14 other cosponsors, I offer this amendment. I say on behalf of Senator HOLLINGS because this legislation has been reported unanimously out of the Commerce Committee this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, once again we passed that in the 1988 drug bill. I compliment the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from South Carolina. It was dropped in the House. I hope it does not meet a similar fate. I know of no one on our side who wishes to speak against the amendment. I am willing to yield back time and vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, let me say I support this amendment, and I ask unanimous consent I may be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. I thank the Chair.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise to urge my colleagues to join us in our fight to improve the safety of the traveling public by ending drug and alcohol abuse by transportation workers. Right to the point, there is a critical need for increased testing, including mandatory random testing, to deter such abuse. That is the point of this amendment, and I urge its adoption.

Twice during the 100th Congress, the Senate passed legislation virtually identical to this, mandating random drug and alcohol testing for safety-sensitive employees in the rail, motor carrier, and commercial airline industries. Support was overwhelming, as the provisions of our bill were adopted on an 87-to-3 vote in late 1987, and without debate during consideration of the omnibus drug bill late last year. Both times, however, our efforts were stymied by our colleagues in the House.

It is impossible to ignore the presence of alcohol and illegal drugs in the transportation workplace. The facts speak for themselves. This year alone, there have been 13 rail accidents in which either alcohol or drugs were found to be present in employees responsible for safe passage. Last year, on average, there was a rail accident in which drugs or alcohol were involved every 12½ days. And we cannot forget the tragic January 1987 accident in Chase, MD, in which an engineer's use of marijuana was the probable cause for an accident between a Conrail freight train and an Amtrak passenger train that resulted in 16 fatalities and 174 injuries.

Mr. President, other examples show this is not an isolated problem:

In 1986, an insurance industry study found that 30 percent of some 300 truck drivers randomly sampled tested positive for drugs.

Investigators determined that a pilot's cocaine use was a contributing factor in a January 1988 crash of a commuter aircraft in rural Colorado in which nine people died.

In April 1987, a bus struck a bridge on the George Washington Parkway in Virginia, killing 1 and injuring 32 passengers. The driver tested positive for cocaine, valium, and marijuana.

The grounding of the Exxon Valdez earlier this year in Prince William Sound, AK, in which the captain's history of alcohol use is at issue, is another vivid reminder of the extent of this problem.

Fortunately, our efforts have borne some fruit. Last year, the Department of Transportation issued rules mandating testing of safety-sensitive workers for illegal drugs in the rail, motor carrier, aviation, maritime, pipeline, and mass transit industries.

However, enactment of legislation to mandate drug and alcohol testing for transportation workers remains my objective and top priority. Very simply, the DOT rules do not go far enough, failing to include alcohol in industry testing programs. Accident statistics prove alcohol abuse a threat to the safety of the American traveling public at least as big, if not bigger, than illegal drugs. For example, over a 7-year period, the Department of Transportation found 10,300 individuals who had previously had their drivers licenses suspended or revoked for driving while intoxicated became certified pilots. Clearly alcohol is an issue that necessitates our action.

Second, the DOT rules lack the statutory backing that regulations of this importance must have. Without having such statutory backing, the existing drug testing rules are subject to the whimsical interpretations and revisions of future DOT administrations.

Mr. President, this amendment will accomplish these objectives. It will mandate random and other types of testing for both illegal drugs and alcohol. And it protects the rights of those tested by incorporating guidelines established last year by the Department of Health and Human Services on laboratory accuracy, as well as protections for individual privacy and innocent employees.

I am heartened by the recent Supreme Court decisions on drug testing—both on the constitutionality of Federal Railroad Administration post-accident testing of rail workers, and Customs Service requirements for drug screening of certain workers seeking promotions in the Service. I have long been convinced that given the compelling need for public safety, carefully crafted testing programs would be found to be within the limits of the Constitution.

The key component to our amendment is random testing. Without it, we do not have the deterrence needed to stop drug and alcohol abuse. Experience has established this as fact. For example, the Coast Guard has seen its rate of positive tests drop from 10.3 percent in 1983 when random testing was initiated, to 2.8 percent in 1988.

Call it intimidation. Call it whatever you will. But the fact is that random testing is the only method we have to reasonably ensure that transportation employees will not use drugs on the job.

Mr. President, if you drink alcohol and use illegal drugs, you have no business operating a train, plane, truck, or bus. You have no business assuming responsibility for innocent lives.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this measure today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment (No. 871) was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana, Mr. COATS, is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 872 TO AMENDMENT NO. 870

(Purpose: To provide for voluntary random drug testing of students participating in voluntary, extracurricular activities in schools that voluntarily choose to participate in a drug testing program)

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I send a second-degree amendment to the Gramm amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. COATS] proposes an amendment numbered 872 to the amendment No. 870.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the amendment insert the following new section:

No local educational agency shall use any of the funds which are released by this section unless funds are made available for each fiscal year to the chief executive officer of a State which may be used with existing power for random drug testing programs for students voluntarily participating in extracurricular activities and using existing power such testing is done only in schools which voluntarily choose to participate in such a program.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, Dr. Joseph Pursch, an expert on illegal drugs, talks of the tragic irony of abuse—as the user gets sicker, he is less able to see it. The magic of the powder is that every noseful tells you that you really don't have a problem at all.

This is the peculiar challenge of our drug crisis. And it is the fact which makes drug testing so vital. Testing can help isolate and confront those who are going to smiling and ignorant self-destruction. It can deter others from making that first experiment with illegal drugs. And it can support our efforts at rehabilitation by increasing accountability.

Drug testing, when employed with proper safeguards, is not a means of punishment, but a tool of compassion. It directs help toward those who need it most desperately. And it is a practice that most successful prevention and treatment programs have in common.

In fact, this is really the only way to determine if such a program is successful in the first place. At the labor and human resources hearing on drug abuse education and prevention this week, I discussed with Senator KENNEDY the need to isolate those programs which work best. We must be concerned for both funding and effectiveness. And in treatment and prevention programs there must be some objective measure of our success or failure.

Drug testing is the measure, or standard, we adopted in a bill that Senator PAUL SIMON introduced and I cosponsored for the testing of those on parole, probation, or supervised release.

And now it is my hope we can make this standard of success, and instrument of help, available to schools and parents who are in urgent need of it. I rise today to offer an amendment to provide for random drug testing programs in extracurricular school activities, for students in schools which voluntarily choose to initiate such a program.

This amendment is specifically designed to meet a need without placing unbearable burdens on schools. It applies only to extracurricular activities. And it allows them to craft their own approaches, appropriate to their own needs.

I have seen the proof that programs like this work. In my home State of Indiana a high school randomly tested its baseball team for drugs and found that a third had marijuana in their systems. The purpose was not to punish, but enforce a drug-free standard and provide help to those who fall short. Rather than just wringing their hands, wondering why their education programs were not working, they did something about it.

At McCutcheon High School in Tippecanoe County, IN, athletes and cheerleaders are now drug tested. When athletes from McCutcheon High School say they are drug free, other students, as well as their community, know precisely what that means. At McCutcheon they know their athletes are less likely to be risking injury because of drug abuse. At McCutcheon they know that ahletes are less likely to use drugs to relieve pain, contributing to major injuries.

This drug-testing policy was tested in court, and the program passed legal challenge. In fact, the U.S. Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, was so clear cut in their decision that the case was not appealed.

According to Tippecanoe County School Corp., the tests that they used cost just $12 each. Part of the court's ruling was based upon the fact that the test is 95-percent accurate. Even if a school created a program in which all students of a particular extracurricular group are tested initially, this is not an expensive program. After the initial testing, Tippecanoe has sustained the program with random testing. Costs have become minimal.

By making available funds to schools that are willing to voluntarily participate, we can begin to have a dramatic impact on students' attitudes. If students can stand up and say: "we not only claim to be drug free but we proved it," it may ignite a trend that past rhetoric has been powerless to start.

So I urge, Mr. President, that my colleagues endorse this amendment and add it to the Gramm amendment which is pending. With that, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request has been made for the yeas and nays. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I strongly support the amendment. I think it makes eminent good sense. This is something we should decide and not the courts. I think the distinguished Senator from Indiana has proposed an amendment that deals with any concern that anybody would have. I think it is very important that it be adopted. It certainly strengthens what I am trying to do in terms of drug-free schools, and I commend him for it.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I compliment the Senator from Indiana as well and I reiterate what is on the face of the amendment, but I would like to restate it anyway. It is voluntary. The school board in the particular school district must conclude that it wants to sign on to this voluntary effort, and it relates to extracurricular activities. So I think it is a wise approach. It leaves the decision where it should be, at the school board level, and in fact I think it can be very helpful if done well. I have no doubt that the school boards will attempt to do that. I compliment the Senator from Indiana. I yield all time.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I think we are ready to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 99, nays 0, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Sasser

So the amendment (No. 872) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the first-degree amendment of the Senator from Texas, as amended.

The amendment (No. 870) as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator DOLE now be recognized to offer two of his four listed amendments en bloc, specifically the amendment relating to drug treatment plans and to waivers for international narcotics assistance, that they be considered and agreed to without any intervening action or debate; that following the disposition of the Dole amendments, Senator WARNER be recognized to offer an amendment regarding the special forfeiture fund for the drug czar on which there be 2 minutes equally divided; with the following second-degree amendments being the only amendments in order and limited to the following times, and in the following order. First, a Warner amendment regarding disposition of forfeiture property, 15 minutes equally divided. Second, a Cranston amendment regarding restriction on designation of high intensity drug areas, 15 minutes equally divided. Third, a Wilson amendment regarding asset forfeiture, 15 minutes equally divided, and fourth, a Graham amendment regarding asset forfeiture, 10 minutes equally divided. And other amendments relating to the allocation of resources and agreed to by the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, pursuant to the previous order, and a Cranston amendment relating to a California highway project—I will complete the reading of the request, and I believe the distinguished Republican leader has an objection—which the two managers will accept. That, thereafter, the Senate proceed, without intervening action or debate to third reading and final passage of the bill.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand the Cranston amendment is not the one that Senator D'AMATO thought to have been cleared. I wonder if we might take that one out of the agreement, and then we can work it out.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, can we do that with the understanding that I am not precluded from offering it? I will work it out.

Mr. DOLE. I think there is a consent agreement that precludes any other amendment which we entered into yesterday. Somebody else might object, but I would not. The original consent agreement on DOT.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, reserving the right to object and I do not anticipate that, but were it to be handled under the circumstances as described by the Senator from California, under the consent agreement as it is currently phrased, we would still have the vote on final passage without any intervening business at a time certain?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I will have to yield to the distinguished Republican leader as to whether anyone wants a rollcall vote on final passage. With respect to the time certain, there is no request for time certain.

Mr. WALLOP. What I was concerned with is if that amendment were not satisfactory and we were boxed on both the time and the debate to it, but that not being the case——

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no time certain.

Mr. LEVIN. Reserving the right to object, Madam President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MIKULSKI). The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. My question is this—and forgive me if you covered this territory—I am trying to work out an amendment now which I believe will be worked out. If it is, is that covered without being identified?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, it is not.

Mr. LEVIN. I thought it said all amendments which the Appropriations Committee——

Mr. MITCHELL. That refers only to amendments relating to the allocation of resources under the drug program, which is a reference to a provision in the previous order that limits those to that subject, and only when approved by the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. LEVIN. I am hopeful—and we are trying to work this out right now with staff, and if it is necessary to list it there, so if it is worked out, it can be added, and I would appreciate the Senator giving me 10 minutes equally divided on that. Does that create problems for you for the Senator?

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator indicate whether his amendment is one that falls within the description of amendments relating to the allocation of resources?

Mr. LEVIN. In a generic sense, yes. I am not sure technically it is. What it does is allocate $20 million of the $700 million that is allocated to the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Administration to the development of a crack inhibitor. If that falls in the description of the two bottom lines, the answer is yes. Otherwise, I ask protection of it.

Mr. DOLE. Put it on the next bill.

Mr. LEVIN. I believe it is covered in the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am advised by staff that that does. The amendment the Senator has described does fall within that description or the phrase relating to allocation of resources.

So the Senator is fully cognizant, under that order, in order to be accepted, it would have to be approved by the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. LEVIN. Or the managers of the bill?

Mr. BIDEN. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. The chairman and the ranking member of the Appropriations Committee. It is explicit in the order.

Mr. DOLE. We are going to try to work it out.

Mr. LEVIN. Should I identify it or not?

Mr. DOLE. If it is agreed to, it is automatic.

Mr. LEVIN. If it is the managers agree to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I renew my unanimous-consent request as stated.

Would the Chair like me to restate it or does the Chair have it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like the majority leader to restate it to ensure accuracy.

Mr. MITCHELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator WARNER be recognized to offer the special forfeiture fund for the drug czar amendment on which there will be 2 minutes equally divided with the following four second-degree amendments being the only amendments in order and limited to the following times and in the following order:

First, a Warner amendment regarding disposition of forfeiture property, 15 minutes equally divided; second, a Cranston amendment regarding restrictions on designation of high intensity drug areas, 15 minutes equally divided; third, a Wilson amendment regarding asset forfeiture, 15 minutes equally divided.

Madam President, I amend my request to say three second-degree amendments rather than four because Senator GRAHAM has just informed me that he will not need to offer his amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. There will be no Wilson amendment. I am going to join Senator CRANSTON, and I believe 15 minutes per side will suffice for what I wish to contribute to the debate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator.

Then, Madam President, I further amend my request to say, with the following two second-degree amendments being the only amendments in order, and again they would be the Warner amendment on disposition of forfeiture property, 15 minutes equally divided, and a Cranston amendment on the restriction on designation of high intensity areas, 15 minutes, equally divided; that upon the disposition of those amendments, Senator DOLE be recognized to offer two of his four listed amendments en bloc, specifically the amendments relating to drug treatment plans and to waivers to international narcotics assistance; that they be considered and agreed to without any intervening action or debate; that following disposition of these listed amendments and other amendments relating to the allocation of resources and agreed to by the chairman and ranking member of the Appropriations Committee pursuant to the previous order, and a Cranston amendment relating to a California highway project which the two managers will accept, that the Senate then proceed without intervening action or debate to third reading and final passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the majority leader's unanimous-consent request is agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. We have had a request for a rollcall if the Senator wants to get the yeas and nays now.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask for the yeas and nays on final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the distinguished Republican leader and all Senators involved for their cooperation.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, while the leadership is still present, I wish to thank them personally and members of their staffs for expediting the requirements of the several Senators covered by this unanimous-consent request.

It was my privilege for several days to work with Senator HATFIELD, Senator BYRD, and 16 other Members of the Senate in negotiating the compromise that made possible the consideration in this timely fashion of this important piece of legislation.

AMENDMENT NO. 873

(Purpose: To provide for transfers of funds to the special forfeiture fund)

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WARNER] proposes an amendment numbered 873.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, add the following:

SEC. . AMENDMENT RELATING TO THE SPECIAL FORFEITURE FUND.

(a) ASSETS FORFEITURE FUND AMENDMENT.—Section 524(c)(9) of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(9) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as necessary for the purposes described in subparagraphs (A)(ii), (B), (C), (F), and (G) of paragraph (1). For each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, the Attorney General shall transfer not to exceed $150,000,000 in unobligated amounts available in the Fund to the Special Forfeiture Fund: Provided, That such amounts will be transferred on a quarterly basis: Provided further, That an amount not to exceed $15,000,000 or, if determined by the Attorney General to be necessary to meet asset specific expenses, an amount equal to one-tenth of the previous year's obligations, may be retained in the Fund and remain available for appropriation.".

(b) SPECIAL FORFEITURE FUND AMENDMENT.—Section 6073(b) of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) DEPOSITS.—In each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, there shall be transferred to and deposited in the Fund, from the Department of Justice Assets Forfeiture Fund pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 524(c)(9), not to exceed $150,000,000: Provided, That amounts specified in the second proviso of said section may be retained in the Assets Forfeiture Fund and remain available for appropriation.".

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, this amendment extends the authorization for the special forfeiture fund. The 1988 drug bill provided that up to $150 million in excess funds from the asset forfeiture fund be transferred to the special forfeiture fund controlled by the Director of Drug Control—the so-called drug czar. This amendment provides for that transfer for the next 4 fiscal years, and is consistent with language in the Byrd-Hatfield amendment which was inserted at the request of Senator DECONCINI to provide $115 million for prison construction and $25 million for high-intensity drug areas.

Mr. CRANSTON. Madam President, I send a second-degree amendment to the desk.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I believe the order of the amendments is the Senator from Virginia yields back the time under this underlying amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I compliment the Senator from Virginia. When we wrote the change in the law last year, quite frankly, when I wrote that, I did not contemplate and take into consideration what is being offered here now, the ability to spend down this money more rapidly. It works well. It makes sense in light of the needs that are available. I compliment the Senator from Virginia and I yield back my time on the amendment.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I thank the distinguished manager of the bill and I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I send to the desk an amendment in the second degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the consent agreement the Senator from Virginia is to be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. WARNER. I thank the Chair. I believe my distinguished colleague from California immediately follows the Senator from Virginia.

AMENDMENT NO. 874 TO AMENDMENT NO. 873

(Purpose: To amend section 6077 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 relating to the disposition of forfeited property and State law)

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBB], the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WARNER], for himself, Mr. WILSON, Mr. ROBB, Mr. D'AMATO, and Mr. THURMOND, proposes an amendment numbered 874 to amendment No. 873.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate section in the amendment, add the following new section:

(a) section 511(e)(3) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881(e)(3)) is amended by—

(1) striking subparagraph (B);

(2) striking the dash and "(A)"; and

(3) striking "; and" and inserting a period.

(b) Section 6077 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 is amended by striking subsection (c).

(c) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective with respect to fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1990.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, at the time the Congress considered the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 certain language was provided by the House of Representatives which put in question the ability of local law enforcement agencies to continue to receive a portion of the funds resulting from drug forfeitures, particularly in those cases where there was joint action by Federal and local law enforcement officers.

Madam President, local law enforcement throughout America is doing its very best to carry its heavy burden of this drug war. We in the Congress must do everything, absolutely everything, we can to help these brave officers and other officials involved in risk to their bodily safety, indeed risk of loss of life.

The U.S. Senate now on two occasions has passed legislation comparable to this measure. The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] incorporated it and I was jointly associated with him on that measure in the authorization bill for the Armed Forces for the fiscal year 1990, a provision comparable. The Senator from Virginia asked this Senate to accept, and the Senate did, a freestanding provision to cure it. So on two occasions the Senate has addressed this.

The distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] in his bill in committee has put in a comparable provision.

That bill will soon be considered by this Senate, an appropriations bill.

So, there has been strong bipartisan effort in this body to remedy the deficiency that we now find in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988.

Madam President, I thank my colleagues who have cosponsored this measure. There are many other States affected.

I ask unanimous consent that, until the hour of 6 p.m. tonight, additional Senators might come forward and indicate their willingness to cosponsor.

I will put into the RECORD, and I further ask unanimous consent at this point, the listing of those States which, in the judgment of the Senator from Virginia, are affected by the language currently in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988, and urge Senators to look at that list and see if their State is affected. Perhaps they would desire to cosponsor this legislation.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. WILSON. Madam President, I will rise briefly to commend my friend from Virginia. As he has indicated, the legislation he is pursuing this afternoon has a widespread following already on this floor, as indeed it should, because the Senate has made it clear, first in the enabling legislation which created the asset forfeiture program, that we greatly value this.

We do so because local law enforcement, quite rightly, feels entitled to share in the fruit of what has been a very dangerous effort to protect those citizens whom they are sworn to protect.

There is a poetic justice to asset forfeiture in that the ill-gotten gain of drug traffickers under this program is shared with those police officers at the local level who have been engaged in raids or busts, and it allows them to enhance their antidrug efforts.

What the Senator from Virginia is seeking to do, most simply stated, is to prevent a spectacularly ill-advised amendment, now in the law, from curtailing the maximum use of that money. It would be a distinct injustice to allow those who have labored long and hard to achieve a better climate for the citizens whom they are trying to protect, to be deprived of this money they have earned many times over.

I commend him. We should support him. I think this is a matter of the broadest bipartisan support in this House. The mischief arose in the other House. We should see to it that this barrier to the equitable sharing, as it is also termed, is removed once and for all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I would also like to extend my appreciation to the entire Virginia delegation, particularly my colleague Mr. ROBB, and Mr. BOUCHER, who sponsored in the House a bill identical to the one the Senator from Virginia has sponsored in this body.

Unfortunately, the leadership of the House has not as yet come to grips with this problem, in my judgment. I urge them to do so at the earliest opportunity.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, when Senator THURMOND and I drafted this bill originally in 1984, it was envisioned to work precisely as the distinguished Senator from Virginia has now seen to it that it once again functions. And, frankly, for years it worked well.

For a little piece of history, just for a brief moment, the reason why Senator THURMOND and I drafted the bill in the first instance was we constantly heard from local police agencies that they work and work and work with the Federal agencies, help make significant—to use the slang "busts"—help make significant arrests that resulted in the forfeiture of large amounts of money or things of value, and received none of the benefit.

So Senator THURMOND and I sat down with the local police agencies and said: OK, what do we need to do about this? We came up with what we thought was a very logical approach. It worked.

As the Senator from Virginia points out, when we passed the drug bill last year and it got to the House, one of my colleagues with whom I almost always agree on the other side, probably, if not the most knowledgeable, one of the most knowledgeable people on criminal justice issues in the House, thought that this was not the appropriate way for it to work. He prevailed on the House side.

He has called me a number of times. We have had disagreement. We seldom disagree, but we do on this one. So I would like to ask permission of the Senator from Virginia, if he would kindly add me as a cosponsor to his legislation. And, once again, I compliment him for correcting what would in fact turn around what we intended to do in the first place.

Fortunately it has not taken effect yet, so if this goes into law, we will prevent what happened in the House from ever having become law and we will have satisfied the local police agencies and, I might add, the Federal Government no longer opposes what they used to oppose.

The Senator has made a significant contribution here and I compliment him on it, and I yield back the time.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I thank the distinguished manager and my friend from Delaware. Indeed, first I ask unanimous consent he be made a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Indeed, he has carefully stated the legislative history. I would only add that it is October 1 of this year, but days away, when the hammer falls and precludes these courageous law enforcement officers from getting a portion of these proceeds.

This action is timely. The leadership of this body has consistently assisted this Senator, the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from California, and others who have repeatedly come forward. And Senator HOLLINGS, who has repeatedly come forward to try to correct this measure.

I would also like to pay special recognition to the Federal Law Enforcement Organization, the Fraternal Order of Police, the National Troopers Organization, the International Brotherhood of Police Organizations, the Police Management Association, the Major City Chiefs of Police, and the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives. All of them deserve the credit for working with their respective Members of Congress to see that this measure was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, speaking as the Senator from Maryland, would also like to be added as a cosponsor.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, it is an honor to have the Chair included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes, I yield back my time.

Mr. WARNER. The Senator from Virginia yields back his time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question occurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment No. (No. 874) to amendment No. 873 was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

AMENDMENT NO. 875 TO AMENDMENT NO. 873

(Purpose: To require the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy to designate high intensity drug trafficking areas no later than February 1, 1990)

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California, [Mr. CRANSTON], for himself and Mr. WILSON, proposes an amendment numbered 875 to amendment numbered 873.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment, insert the following: Provided, That, none of the funds made available under this Act for the Office of National Drug Control Policy from the special forfeiture fund may be used by the Director of National Drug Control Policy after February 1, 1990, if the Director has not by that date designated high-intensity drug trafficking areas pursuant to section 1005(c) of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690).".

Mr. CRANSTON. Madam President, this amendment is quite simple.

The pending amendment and the Byrd amendment itself provide additional funds for the Director of National Drug Control Policy which can be used by the Director for Activities in High-Intensity Drug Trafficking Areas.

The 1988 Anti-Drug Abuse Act authorized the Director to designate specific areas of the United States as high-intensity drug trafficking areas and to send Federal task forces to those areas to help deal with the special problems these areas face. The law requires the Director to take into consideration the extent to which an area is a center for illegal drug production, manufacturing, importation, or distribution and the extent to which drug-related activities in the area are having a harmful impact in other areas of the country.

It has been nearly a year since the law was enacted, yet the administration still has not exercised its authority under these provisions. The administration says it will not make any such designations until next February, at the earliest.

Madam President, my amendment would effectively require that the director make these designations by February 1, 1990, at the latest. Why appropriate millions of additional dollars if the Director will not act on a timely basis?

Frankly, Madam President, I do not want to be standing on the Senate floor a year from now complaining that the Director still has not made the designations. I do not want to wait until the end of the next fiscal year to see the money that we are appropriating today get out where it is needed.

We have a crisis in this country, particularly in areas like Los Angeles and San Diego where high-intensity drug trafficking is taking place.

We will lose the war against drugs if we do not start moving faster in striking at the center of the problem.

For months and months, I and other Senators have been pressing the administration to make the designations. I have joined the Senator from Arizona, Mr. DECONCINI, and others in urging a designation for the southwest border area. In June, I introduced legislation, S. 1234, which would require the designations to be made and specify four of the cities—Los Angeles, San Diego, Miami, and New York—which are the areas of the highest levels of drug trafficking activity. I have urged that they be included in the designations. I considered offering an amendment today that would have required the designations to be made within 45 days. There was some concern expressed that such an amendment would be difficult to comply with. I thus have modified my amendment so that it simply requires that the administration make the designations by February 1—the date that the drug czar has indicated he would be able to do so.

This amendment would thus guarantee that we do not have to wait until the end of the next fiscal year before the funds we are going to appropriate for activities in high-intensity drug activities can be obligated and used in the war against drugs.

IMPORTANCE OF DESIGNATIONS

Madam President, I want to speak for a few moments about how important getting additional resources into these high-intensity drug areas is to the entire country and the ultimate success of the war against drugs.

If we are going to cut off the supply of drugs into this country, we have to deal with these areas of high-intensity drug activity.

Madam President, I am very proud of my State and the many contributions that Californians make to our Nation. But I am not proud of the role that drug traffickers who have a death grip on a number of California communities play in spreading the plague of drug abuse throughout the Nation.

The reports of the Drug Enforcement Administration [DEA], the Federal Bureau of Investigation [FBI], and the National Narcotics Intelligence Consumers Committee, known as the NNICC Report, indicate that major drug trafficking activity—including either importation or distribution or manufacturing or some combination of these activities—exists in Los Angeles and San Diego along with cities like New York and Miami.

In the case of Los Angeles, local and Federal officers seized over 40,000 pounds of cocaine during 1988—which some officials estimate is only 10 percent of the total amount flowing through the area to the rest of the country. By some estimates, 40 percent of all the cocaine entering this country is routed via Los Angeles. That is in addition to the crack, heroin, and other illicit drugs that are distributed through Los Angeles. As a result of this substantial drug activity, Los Angeles is now widely regarded as the drug-money laundering capital of the Nation.

Federal officials estimate several billion dollars a year is being laundered from Los Angeles through Panama and other countries and back to Colombia. Last year, Federal and local drug agents seized more assets from drug dealers in Los Angeles—more than $200 million—than anywhere else in the country.

The Los Angeles-based drug activity involves gang-activity which is spreading throughout the country. The Los Angeles gangs—the Bloods and the Crips—have spread their drug trafficking activities up and down California, into neighboring States, and even attempted to establish operations as far east as York, PA. These two gangs have established a far-reaching drug trafficking network that has made itself known throughout the country. They extend their activities by recruiting retail-level distributors from the local area and using gang members as couriers for both the drugs and income generated from crack sales.

Often these gangs traffick in crack cocaine. The history of this drug is that it was first available in 1981 in Los Angeles, San Diego, and Houston. Later, it became a serious problem in New York. Crack cocaine literally exploded on the drug scene during 1986 and was reported available in 28 States and the District of Columbia. It is currently available in almost every State.

Madam President, if you think the exportation of crack cocaine throughout the country from the Los Angeles-based drug network is a problem, you are not going to like what is coming next much better. The clandestine laboratory production of methamphetamines and amphetamines is become another serious problem in this country. A significant amount of the production of these drugs takes place in the San Diego area. Methamphetamine laboratory seizures in the DEA's San Diego field division area have increased dramatically during the past several years. DEA's San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco field divisions along with the Seattle and Houston field divisions account for over 80 percent of the methamphetamine laboratories seized in 1988.

Madam President, all the data I have been able to gather regarding the supply of drugs into this country indicates that the drug trafficking in and through Los Angeles and San Diego, along with New York and Miami, has a dramatic impact upon the entire country. We can advance the war on drugs significantly by cutting off the supply in these cities. If we can cut back the activity in these high-intensity drug areas, we will help not only the residents of these communities, but the rest of the country as well.

Los Angeles and San Diego need additional resources to deal with the special problems they face. These cities and the people who live in them are on the front lines of the war against drugs. Their communities are the principal drug supply centers for the rest of the country. If we can cut off the supply lines of the enemy, we can gain a significant victory in this war.

The designations provided for in the 1988 antidrug abuse law will enable the administration to send in special task forces to work with the overtaxed local law enforcement agencies, to apprehend the drug dealers and speed them through the criminal justice system and into prison, off our streets and communities.

If we are going to win the war against drugs, we need to get moving now. My amendment would guarantee that we do what is necessary to get these funds out to the communities that are in desperate need before the next fiscal year is over.

For all these reasons, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON. Madam President, I rise in enthusiastic support of the amendment, for all the reasons you just heard. I looked across the aisle at the distinguished manager, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. For many years he sought to create in law the position that we now identify as drug czar. He also was the sponsor and author of the idea of these high intensity drug activity areas.

Senator HEINZ and I last year in collaboration with him and his staff worked in the 1988 bill to try to develop criteria to define what a high-activity area would be. Basically, it is what your common sense would tell you it would be; an area afflicted in the ways that make it not only a problem in terms of the suffering of local residents, but one that is important nationally because the area so designated enjoys the very doubtful distinction of exporting this poison throughout the land. The criteria that were developed were that such an area be a center of the manufacture of dangerous drugs; that it be a place of mass importation and redistribution, transshipment to other parts of the Nation. Unhappily, that happens to fit both Los Angeles and the entire Southwest border area much too closely. It is no accident that it does. It also fits Miami; it fits Houston; it fits New York.

Madam President, what we are seeking to achieve here is a designation which the drug czar has indicated will occur at approximately the time that we have set as a deadline. What we are trying to do is to deal with this problem at its head and to cut through it. To use a metaphor that I think in this case is applicable, we have in several of these high-activity areas, high-intensity areas, an octopus reaching out with tenacles across the land.

The FBI met in Kansas City in the middle of last year—not this past summer, but a year or so ago—and at that point, because of the activity of the drug gangs headquartered in Los Angeles, the so-called crack gangs, they found that they were dealing with this problem not just in Los Angeles, not just in the larger cities, but in virtually every urban center from Anchorage and Honolulu on the west to New York and Washington on the east. Singularly unhappy but successful entrepreneurship had taken place. Crack had become an epidemic throughout the land. The thing to do is to deal with that problem at its head, not at the tenacles. The purpose of designating a high-intensity area was to bring the resources to bear upon such a high-intensity area in a way that gave promise of eliminating that activity and thereby eliminating the ability to export the danger throughout the land.

Madam President, I inquire how much time remains? I wish to retain some for Senator HEINZ.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. About 3½ minutes.

Mr. WILSON. I reserve the remainder of the time. I am advised the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] who is a collaborator in that effort, is on the way to the floor.

HIGH-INTENSITY DRUG TRAFFICKING AREAS

Mr. HEINZ. Madam President, I want to thank Senator BIDEN and Senator WILSON for their kind words. And, as the author of the amendment to last year's Anti-Drug Act which provided criteria for the designation of high-intensity drug trafficking areas and required the drug czar to report to the Congress on the use of this authority, I want to state that I share the Senator from California's interest in getting Bill Bennett to designate high-intensity drug trafficking.

I cannot speak for Bill Bennett, but since the drug strategy states that he intends to use this authority next February, I suspect he has few reservations about this amendment.

Madam President, there are communities throughout this country which desperately need the Federal resources a designation would provide: Philadelphia, southern California, the southwest border, Miami, and New York just to name a few.

Such a designation in no way reflects failure on the part of local officials to address their drug crises. It in no way sends a signal to businesses and tourists to stay away. It simply means that those areas will get additional tools to fight the war on drugs.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, is the 4½ minutes all that is left on this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is actually now 3 minutes 40 seconds.

Mr. BIDEN. For the entirety of the debate that remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was 15 minutes equally divided. We are now down to 3 minutes and 30 seconds.

Mr. BIDEN. Three minutes and thirty seconds controlled by the Senator from Delaware?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. WILSON. If it is equally divided——

Mr. BIDEN. Parliamentary inquiry. I am confused. Who was controlling the time on the other side?

Mr. WILSON. Madam President, the inquiry, in which I join my friend from Delaware, is who is controlling time on the other side. Earlier this afternoon I sought and retained unanimous consent to do that as the acting manager before the current occupant of the Chair was presiding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The author of the amendment, Senator CRANSTON, controls 7½ minutes and the opposition 7½ minutes.

Mr. BIDEN. I see. I ask unanimous consent that we have 3 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BIDEN. That will leave 3½ minutes for the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Madam President, I would like to make two fairly brief points and one acknowledgement. I thank my colleague from California for his referencing my efforts, but there were many people involved. I thank him though, very much, for being so gracious.

Let met make two points. what both Senators from California, the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the Senator from Delaware are all attempting to do is ask the Drug Director to make a very difficult decision. That is why we created the post in the first place. Let me state for the record what the problem is.

On the one hand if the Drug Director follows the law that is in place and designates high intensity areas with the limited funds he has asked for, he is going to make a lot of cities angry. He does not want to designate San Diego, Los Angeles, and Houston and not designate Chicago, Miami, Atlanta, New York, Boston, and Philadelphia.

Now, that creates a problem. That in my humble opinion is one of the reasons why he has not complied with the law.

There is a second reason. If he designates all those areas, which I suspect the Senator from California and I agree would qualify and do qualify as high intensity areas, he would have to change his strategy. He would have to change the drug strategy. He would have to ask for a lot more resources.

Let me put this in perspective. The drug czar came in. The first act he engaged in under the law, which he was allowed to do, was declare, in essence, Washington, DC, a high-intensity area. The way he paid for that was to go out and take an agent from San Diego and one from Philadelphia and two from Miami and three from Chicago, et cetera. So it is called robbing Peter to pay Paul.

Now he is going to be required to designate certain areas. We will then know, once that designation is made, how intense this war on drugs is because everyone acknowledges that there are a number of high-intensity areas.

The third point I would like to make, the Senator from California is absolutely correct. As that old saying goes, if you think there is a problem with crack coming from California, you have seen nothing yet. "Crank" is on its way. "Crank" is a synthetically produced crack. It has a feature that makes it more appealing. The high lasts longer and it greatly intensifies sexual potency, two strong selling items in the drug trade.

We can laugh and smile about it, but it is devastating. Mark my words.

Unless we impact upon the metamphetamine industry that is booming under the hands of southern California gangs where they are producing it, mainly in Montana and the Dakotas now, we are in deep, deep, deep trouble. That is why we have to do what the Senator from California insists, designate the areas, move on them, and move quickly.

I assume my 3 minutes is up so obviously I will yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

So the amendment (No. 875) to amendment No. 873 was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the Warner amendment, as amended.

The amendment (No. 873), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment as amended was agreeed to.

I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 876

(Purpose: To require treatment accountability and to waive certain restrictions on international assistance)

AMENDMENT NO. 877

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I send two amendments to the desk and ask that they be immediately considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] proposes amendments 876 and 877 en bloc.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 876

At the appropriate place, add the following:

SEC. . (a) Title XIX of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting after section 1916A (42 U.S.C. 300x-4a) the following new section:

"SEC. 1916B. STATEWIDE DRUG TREATMENT PLAN.

"(a) NATURE OF PLAN.—To receive the drug abuse portion of its allotment for a fiscal year under section 1912A, a State shall develop, implement and submit, as part of the application required by section 1916(a), an approved statewide Drug Treatment Plan, prepared according to regulations promulgated by the Secretary, that shall contain—

"(1) a single, designated State agency for formulating and implementing the Statewide Drug Treatment Plan;

"(2) a description of the mechanism that shall be used to assess the needs for drug treatment in localities throughout the State including the presentation of relevant data;

"(3) a description of a Statewide plan that shall be implemented to expand treatment capacity and overcome obstacles that restrict the expansion of treatment capacity (such as zoning ordinances), or an explanation of why such a plan is unnecessary;

"(4) a description of performance-based criteria that shall be used to assist in the allocating of funds to drug treatment facilities receiving assistance under this subpart;

"(5) a description of the drug-free patient and workplace programs, that must include some form of drug testing, to be utilized in drug treatment facilities and programs;

"(6) a description of the mechanism that shall be used to make funding allocations under this subpart;

"(7) a description of the actions that shall be taken to improve the referral of drug users to treatment facilities that offer the most appropriate treatment modality;

"(8) a description of the program of training that shall be implemented for employees of treatment facilities receiving Federal funds, designed to permit such employees to stay abreast of the latest and most effective treatment techniques;

"(9) a description of the plan that shall be implemented to coordinate drug treatment facilities with other social, health, correctional and vocational services in order to assist or properly refer those patients in need of such additional services; and

"(10) a description of the plan that will be implemented to expand and improve efforts to contact and treat expectant women who use drugs and to provide appropriate follow-up care to their affected newborns.

"(b) SUBMISSION OF PLAN.—The plan required by subsection (a) shall be submitted to the Secretary annually for review and approval. The Secretary shall have the authority to review and approve or disapprove such State plans, and to propose changes to such plans.

"(c) SUBMISSION OF PROGRESS REPORTS.—Each State shall submit reports, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary may, from time to time, require, and shall comply with such additional provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to verify the accuracy of such reports and not overly burdensome on the State.

"(d) WAIVER OF PLAN REQUIREMENT.—At the discretion of the Secretary, the Secretary may waive any or all of the requirements of this section on the written request of a State, except that such waiver shall not be granted unless the State implements an alternative treatment plan that fulfills the objectives of this section.

"(e) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'drug abuse portion' means the amount of a State's allotment under section 1912A that is required by this subpart, or by any other provision of law, to be used for programs or activities relating to drug abuse.".

(b)(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall promulgate regulations necessary to carry out section 1916B of the Public Health Service Act (as added by subsection (a)) not later than 6 months following the date of enactment of this section.

(2)(A) Sections 1916B(a)(4) and (a)(5) of such Act (as added by subsection (a)) shall become effective on October 1, of the second fiscal year beginning after the date that final regulations under paragraph (1) are published in the Federal Register.

(B) The remaining provision of such section 1916B shall become effective beginning on October 1, of the first fiscal year beginning after the date final regulations under paragraph (1) are published in the Federal Register.

AMENDMENT NO. 877

At the appropriate place insert:

SEC. . WAIVER AUTHORITY FOR INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS.

(a) Funds appropriated to carry out the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, or the Arms Export Control Act may be made available for any narcotic's related activities in Colombia, Bolivia and Peru to carry out any provision of such Acts notwithstanding the provisions of:

(1) Section 620(q) or section 660 of the Foreign Assistance Act; or

(2) Section 518 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Appropriations Act, 1989, or any other provision that similarly restricts the furnishing of assistance to countries in default on payment to the United States of principal or interest on any loan.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, the first amendment will put accountability into treatment delivery by requiring each State to submit plans to the Secretary of Health and Human Services before ADAMHA block grant funds are released to the States.

The plans must address improved coordination between local treatment facilities to improve the referral process, as well as to improve coordination between treatment providers and social, health and employment agencies.

This amendment will, for the first time, require a comprehensive collection of data on what types of treatment systems are being employed, and what success rates the various types of systems are achieving. Since we are dramatically increasing funds for treatment, common sense dictates that we hold treatment providers accountable to standards that will be promulgated by the public health service.

The second amendment allows assistance to be provided to countries which have defaulted on loans, and allows for training of anti-drug police and military in the andean countries.

These amendments are essential components to the President's strategy, and I know of no amendments or objections to either.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, the Senator from Kansas is absolutely correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the amendments have been presented and are agreed to.

Amendments numbered 876 and 877 were agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 878

(Purpose: To provide for substance abuse prevention and treatment programs)

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of the majority leader, Mr. MITCHELL, and the minority leader, Mr. DOLE, and myself and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], for Mr. MITCHELL, (for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. BIDEN, and Mr. SIMPSON), proposes an amendment numbered 878.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new sections:

SEC. . Of amounts made available under this Act, $462,584,000 shall be used for the block grant program under part B of title XIX of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x et seq.) to make grants to carry out substance abuse programs, except that such amount shall not be used to calculate amounts to be used for programs and activities relating to substance abuse as required by section 1916(c)(7)(B) of such Act.

SEC. . Section 101 of the Abandoned Infants Assistance Act of 1988 (42 U.S.C. 670 note) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the semicolon;

(2) in paragraph (3), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before ", to reside";

(3) in paragraph (4), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the semicolon;

(4) in paragraph (5), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the semicolon;

(5) in paragraph (6), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the semicolon; and

(6) in paragraph (7), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the period.

SEC. . Section 1912A of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-1a) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(4)(B)(i)—

(A) by striking out "0.4" in subclause (I), and inserting in lieu thereof "0.2"; and

(6) by striking out "indicated by the most recent data collected by the Bureau of the Census" in subclause (II), and inserting in lieu thereof "determined by multiplying the percentage of the State's population that resides in urbanized areas of the State (as indicated by the most recent dicennial census compiled by the Bureau of the Census) by the most recent estimate of the total population of the State";

(2) in subsection (a)(4)(B)(ii)(I), by striking out "0.2" and inserting in lieu thereof "0.266";

(3) in subsection (a)(4)(B)(iii) (I), by striking out "0.2" and inserting in lieu thereof "0.266";

(4) in subsection (a)(4)(B)(iv)(I), by striking out "0.2" and inserting in lieu thereof "0.267";

(5) in subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) In fiscal year 1989, each State shall receive a minimum allotment under this subpart of the lesser of—

"(A) $8,000,000; and

"(B) an amount equal to 105 percent of the sum of—

"(i) the amount the State received under section 1913 for fiscal year 1988 (as such section was in effect for such fiscal year); and

"(ii) the amount the State received under part C for fiscal year 1988.

"(2) In subsequent fiscal years, each State shall receive a minimum allotment under this subpart that is equal to the amount that such State received in fiscal year 1989 under paragraph (1) for the minimum amount that such State was entitled to under such paragraph) plus an amount equal to such minimum multiplied by the percentage increase in the amount appropriated under section 1911(a) in such subsequent fiscal year above the amount appropriated for the immediately preceding fiscal year."; and

(6) in subsection (f), to read as follows:

"(f) For purposes of subsection (e), the applicable amount for each fiscal year is $330,000,000.".

SEC. . (a) Section 5111(a) of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 (20 U.S.C. 3171 et seq.) is amended by striking "$350,000,000" and inserting "$375,000,000".

(b) Section 5122 of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (a) and (b) as subsections (b) and (c), respectively;

(2) by inserting the following new subsection (a) after the section designation:

"(a) EMERGENCY GRANTS TO SCHOOLS IN URBAN AND RURAL AREAS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—From the amount available to carry out this section pursuant to section 5121(a), 33.3 percent of such amount shall be used by the chief executive officer in consultation with the State educational agency or the chief State school officer of a State, to make contracts with, and emergency grants to, local educational agencies serving urban and rural communities with severe drug problems.

"(2) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) INITIAL GRANTS.—In awarding grants under this subsection the chief executive shall first award grants to local educational agencies serving the largest city in the State to develop and implement comprehensive approaches to eliminating the serious drug problem that affects schools and students within the boundries of the local educational agency. Such grant shall be of sufficient size, scope, and quality to be of value and effective.

"(B) LOCAL AGENCIES.—After satisfying the requirements of subparagraph (A), the chief executive officer of a State receiving a grant under this section shall make grants to urban and rural local educational agencies with severe drug problems as determined by the incidence of drug abuse in relation to the size of the school age population. Such grants shall be of sufficient size, scope, and quality to be of value and effective. Such grants to the local educational agency shall be used for the development and implementation of comprehensive approaches to eliminating the serious drug problems that affects schools and students within the boundaries of the local educational agency.

"(3) WAIVER.—The Secretary may waive the provisions of this subsection for States in which there is no concentration of drug problems."; and

(3) in subsection (b) (as amended in paragraph (1)) by striking out "IN GENERAL.—Not" and inserting in lieu thereof "REMAINDER.—From the remainder available to carry out this section, not".

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, these are basically technical amendments that have been agreed to by all parties. I yield back the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 878) was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. Madam President, I wonder if the Senator from Iowa, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education, and my good friend from Pennsylvania, the ranking member of that subcommittee, would engage in a discussion with regard to the leadership and its funding provisions for the treatment of substance abusing pregnant and postpartum women and their infants.

Mr. HARKIN. Yes, I would be happy to accommodate my colleague.

Mr. SPECTER. Yes, of course.

Mr. WILSON. I thank my good friends.

From my understanding of the leadership drug amendment before us, $45 million will be provided for the Demonstration Grant Program administered by the Office of Substance Abuse Prevention, or as it is more commonly known, OSAP, at the Department of Health and Human Services. Of this additional amount of funding, OSAP must allocate a minimum of $25 million to provide grant assistance for the treatment, including residential treatment, of pregnant and postpartum women and their infants. Is that the Senators' understanding as well?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes, that is correct. As the Senator knows, the subcommittee shares your concern for these women and their infants. I believe I can speak on behalf of the subcommittee when I say that we believe the additional funds provided in the leadership amendment, supplemented by the initial subcommittee recommendation, represents an important first step toward addressing the needs of this population.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to my colleague that I agree that additional funding for the treatment of substance abusing pregnant and postpartum women and their infants is essential.

As the Senator knows, in the present fiscal year, OSAP received 138 applications for funding to treat pregnant and postpartum women and their infants, 72 of which were deemed worthy of Federal support. However, because of OSAP's funding priorities, only 18 grants were awarded.

OSAP's present effort is wholly inadequate when compared to the cost both in terms of human suffering and tax dollars which will be required to care for these mothers and their infants, 1,000 of whom are born each day.

For example, I am told that if we were to place the estimated 400,000 drug-addicted mothers and their drug-exposed infants in residential treatment today, the cost of getting them drug free will exceed $10 billion.

Mr. WILSON. In view of this tremendous need for resources, I would ask the chairman and ranking member whether it is the expectation of the subcommittee that OSAP should provide no less than $15 million of the original $57.8 million committee recommendation for the OSAP demonstration grant program be utilized for treatment for substance abusing pregnant and postpartum women and their infants?

Mr. SPECTER. Yes, I believe the chairman and I would agree with the Senator from California. Anyone who has witnessed the pain and suffering of these infants and their drug-addicted mothers would agree that they are a priority in our battle to fight the drug scourge.

Mr. HARKIN. I associate myself with the remarks of my good friend from Pennsylvania. It is our expectation that this minimum level of $15 million, coupled with the $25 million provided under the leadership amendment, will ensure that no less than $40 million be spent assisting this vulnerable population.

Mr. WILSON. I thank my colleagues for engaging in a discussion of this matter of mutual concern. Let me close by indicating my interest in working with the subcommittee on this and related matters in the future.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I want to thank my colleagues for their commitment to this important issue. It is critical that we establish this program immediately to assist women and their children in need. I am hopeful that my colleagues will be able to provide the full $40 million as authorized by my amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Madam President, I just point out one of the amendments agreed to is what I think is a contribution in the ADAMHA grant program. There was an obvious urban bias that has been corrected to some extent. We appreciate that in rural areas. We have drug problems too. It is an important change from many States. I thank the managers as well as the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, and the ranking Republican, Senator HATFIELD, for approving the amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be recinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CHICAGO CUBS

Mr. DIXON. Madam President, I ask the distinguished manager and the distinguished miniority leader if I may have a valuable moment as though in morning business to extole the virtues of the great Chicago Cubs?

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I will not object on the condition that the Senator from Illinois not read what he has to say.

Mr. WILSON. I second the objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOLE. No. objections.

Mr. DIXON. Madam President, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Chicago Cubs for clinching the National League East Title last night with a 3 to 2 victory over the Montreal Expos. Under manager Don Zimmer, the Cubs were transformed from a 77-85 team last year to the champs in the National League East.

At the beginning of this season no one gave the Cubs a chance but their tough spirit and aggressive play turned many doubters into believers. Ryne Sandberg's score from first last night off of a single by Dwight Smith was indicative of the aggressive play that turned the Cubs into champions this season.

Its been a long time since 1984, the last time the Cubs won their division, and an even longer time since 1945, the last time the Cubs won the pennant. This year the Cubs have a true championship caliber team and this Senator expects to be attending a victory parade in Chicago at the end of October.

The Cardinals made a run at them toward the end, but make no mistake about it Madam President, this season belonged to the Cubs. I know everyone in Illinois will be rooting and much of America will be rooting for the Cubs as they go to the playoffs.

Holy Cow, Madam President, Harry Caray sums up this season the best when he says Cubs win! Cubs win! Cubs win!

Cry your eyes out, Madam President, I know you are still worried about the Orioles. [Laughter.]

I thank the manager. I yield back the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, I would like the RECORD to show that during the entire—how shall I describe it, I shall not describe it—that the entire time the Senator from Illinois had the floor that the Presiding Officer, the Senator from Maryland, the resident of Baltimore, one who was raised as they say in the shadows of the stadium, one who has been an Orioles fan for all of her short life, showed more restraint than I have ever seen her show as long as I have known her. I understand why the restraint was necessary because of the high office she now holds and the particular position within the Senate. But if I can speak for her only briefly to suggest that "He ain't seen nothing yet," Madam President.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is sorry to hear that, speaking as a Senator from Maryland.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1990

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Madam President, we are awaiting the appearance of the distinguished Senator from New Jersey, the manager of this appropriations bill, who will be proposing the amendment, a remaining amendment under the unanimous-consent agreement for the Senator from California at which time I think we will wrap this up. If he arrives quickly, maybe we will have final passage on this entire matter in the next 2, 3 or 10 minutes. I might say if there is anyone from Senator CRANSTON'S office here who is willing to entrust the amendment to the Senator from Delaware, I would be happy to move it forward in the interest of time. Otherwise, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONRAD). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would ask the chairman of our Subcommittee on Transportation of the Committee on Appropriations if he would be willing to respond to a brief question as a colloquy to the bill?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I certainly would accommodate the Senator from Oregon on that.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to say to the chairman of the committee first of all this is an outstanding piece of work he has brought to the floor and I fully support it. I am very proud to be a part of that activity of this Appropriations Committee in general.

There has been basically, and I will be right up front about it, a slip-up on a point that I was going to raise during the consideration of the bill in committee and then much to my dismay I found that I forgot to do that. So I merely wanted to say this is not the committee's responsibility. It is my full responsibility.

I would like to have added in that FAA priority list within the report to the bill on behalf of Congressman BEVILL of Alabama to have the Walker County Airport Authority to be considered for a $300,000 safety equipment for that airport.

We have this list within the report and I merely want to get this to the conference committee as a matter of conference and so I would like to ask the chairman if there is a possibility of accommodating this request as a part of the committee report?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. HATFIELD, has been very helpful to us in moving this legislation along, including the recently agreed-to drug amendment. We talked about this listing and we recommend that it be included in the priority listing, that it be treated like all others that have a request there and it be considered based on the value that it represents in terms of all of those communities asking for help, and I am happy to have that included in the list without any problems.

Mr. HATFIELD. I thank the Senator. He is very accommodating.

Thank you, Mr. President.

AMENDMENT NO. 880

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator CRANSTON to H.R. 3015, as discussed on page S11071 of the RECORD of September 14, 1989, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], for Mr. CRANSTON, proposes an amendment numbered 880.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert:

SEC. . SONOMA, MARIN, MENDOCINO, AND NAPA COUNTIES, CALIFORNIA.

Section 149(a)(41) of the Surface Transportation and Uniform Relocation Assistance Act of 1987 is amended—

(1) by striking "SONOMA AND MARIN COUNTIES, CALIFORNIA" and inserting "SONOMA, MARIN, MENDOCINO, AND NAPA COUNTIES, CALIFORNIA";

(2) in subparagraph (B) by striking "HEALDSBURG" and inserting "SAN RAFAEL TO WILLITS AND NOVATO TO SHELLVILLE"; and

(3) in subparagraph (B) by striking "Healdsburg, California." and inserting "Willits, California, and a highway project for the purpose of demonstrating the extent to which traffic congestion is relieved on a major east-west segment of a California State highway which connects Novato, California, and Shellville, California, by construction of high occupancy vehicles lanes along a right-of-way which is parallel to such major east-west segment.".

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise to offer a technical amendment to the appropriations bill before us.

The 1987 Surface Transportation and Uniform Relocation Assistance Act authorized $24 million for the acquisition of 52 miles of the Northern Pacific Railroad [NWP] right-of-way from San Rafael, CA, to Healdsburg, CA. The right-of-way runs parallel to Highway 101, the major artery north of the Golden Gate Bridge. Local governments along the corridor are on the verge of an agreement to purchase this right-of-way with the goal of constructing a high-occupancy vehicle [HOV] or bus lane to relieve congestion on Highway 101.

The owner of the NWP Railroad now wants to sell the entire railroad corridor, from San Rafael all the way to Willits to the north, which is an additional 50 miles.

This is a technical amendment that would allow the local governments to purchase the additional right-of-way. It does not call for any additional Federal funds whatsoever; it merely changes the termini so that the local governments can take advantage of the railroad's offer.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, this amendment does not involve spending, but provides that local governments in California may purchase a right-of-way in addition to the right-of-way specifically designated in section 149 of the Surface Transportation and Uniform Relocation Assistance Act of 1987. This amendment has been cleared by both sides of the authorizing committee, and has been agreed to by my ranking member, Senator D'AMATO. I know of no objection and urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment (No. 880) was agreed to.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that title IV and amendments related thereto be printed at the proper place in H.R. 3015, the transportation appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A LETTER OF INTENT FOR THE NEW DENVER AIRPORT

Mr. WIRTH. Again, I would like to commend the distinguished Senator from New Jersey for his leadership in getting the new Denver airport closer to ground breaking this fall. Although the other body did make the new Denver airport specially eligible for Airport Improvement Program [AIP] grants-in-aid funds, it overlooked including $102 million that had been requested by the administration for fiscal 1990 to begin acquisition of the Federal Aviation Administration's [FAA] airways installations for the facility. This was most disturbing since the Secretary of Transportation has been clear that the new airport could not open in 1993, as planned, if Congress did not provide funds in this budget to begin the procurement of the air traffic control tower and other facilities and equipment that must be designed for the new airport.

Mr. President, the recommendation by the Senator from New Jersey's subcommittee that the Senate restore $50 million of the President's budget request for FAA procurements at the new Denver airport site is most helpful. Also, his committee's action to increase the AIP funding level $150 million above the original administration budget request should make it easier for the Department of Transportation [DOT] and FAA to provide substantial assistance to the city and county of Denver for the new airport without reducing funds from other deserving capacity projects across the Nation.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I thank the distinguished Senator from Colorado for his kind remarks concerning the subcommittee's recommendations. The Nation needs new airport capacity at major hub locations. Denver would be the first major new airport to be constructed since Dallas-Fort Worth, which was more than 20 years ago. We support the Denver project and hope that it can begin without delay.

The committee also noted that the remaining facilities and equipment [F&E] funds requested by the administration for fiscal 1990, but not funded at this time, can be reprogrammed later in the fiscal year. The committee did not agree with the House's language since it would have allowed individual airlines to control the content and timing of the FAA's procurement schedule. The Senate report makes clear that Denver must consult with the airlines and other users concerning the financing of the new airport, but will prevent the cancellation of important capacity projects for reasons which are not based on the broader public interest. The committee report language requires the DOT Secretary to assure that these consultations with users have been undertaken before more F&E funds will be released.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the Chairman for his efforts to find a fair and equitable balance between proper consultation with airport users and allowing one or two major users to veto an important capacity project for the Nation.

If I may inquire further, has the committee worked out a procedure with the administration for approving letters of intent for financing multiyear airport capacity projects, such as for Denver?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Yes. The fiscal 1989 DOT appropriations bill contained language which is repeated in this year's bill, which requires that letters of intent which obligate more than $10 million for an airport capacity-enhancing project must be reviewed by the Senate Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee, its House counterpart and by the authorizing committees.

This is the process that could be used to provide multiyear assistance to Denver for its replacement airport, subject to available appropriations. This procedure should provide assurance to the financial markets that the Congress and the administration plan to provide substantial amounts of AIP funds for this project over a number of years from the aviation trust fund. Following the practice developed over the past year, the subcommittee would review the administration's proposed letter of intent for Denver.

Mr. WIRTH. I thank the Senator for his guidance and for his leadership on transportation funding matters.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee a question. Early this year he informed me that it would not be possible to fund an HOV project in the I-5 corridor of my State. This funding initiative was something I developed by bringing in the participation of my State transportation department and other interested congressional offices. Would the chairman respond as to why this request was denied?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, let me begin by saying that it had nothing to do with any votes in the subcommittee or committee meeting. But the Senator is correct that this particular project was not doable. Now let me explain why.

First, he needs to understand the overall setting. I received 450 funding requests from 78 Members that were close to $4 billion above the budget.

Second, as a result of all of these requests, and in an effort to reduce overall Federal spending, the allocation for this subcommittee provided pursuant to section 302(b) of the Budget Act did not allow for a number of different items. So funding was denied for all requests concerning HOV lanes. We, in fact, deleted a Virginia HOV project that the House had included and was basically identical to Washington State's HOV project.

Third, while every State wants to get every dollar it can for construction, here we are talking about funding for design and environmental assessment work. I understand that the State transportation department would have had to come back to the Federal Government for $250 million in additional construction money.

Fourth, as subcommittee chairman, I look at many factors when deciding priorities. In this instance, I noted that the Washington State Transportation Department chose to spend over $400 million—including $238 million in discretionary Interstate construction funding received in October 1985—in Federal dollars in 1989, while choosing not to spend any of it on design and environmental assessment work for I-5 HOV use. I would ask, why is that? It is difficult for me, with limited funds, to fund a project when the Senator's own State transportation department is not addressing HOV lanes as a priority in prior years.

Last, as my friend from Washington State knows I am not trying to starve Washington State. I did agree to provide $4 million for radar VTS equipment in Puget Sound. I also agreed to do a number of other projects which the Senator requested and urged me to do. In fact, if he goes back to the 1989 supplemental, I was able to help him with his antiapartheid amendment offered at that time.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, let me thank my friend for clarifying his position on this project. As the Senator mentioned, Washington State came out very well in his subcommittee. We not only obtained funds to protect the waters of Puget Sound from potential oil spill catastrophes, but we also obtained added funds for airports in Sea-Tac and Ephrata-Moses Lake and directions to study light rail in Clark County. Again, I thank my friend from New Jersey for his help and assistance.

HIGHWAY RIGHT-OF-WAY OPTIONS

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, State and local governments are facing increasingly limited highway corridor options because land costs are becoming prohibitive and availability of corridor locations scarce. Delayed decisions exacerbate these problems and often contribute to environmental damage. We need to provide means for strategic planning which can moderate these adverse circumstances.

As the Secretary of Transportation develops the National Transportation Policy, I would encourage the Secretary to include an analysis of current corridor preservation and acquisition practices and research innovative methods for maintaining State and local authorities' right-of-way options.

In particular, I would suggest that the Secretary study the differences in the treatment of reimbursement for right-of-way acquisition between the Airport and Airway Improvement Act and the Federal-aid Highway Program with the goal of encouraging the early identification of corridors to protect environmental and other public values while most effectively meeting public transportation needs.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Florida that maintaining right-of-way options is essential for meeting future transportation needs. I would also encourage the Secretary of Transportation to expeditiously pursue this issue as part of the National Transportation Policy.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I want to congratulate Senator LAUTENBERG, the chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee for the masterful job that he has done with the Transportation appropriations bill. It has, I know, been very difficult to balance all of the considerable needs for transportation within the limited funds that are available. Transportation is not an issue which usually creates heated passion. But, it is crucial for the economic health of our Nation. And, I believe that Chairman LAUTENBERG has more than met the challenge within the parameters that he faced. I also want to thank the chairman for the considerable courtesy that he has shown to me and to my State of Iowa. I am especially thankful for his inclusion of $7 million for the Local Rail Service Assistance Program. The program was not funded in fiscal year 1989. I am hopeful that we will soon see the enactment of both this provision and a reauthorization bill, both being needed for this important program to meet our rail improvement needs.

I also want to congratulate Senator D'AMATO for his very real contribution toward the development of the bill.

THE SOUTHEAST LIGHT, BLOCK ISLAND, RI 1989

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to discuss an historic property owned by the Coast Guard that is very important to the people of my home State: the Southeast Light.

Built in 1873, the Southeast Light is one of the most recognizable symbols of Rhode Island, and its image is often used to represent the State. The Light is being threatened by the Erosion of the bluff on which it stands, however, and needs to be moved back from the cliff edge.

In the last Congress and again this year, I introduced legislation to transfer ownership of the Southeast Light from the Coast Guard to the Block Island Southeast Lighthouse Foundation, and to provide for matching funds for the relocation of the Light.

I had seriously considered proposing an amendment to the transportation appropriations bill that would provide matching funds to relocate the light. After review of the bill, it became clear that such an amendment would not be appropriate. The resources available for the Department of Transportation are limited, and I certainly do not wish to take much-needed funds out of the already tight Coast Guard budget.

Instead, I hope to work with both Coast Guard and Transportation officials and my Senate colleagues to find an agreeable solution as soon as possible. I would prefer to have the authorizing legislation approved, and then work for the necessary funds. The measure is a priority of mine, and I intend to push hard for its passage and full funding.

In addition, although no earmarked funds may be available for the Southeast Light this year, I hope that the Secretary of Transportation will keep the Light in mind should there be extra discretionary funds.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, we will shortly be voting on the transportation bill and I will just take this opportunity to make a few comments before that action takes place.

I believe that this bill represents a good balanced funding approach for various and often competing modes of transportation.

I take the opportunity we have to thank my colleague, the distinguished ranking member of the subcommittee, Senator D'AMATO, for his support and advice. This bill was done in a full bipartisan spirit in which all members of the subcommittee and the full committee worked so that we could move this bill.

I also acknowledge and thank the committee staff who worked so hard to get us to this point: On the majority side the full committee staff director Jim English and the subcommittee staff Patrick McCann, Don Knowles, and Joyce Rose; on the other side of the aisle Keith Kennedy, minority staff director, and subcommittee staff Anne Miano and Dorothy Pastis.

In addition, I recognize and thank for their work Mitchell Ostrer and Jeff Morales of my personal staff and thank some people who were of tremendous help in relation to the smoking ban amendment.

There were a great number of volunteers, working through health groups and the flight attendants, who put in a lot of time to help in this effort. To all of them, I offer my thanks—in particular: Arnita Hannon of the American Lung Association; Cliff Douglas of the Coalition on Smoking or Health; and Juliette Lenoire and Jo Ellen of the Association of Flight Attendants. Their efforts were critical, and I thank them.

But their real reward is in the accomplishment. They can be proud of their work. Hopefully, they will be breathing easier, and I will be counting on their continued efforts as we head in conference with the House.

I understand that the yeas and nays have been ordered. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I urge passage of the transportation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The vote was announced—yeas 99, nays 0, as follows:

So the bill, H.R. 3015, as amended, was passed.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. CRANSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate and insist on its amendments.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. SASSER, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. HATFIELD, conferees on the part of the Senate.

Conferees for the sole purpose of the drug amendment title IV: Senators BYRD, INOUYE, and HATFIELD, for all items in title IV, and the chairman and ranking minority member of each subcommittee for items falling within the jurisdiction of each subcommittee, and are as follows:

From the Subcommittee on Agriculture and Related Agencies, Senators BURDICK and COCHRAN; from the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary, Senators HOLLINGS and RUDMAN; from the Subcommittee on Defense, Senators INOUYE and STEVENS; from the Subcommittee on the District of Columbia, Senators ADAMS and GRAMM; from the subcommittee on Energy and Water Development, Senators JOHNSTON and HATFIELD; from the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, Senators LEAHY and KASTEN; from the Subcommittee on VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies, Senators MIKULSKI AND GARN; from the Subcommittee on Interior, Senators BYRD and MCCLURE; from the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Senators HARKIN and SPECTER; from the Subcommittee on Legislative Branch, Senators REID and NICKLES; from the Subcommittee on Military Construction, Senators SASSER and GRASSLEY; from the Subcommittee on Transportation, Senators LAUTENBERG and D'AMATO; and from the Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government, Senators DECONCINI and DOMENICI.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 74

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of a concurrent resolution authorizing congressional assistance to the new Polish Senate to be offered by Senator DOMENICI and others; that there be 15 minutes for debate to be equally divided between the majority and minority leaders; that there be an additional 15 minutes under the control of Senator HELMS; that no amendments or motions be in order with respect to the concurrent resolution; and that immediately upon the expiration or yielding back of time, the Senate, without any intervening action, proceed to vote on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEVENS. Reserving the right to object, does the leader contemplate a rollcall vote on this?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, I do not and I am about to announce that, immediately upon the acceptance of this agreement.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators, there will be no further rollcall votes this evening. We will proceed to the disposition of this now pending concurrent resolution with adoption of that by voice vote. Then I understand from the distinguished manager of the DOD bill that there are three amendments that will be offered and accepted and that will complete action for this evening.

It is my intention to have the Senate return to session at 9:30 tomorrow and be back on the defense appropriations bill at 10. The pending business then will be the SDI amendment.

We attempted this evening to gain an agreement limiting the amendments to the DOD appropriations bill but have been unable to do so. It is my hope and my intention to try again tomorrow morning to get a list of amendments on both sides so that we could at least identify the remaining amendments to the bill and limit consideration to those amendments during the day tomorrow.

I note the presence of the distinguished Republican leader on the floor.

Mr. DOLE. We will be happy to cooperate with the majority leader and see if we can put together a list.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague. I repeat for the benefit of Senators, there will be no further rollcall votes this evening. There will be rollcall votes beginning tomorrow morning, and likely to be several votes during the day and into the evening tomorrow. Senators should be prepared for a late evening tomorrow.

If I might ask the distinguished Republican leader, who is present on the floor—I spoke to him briefly earlier today—it is my hope when we complete action on the DOD appropriations bill we could then go to the remaining appropriations bill, which is the State-Commerce-Justice bill which I understand the committee reported out today.

Mr. DOLE. Will the committee report be filed today on this?

Mr. MITCHELL. I believe it will be filed today if it has not already been filed.

Mr. DOLE. We are checking. We may have one problem that I would like to discuss privately with the majority leader. It also occurs to me the Senator from Pennsylvania wants a rollcall vote on his amendment. He could discuss that tonight. We could have that vote first thing in the morning, which would get people going.

Mr. SPECTER. That would be entirely agreeable.

Mr. MITCHELL. That would be excellent.

Mr. DOLE. It would keep them moving in the morning.

Mr. MITCHELL. Indeed, if the managers could work out an agreement that would have the debate this evening and the vote at 10 tomorrow, that way we could get started. So Senators should be on notice, therefore, that there may be a rollcall vote at 10 a.m. tomorrow.

Mr. INOUYE. There will be.

Mr. MITCHELL. The distinguished manager just advises me there will be a vote at 10 a.m. tomorrow on a Specter amendment that will be debated this evening.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator for his courtesy and all Senators. We will return with a vote at 10 tomorrow.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GIFT OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, is the concurrent resolution regarding Poland the subject matter before the Senate at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution in behalf of myself, the majority and minority leaders, Senators KASTEN, SIMON, CRANSTON, and others and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 74) authorizing the "Gift of Democracy" from the United States Congress to the new Senate and Sejm in Poland.

The Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Senator from New Mexico is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, last weekend I was very privileged to attend a meeting in Warsaw, Poland. It was an international conference, sponsored by the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs under the aegis of the National Endowment for Democracy, with the concurrence of the Republican Institute. In attendance from the United States with me were some distinguished parliamentarians, as they call them in Poland: former Vice President Mondale, former Senate majority leader Howard Baker, former Senator Tom Eagleton, and former Member of the Congress from the State of Oklahoma, Jim Jones. They have joined me in a letter to the leadership of the Congress with reference to the issue that is before the Senate now. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 26, 1989.

Hon. GEORGE J. MITCHELL,
The Majority Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. LEADER: We have just returned from an unprecedented international conference in Poland. Together with veterans of eight West European parliaments, we met for three days with 50 leaders of the new Sejm and Senate to discuss the role and conduct of national legislatures.

The conference was a dramatic and deeply moving experience for each one of us, and we came back convinced that the United States Congress has a unique opportunity to help the newly democratic Polish Parliament.

Among the many challenges facing Poland over the coming months is the utter lack of resources available to its new Parliament. These new citizen-legislators—many of them farmers or workers whose only experience with government is a jail term for supporting freedom—lack equipment, training, and staff.

In a country where two or three jobs are needed to support a family, most of our Polish colleagues are stretched to their physical limits working full time on a salary of $12 per month. We came to realize that the lack of basic support items, such as copying machines, typewriters, simple computers, and a library, unnecessarily complicates their task of rebuilding Poland.

The United States Congress can provide a unique first gift of democracy to the new Polish Parliament by taking the lead in equipping it with the appropriate tools and training.

We recommend that the Leadership dispatch a small team of experts to Poland to assess the immediate equipment and training needs of the Sejm and Senate, then report back to the Senate and House of Representatives within 30 days. We propose that the findings of the team of experts be used by us and other congressional veterans to raise the necessary private or public funds to help Poland develop an effective legislature.

Each of us stands ready to discuss this proposal with you at your convenience.

Sincerely,

PETE V. DOMENICI.
JAMES R. JONES.
WALTER F. MONDALE.
HOWARD BAKER, JR.

THOMAS F. EAGLETON.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, seldom does one have an opportunity as we five had during this 3-day meeting. Having been born and raised and lived under a democracy and an economic system that produces substantial goods and wealth, that has as its underpinning a competitive, free economic system, it is quite exciting to go to a country like Poland and see the birth of a new democracy. It was my privilege to experience that last weekend.

This was not a meeting to discuss macroeconomics or foreign aid. It was a meeting with parliamentarians, members of their House and Senate, few, if any, having had any experience in the art of politics or in serving in a legislative body during their lifetime.

Many of those we met and talked with and ate with there have been in jail for long times during the last decade. Some have been recently in jail. Many come from tractor companies and small farms, businesses of one type or another that they have worked in as common laborers or managers for most of their lives. The average pay is between $10 and $12 a month when they are on the job, and I gather they will receive that amount as they struggle with this new democracy and new Parliament.

Mr. President, we thought we were going to go there and be beseiged with questions about big issues, but what we found was a fantastic spirit and a hope that they could create a system as free as America's. Their hope was that they could run a Parliament, with committees, with order, and with the rule of law. It was, indeed, refreshing to see people of such genuine humility bent on making a new system work, who wanted so much to learn.

In the final analysis, what we found was that the Polish legislators did not have the basic equipment to run a Parliament. They have no computers. They have no real library system. They have no means or method of reproducing documents. They have few, if any, typewriters.

They are not even sure what the laws of Poland are today. One got up and said he spent a whole day and a whole night looking at the laws of Parliament to see what the law was on a particular subject.

We have in our country the expertise and equipment to give them a real start in this venture in democracy.

So today, what we are asking the Senate and House to do, when they pass this resolution, is to give what we call a "gift of democracy" from the U.S. Congress to this new Parliament.

Essentially, we are asking that our professional experts be dispatched to make an inventory of what they have and what they do not have. They will tell us what basic equipment and basic expertise is needed to help these truly humble people do their job better. Vice President Mondale, Senator Howard Baker, and the rest of us recommend this as the best way to help in their quest for freedom and in their quest to make a Parliament that has a chance of working.

So what we are providing in this concurrent resolution is that the joint leadership of the United Sates House and Senate forthwith assign the requisite experts to go to Poland, inventory their needs, and report back to our leadership forthwith. Then we will find ways and means, both through gifts from our private sector and, if need be, from the public sector, of the basic equipment that the Polish Parliament needs in order to do its job. The members would love this.

Mr. CRANSTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased to yield to my good friend from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise to applaud the Senator from New Mexico for his efforts. And I am delighted to be a cosponsor with him. I, too, visited Poland at the very moment of transition in August from a Communist-led nation to one where others are now running significant parts of the Government. It is very important that they succeed in their experiment with democracy. They need help. As the Senator from New Mexico indicated many have had no experience. Many of them have spent a lot of years in jail, and, incidentally, they were in jail for fighting for democracy. Now they have democracy in their hands.

Their success is important not only to Poland but to central Europe and, indeed, to the entire world. Communism failed there. If democracy now in turn fails, Lord knows what could come next. The Communists might get a second chance. It might be a Fascist military dictatorship or something else.

It is vitally important that we do all we can to help the people of Poland to make their democracy work. They need technical advice. They need equipment.

I am delighted to join the Senator in this effort, and will do all I can with him and others to ensure that this prospect of help reaches them, and is fulfilled to the total degree necessary to aid them in their new democracy.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the gentleman for his support. Let me close my remarks, Mr. President, by saying there were present in Warsaw other parliamentarians from France, Italy, Germany, and others of our Western allies. They, too, were genuinely impressed by the experience. Our resolution would ask that our team of experts coordinate with some of them. They might be part of the gift of democracy to this budding Parliament of equipment, staff and expertise to get them started on the right foot.

Frequently, it is not the big things that count. Sometimes it is the small gifts that carry with them not only great symbolism, but a real spirit, a kinship, and that is what motivates this first gift of democracy from a premier Parliament in the world, the U.S. Congress, to an older Parliament which is changing into a brandnew model for others. Poland may be on the verge of causing a tidal wave of new democracies, if, indeed, they succeed.

Having said this, I reserve the balance of my time.

I ask unanimous consent that Senator KENNEDY be made a cosponsor, and also Senator INOUYE.

I yield to my good friend from Illinois who has been most encouraging to me on this issue and desires to address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, my colleagues, first of all, I want to join in commending Senator DOMENICI. The only flaw I know Senator DOMENICI has is he happens to belong to the wrong political party. But let me tell you, as one Member of the U.S. Senate, I am very proud to serve with him. He has led in this matter, he has led on the matter of the homeless, he led on the matter of mental health. He has made contributions to this Nation, and I am very proud to be his colleague.

When he describes the spirit in Poland as a fantastic spirit, he is absolutely correct. I spent 6 days there visiting with everyone, from the new Prime Minister to the President, to Lech Walesa, to a great variety of people to get some feel for what they are going through and why this resolution is important. Imagine the U.S. Senate with no Xerox machines, none of the basic equipment, and all freshmen Members. That is what we are talking about; no tradition to go by, just starting out brand spanking new.

The Presiding Officer from Nebraska right now probably thinks having all freshmen Members would be a very desirable goal. But there are some limitations to that, I want to assure the Senator from Nebraska.

I think we ought to do everything we can, first of all, just as a gesture, to say, we are interested, we want to help. Senator DOMENICI is not suggesting this is the answer. This is part of the answer.

I am pleased to say that I have legislation that will be coming to the Senate very shortly after we get through the appropriations that I am negotiating with the administration on. I hope we can get bipartisan support behind that administration for a substantial aid program to Poland.

But in the meantime, this is one of these things that is meaningful, that is helpful.

I commend my colleague. I commend the people of Poland who have made this dramatic gesture, who have for the first time in history moved from a Communist dictatorship to an opposition party being in control of the government.

It is an amazing thing. I would add—and I do not know whether my colleague from New Mexico would concur with me on this or not—as I met with various leaders I thought there probably has been no new government formed where the leadership has so much potential, has gone through so much of a struggle, since our own country was formed more than 200 years ago. I was just very, very much impressed.

Again, I commend my colleague. I hope we will adopt this without any objection whatsoever.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute left.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank my friend from Illinois for everything he said except for his lament about the party that I belong to. I have no comment with reference to that as I think about my friendship and kinship and appreciation for all his work.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President I want to commend Senator DOMENICI for this very worthwhile initiative.

Both Senator DOMENICI and I have recently visited Poland, and I think we came away with much the same impressions. When you are there, you get the feeling that you are witnessing something akin to what happended in the United States 200 years ago: A whole bunch of very talented and committed people—but very inexperienced people—knowing where they want to go; but still not very sure how to get there.

The upper Chamber of the Parliament, the Senate, didn't even exist until this year. Only three members of the Solidarity parliamentary bloc have had any legislative experience. Only six of the Communist members have served in parliament before.

Institutionally, and individually—they are starting frcm scratch.

They needed help—and it happens to be the kind of help we can provide. Suggestions on organizing parliament, and its committees and staff; advice on parliamentary procedures and techniques; an evaluation of resource needs, both human and technological; and a host of other matters that we take for granted—because they are part of our everyday life; but which are all new and somewhat bewildering to people embarking on the first steps of a road to democracy.

I should also add: This proposal by Senator DOMENICI has the additional merit of costing very little.

There is kind of a bidding contest going on these days—who can do the most for Poland; I am not sure every idea is entirely well thought out.

But this one is. It is right on the mark. I am pleased to join Senator DOMENICI in urging adoption of this concurrent resolution.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me close by saying I can express the hope, the enthusiasm, and the heartfelt concern that those of us who visited with these parliamentarians came away with. We did see the beginnings of a new democracy with a new economic system. To succeed, it must bring new hope and new opportunity to millions of people in Poland.

If it works, I submit, the experiment could spread like wildfire among those countries that have been part of the Eastern bloc.

Clearly the ideals that we have cherished in America—individual opportunities, freedom, the ballot box as a part of governance, and some checks and balances in government by the representatives of the people—may indeed flourish in a land where a few years ago we did not conceive that such could happen. They want to make it work.

Tonight we begin a very, very small step in helping Poland. I hope they know it is intended as a true gift. I hope we will let them know that it is a gift from the heart, hoping that it will be a small part of their achievement of freedom and democracy, and a new economic system.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

The Senator from North Carolina has 15 minutes reserved. The majority leader has 2 minutes 46 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator FORD be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be open for the rest of the evening for any other cosponsors that desire to be added.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor to the distinguished Senator HELMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. May I inquire of the Chair, is there an allotted amount of time for me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is. The Senator has 15 minutes.

REPRIVATIZING POLAND

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, this week we have had visiting the Senate the Deputy Prime Minister for Financial Affairs, Mr. Leszek Salcerowicz. The Deputy Prime Minister was proposed for his post by Solidarity and is one of the first representatives of the new government to visit the United States. As Deputy Prime Minister for Financial Affairs, he is assisting the Polish people in an unenviable task—namely, the social and financial reconstruction of Poland.

Mr. President, the spirit of the American people is with the Polish people as they struggle forward in their effort to reestablish freedom in Poland, and to root out the elements of Communist domination that have caused such sorrow and hardship in that country since the close of World War II.

The distinguished Senator from Maryland spoke eloquently of this yearning the other night when we were debating my amendment which was intended to keep United States financial assistance in the hands of loyal Poles and away from the Communist masters who have dominated them so long. I will remember for a long time when Senator MIKULSKI stated:

> Poles everywhere, whether we live here, fully American citizens, or our cousins abroad, know that the heart and soul of Poland lie with democracy, lie with free enterprise, and lie with the West. They want to be free. They have just had a nonviolent coup. They had been forced to be Communists for almost 40 years because of the Yalta-Potsdam policy.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, I believe that the distinguished Senator misunderstood my amendment. She somehow thought, because I was proposing that no United States assistance go to Communist-dominated enterprises in Poland, that I was working at cross-purposes with the desires of the Polish people.

Indeed, a number of Senators seemed to take up the same chorus. In rereading the debate, it strikes me that the questions they asked on the Senate floor were totally irrelevant, and had nothing to do with the purpose of my amendment. In fact, I defy anyone to read the RECORD and make heads or tails out of the arguments raised against my amendment. They were absolutely irrelevant and beside the point.

No, Mr. President, I was raising a question that will have to be faced by anyone who wants truly to help the Polish people.

It would be nice to think that the battle for control of Poland had been settled in the last election, and in the formation of a Solidarity government. But it is not quite that simple. There are 39 million people in Poland, but less than 2 million of the Polish United Workers Party, that is to say, the Communist Party of Poland. My judgment is that we must do everything possible to let the 37 million non-Communists run their own affairs.

It must be remembered that President Jaruzelski, the military dictator and party boss of Poland since the days of martial law, still holds the strongest position in the country. Although not a member of the government, he occupies a position that was created just for him by a new amendment to the Polish Constitution. I doubt that many Senators know about that.

Under the new article 32 of the Constitution, the President may dismiss the Parliament, dismiss the government, and countermand laws. He has already set up a Presidential office of over 400 Communist Party members who function under his authority like a White House staff. They work directly with local Communist Party leadership to implement President Jaruzelski's directives—thereby short-circuiting the parliamentary system. They have the power to inquire into any matter in the running of the country, and they can report back to the President on any matter that seems to be taking Poland away from a socialist future.

Moreover, the President has the right to appoint alternate ministers without portfolio to oversee the work of any of the Solidarity government ministers. The non-Government ministers have the authority to negate the actions of the government ministers. I am informed that he has already begun the appointment of such ministers.

Mr. President, we should not be surprised at this structure. It is a typically Communist pattern of party structure paralleling and controlling State structure. In any Communist state, the work of the government and its organs, even a Communist government, is overseen by the Communist Party through trusted commisars. So the same system has been adapted to the new Solidarity government. In short, there is nothing that Solidarity can do of its own volition except ask the West for money.

The problem is that no amount of funding can help an economy that is organized on Communist principles, that is to say, with ideological or political officials making decisions that ought to be made by the marketplace. The problem of investing in Poland is constrained by the reality that exists. We may not like that, but that is the way it is. That reality is as follows:

According to official Polish Yearbook statistics, in 1982, there were 56,700 socialized industrial enterprises in Poland and 177,300 nonsocialized industrial enterprises. However, the real thrust of the economy does not appear until you see that the socialized enterprises employ 4,776,000 persons and the nonsocialized enterprises employ only 63,000 persons. These figures were for 1982, but they are the latest the Library of Congress has.

What is clear is that the overwhelming majority of Poles are employed by a socialist system that is bankrupt, unproductive, and inefficient. It is also controlled by the Communist Party, either directly through the government, or by Communist Party directors, managers, and commisars. Solidarity does not have the power to dismiss the Communist bureaucracy that runs industry, and has no effective way to eliminate the Communist managers and commisars who are working under strict Communist Party discipline.

If members of the U.S. Senate allow our decisions to be made by the heart—that is, to see only the thin veneer of Solidarity members in the government who are desperately trying to cope with this losing system, then we are causing Solidarity to fall in its task to free the Polish people.

What does the United States need to do to help the Polish people? The answers are not hard to find. They will be difficult to implement, but we must use all the leverage of our economic assistance to bring them about.

And that is what the purpose of the amendment the other night was.

Let me offer a few suggestions.

First. We should use our leverage to urge that the political system in Poland be opened up to allow all political parties to operate freely. An open political system will result in an open financial system, making investment worth while. At the present time, only Solidarity's political arm has been allowed to operate freely. Other political parties, although legal, have been harassed by censorship, brutalized by goon squads, and starved of outside funds.

Second. The Polish currency must be made convertible, with a single exchange rate based on the fluctuation of international markets like any free currency. At the present time, exchange rates are set by ideological determinations with different rates for dollar countries and the ruble zone.

Third. Foreign trade must be based on freely negotiated prices only in convertible currencies. At the present time, exchange rates and prices are established so as to subsidize trade with the Soviet Union—a tremendous loss of exchange for Poland.

Fourth. The Polish Government must take steps to restore private property and guarantee that ownership will be guaranteed in perpetuity. There can be no investment without this security, unless American taxpayers provide the guarantee. This Senator cannot see why American taxpayers should provide OPIC guarantees without such assurances. It makes far more sense for the Polish Government to make this guarantee, since it will cost Poland nothing.

Fifth. Private enterprises must be given full and unimpeded access to credit and supplies, based on market feasibility and productivity considerations. The minuscule size of the private sector is one result of Communist Party policy for dividing available assets among socialist enterprises only.

Mr. President, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes and 45 seconds.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair. I shall complete in that time.

Sixth. The Polish Government must immediately reprivatize the retail trade and service sector. Socialist organization of distribution has completely collapsed due to inherent inefficiency at coping with what should be, clearly, a market mechanism. Reprivatization of retail trade could be accomplished quickly without enormous investment.

Seventh. There must be an end to subsidies to inefficient state industries. The Polish Government does not have the funds to continue the current collapsed industrial system.

Eighth. There must be no limitation to the size of private industries. For years, Poland limited private enterprises to 20 employees, a fact that I do not believe many Senators knew. Steps have been taken to lift this limitation, but there is little guarantee that there will be future nationalizations of successful enterprises.

Ninth. The banking and credit system must be reprivatized. No one in Poland has confidence in the state banks. It is reliably estimated that there is at least $2 billion in United States currency in Poland that remains outside of the economic system. If these funds were made available through a private banking system for new industrial investment, it would provide all the cash, and more, that Poland could absorb.

Tenth. Last, but not least, all state enterprises must be reprivatized. They must be turned into stock corporations, with the stock available for purchase to any person who has the funds. Of course, the only requirement should be that members of the Communist Party and its surrogates should be prohibited from ownership or control. Just as after World War II, West Germany took steps to root out Nazis, Poland must set up special barriers to control members of the Communist Party. The hard dollar currency that is already in Poland could be used by individuals to purchase stock and capitalize these institutions—with the new owners acting like new owners in any corporate takeover. They would no doubt shut down inefficient and outmoded properties, change the management completely, do market analysis both in Poland and internationally, and seek reliable credits abroad.

29-059 O-90-13 (Pt. 16)

Mr. President, it is for these reasons that we must help reform in Poland with our heads, not just our hearts. My amendment last week was a modest attempt to address the situation rationally, rather than emotionally. Indeed, it will require considerably more actions than I have already proposed. As the Senate considered a Polish aid program, Senators will need to address these issues. We cannot avoid them. We should not avoid them. If we really want to help Poland to become truly free, then we must do everything possible to restore freedom of economic activity in that brave country.

Mr. President, I yield back such time as I may have remaining, and I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back or has expired.

The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the concurrent resolution which must be voted on at this time.

The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 74) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. CON. RES. 74

Whereas Poland is undertaking the historic process of organizing its new Sejm and Senate, the first parliament in Poland where a majority of its members were democratically elected in more than half a century;

Whereas these new citizen-legislators, from many walks of life, are taking on the tremendous responsibility of forming the legislative branch of their government without the benefit of previous legislative experience;

Whereas these new legislators are united in their commitment to dramatically reform the social and economic structure of Poland;

Whereas these new legislators are dedicated to permanently establishing individual freedom and a renewed hope and confidence for the future of Poland;

Whereas the new legislators are faced with reviving the economy and creating the necessary government entities to facilitate an efficient means of governing the country;

Whereas among the many other challenges facing Polands Parliament over the coming months is the lack of equipment, research and legislative resources; and

Whereas the United States Congress has a well established system for operating a legislative body and an impressive research capability in the form of the Library of Congress and the Congressional Research Service: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That—

(1) This concurrent resolution may be cited as the "United States Congressional Gift of Democracy to Poland Resolution".

(2) That the Speaker of the House, the minority leader of the House and the majority and minority leaders of the Senate, and the Librarian of the Congress shall assign staff having expertise in software, office equipment, legislative research and parliamentary procedure and other lawmaking skills to travel to Poland. The congressional staff assigned to this mission shall assess the training and equipment needs of the Polish Sejm and Senate, and assist Poland in developing an effective Parliament. Not later than thirty days after completing the assessment, such staff shall submit a report to the Congress and the Librarian of Congress on its findings.

(3) Upon receipt of the report of the congressional staff, the leadership of Congress shall endeavor to identify and secure the ways and means to implement an appropriate United States congressional gift of democracy to Poland in the form of equipment and training for the new Senate and Sejm.

(4) The leadership is encouraged to coordinate this effort with private and public sector experts such as the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs and the National Republican Institute for International Affairs and with parliaments in Western Europe.

(5) Travel expenses incurred by the Senate and the House of Representatives to carry out subsections 2 and 3 shall be reimbursed out of the respective contingent funds of the two Houses of Congress in accordance with rules governing such funds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I thank the leadership for helping us expedite this concurrent resolution and for their agreement to help us with it and their support of it.

I yield the floor.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS, 1990

Mr. STEVENS. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3072) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT BEGINNING ON PAGE 36, LINE 22

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the committee amendment on page 36, line 22.

The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we temporarily set aside the pending amendment for the purpose of considering an amendment by Senator PRYOR and Senator GRASSLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 881

(Purpose: To limit the use of appropriated funds for the procurement of the Airborne Self-Protection Jammer (ASPJ)

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senators PRYOR and GRASSLEY and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], for Mr. PRYOR (for himself and Mr. GRASSLEY) proposes an amendment numbered 881.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 108, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following:

SEC. . (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), none of the funds appropriated by this Act may be obligated for the procurement of the Airborne Self-Protection Jammer (ASPJ) until further operational testing of the ASPJ is conducted and completed and the reports required by subsection (b) have been submitted in accordance with that subsection.

(2) Paragraph (1) does not limit the obligation of funds for the production, maintenance, and operation of 18 Airborne Self-Protection Jammer (ASPJ) production verification units for the purpose of conducting further operational and developmental testing.

(b) Upon the completion of the operational testing conducted in connection with the Airborne Self-Protection Jammer (ASPJ) program, the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation and the Comptroller General of the United States shall each submit to the Committees on Appropriations and Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the conduct and results of such testing.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, this amendment would restrict the obligational funds in this act for the procurement of airborne self-protection jammers for the Navy and Air Force aircraft, and this amendment has been cleared by both sides and we believe it should be adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the Senator is correct. It is consistent with the Senate report language, and it has been cleared on this side of the aisle.

ASPJ—STRONGER RESTRICTION NEEDED

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, the Pentagon is trying to rush a seriously flawed $4.8 billion weapon system into production before Congress can take action. The Pentagon's action is in direct contravention of Senate Appropriations Committee report language. My amendment will put this troubled $0.8 billion program on hold until its bugs can be worked out.

Mr. President, the weapon system is a radar jammer called the Airborne

Self-Protection Jammer or [ASPJ]. It is supposed to be used by F-16, F-18, F-14, and AV-8B jet fighters to deceive and jam enemy radar.

Imagine, for a moment, a young American pilot flying his F-16 into battle. He receives an enemy radar warning and turns on his ASPJ radar jammer. Confident that the jammer is cloaking his location, he turns to other aspects of his mission.

Mr. President, if that pilot were using the ASPJ recently tested by the Navy, he would stand a very good chance of being spotted and blown out of the sky. He would perish unaware that the jammer had flunked its tests—unaware that Pentagon politics and contractor greed had forced it into production before it has proved itself.

That, however, is exactly what is happening to the latest Pentagon turkey. Despite failed test results, in August, the Navy and Air Force moved to begin limited production of the ASPJ.

The Appropriations Committee wisely included report language in the bill before the Senate directed that production not begin until tests are conducted.

Despite this committee direction, the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition has indicated that the Pentagon plans to go ahead with ASPJ production contracts.

Mr. President, this disregard for congressional direction is a direct challenge to Congress' budget authority and the integrity of the Appropriations Committee.

These are actions of desparation and cover up, not reasoned and logical weapons procurement.

Clearly, the Appropriations Committee report restriction is not being taken seriously by the Pentagon. Accordingly, my amendment puts the committee's restriction into the law and adds oversight of tests by the Operational Test Office and the GAO.

I would like to mention three other aspects of the Pentagon's apparent effort to conceal problems with the $4.8 billion ASPJ program from Congress.

One, I challenge anyone to find an ASPJ line item in the basic budget documents presented to Congress. The estimated $200 million production costs in this year's bill are hidden in the spending accounts for several jet fighters.

Two, certain offices at the Pentagon have resisted or refused giving me test results on this program. Around here that usually means the program is in trouble.

And finally, some contractors and Pentagon officials are telling people in Congress that further tests on the ASPJ cannot occur unless another $200 million or so are appropriated.

This is false, according to testing officials in both the operational test office and the developmental test office. Only 14 ASPJ units are needed to complete further testing and these units have been already funded and are under production.

My amendment permits production of all of these ASPJ units.

Now, Mr. President, let me say a few words on the results of the last tests run on ASPJ.

According to unclassified sections of the Navy operational test report:

The ASPJ failed on effectiveness standards, which is its ability to perform its required jamming mission; the ASPJ was roughly 50 percent below reliability standards, which measures its likelihood of failure; the ASPJ failed minimum maintainability standards; and the probability of correct fault detection in the ASPJ was 30 percent, far below the 90-percent requirement.

At the end of the report, the Navy testers recommended against limited fleet introduction until corrections are made and verified through further testing.

Mr. President, further testing is not scheduled for another year. By then well over 100 of these $2 million per copy systems will be built. We all know the power game around here; after 1 year of production, after we dump another quarter billion dollars into the jobs and factories associated with the production, it will be almost impossible to stop.

The Appropriations Committee and I are not the only people concerned about the ASPJ. I am told that the Defense Department inspector general has self-initiated an audit of ASPJ and last week the General Accounting Office began its review of the program.

Mr. President, I am not opposed to the ASPJ radar jammer. Our pilots need this protection. I am saying, however, and the Appropriations Committee is saying, that before we begin a $4 billion production run, we should make sure the product works.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

SON-OF-DIVAD

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I would like to address the issue raised by my good friend from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR].

This is a question of whether or not we are ready to produce the airborne self-protection jammer, not whether or not we support it.

The ASPJ is clearly not ready for production. If we move ahead with production at this time, we will give birth to "Son-of-Divad."

It certainly passes the Divad test: If it walks like a Divad, and it talks like a Divad, then it's indeed a Divad.

DOD wants to move this program too quickly into production—just like the Divad; the total production costs are $4.2 billion—just like the Divad; and, this program has failed to successfully pass its operational tests—just like the Divad.

In fact, the only test it has passed thus far is the Divad test.

Mr. President, if you would open your committee report to the first page of the procurement title, you will see that the committee put restrictive language on production of the ASPJ. It says no funds absent successful operational tests.

There's a reason why this language is in here, Mr. President, it's because the test results have been disappointing.

Notwithstanding the signals sent to the Department through this language, it is our understanding DOD intends to move ahead with production. It is for that reason that the Senator from Arkansas offers this amendment. As a member of the Appropriations Committee and a supporter of this bill, I believe it is appropriate at this time to speak a bit louder and clearer. And one way to do that is to codify the committee report language.

If I may get a bit more specific, Mr. President, based on the test results conducted at the end of last year for reliability, the requirement for the system's mean time between failure was 33 hours. The system tested at only 19 hours. This is just one example. And it is by no means the worst.

In addition, according to the Navy's own data, there are numerous operational issues that have yet to be resolved. They are the following: Survivability, ECCM vulnerability, reprogrammability, tactical employment, maintainability, availability, logistic supportability, compatibility, interoperability, and reloadability.

Now, Mr. President, I have no problem giving the Department the benefit of the doubt on this system. I will concede that this is the only new and the most promising jammer. It's when they follow up that comment with the one about "we'll fix the problems later" that I start feeling the hand in my pocket. This country has been bit much too often to fall for that one again.

We learned too late on the Divad, the AMRAAM, the B-1 and other programs. So we were justifiably skeptical on the B-2. This year we passed an amendment to ensure close scrutiny and effective checks and balances before further B-2 production. In my view, this should be a new standard for the way Congress does business with the Pentagon. At a minimum, it should be the way we do business on the ASPJ.

We don't want a Son-of-Divad, Mr. President. Instead, we want to make this program an example of how Congress has learned to avoid the problems associated with Divad. I commend the Senator from Arkansas for his leadership on this amendment and, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I urge my colleagues to support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment (No. 881) was agreed to.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXCEPTED COMMITTEE AMENDMENT BEGINNING ON PAGE 36, LINE 22

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside in order that we may be able to consider an amendment to be proposed by Mr. SPECTER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 882

(Purpose: To make funds available for multilateral anti-narcotics efforts)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. President, this amendment is being submitted on behalf of myself, Senators NUNN, KERRY, INOUYE, BIDEN, DECONCINI, D'AMATO, DIXON, and HEFLIN.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER], for himself, Mr. NUNN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. HEFLIN proposes an amendment numbered 882.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in title IX of the bill insert the following:

"It is the sense of the Senate that United States participation in a multilateral anti-narcotics strike force, as called for in sections 4101 and 4103 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Pub. L. 100-690), should include the full range of appropriate law enforcement and anti-drug abuse agencies, and that consideration be given to aiding such a strike force by funding from appropriate sources for multilateral intelligence-sharing, multilateral training of law enforcement personnel, and multilateral support for crop substitution, drug treatment, drug research and drug education programs.

"Funds made available under this Act for Department of Defense drug interdiction activities may be expended to fund the participation of United States Armed Forces in conjunction with appropriate United States law enforcement and anti-drug abuse agencies, in accordance with other applicable laws, in such a strike force.".

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the shortest way to describe this amendment is to read it. It is relatively brief and has two sections.

"It is the sense of the Senate that United States participation in a multilateral anti-narcotics strike force, as called for in sections 4101 and 4103 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Pub. L. 100-690), should include the full range of appropriate law enforcement and anti-drug abuse agencies, and that consideration be given to aiding such a strike force by funding from appropriate sources for multilateral intelligence-sharing, multilateral training of law enforcement personnel, and multilateral support for crop substitution, drug treatment, drug research and drug education programs.

"Funds made available under this Act for Department of Defense drug interdiction activities may be expended to fund the participation of United States Armed Forces in conjunction with appropriate United States law enforcement and anti-drug abuse agencies, in accordance with other applicable laws, in such a strike force.".

Mr. President, in essence, this amendment calls for use of Department of Defense funds for the implementation of a multinational drug strike force as called for in the 1988 Drug Act. That is the range of expenditures on this specific appropriations bill and the amendment then calls for a full-scale attack on the drug issue which would be funded under the other appropriate appropriations bills.

Mr. President, the events in South America since August 18, the date on which Colombian Senator and Presidential candidate Luis Galan was assassinated, have brought into sharp focus the need for a multinational strike force. This is one facet of the need for internationalization of law enforcement generally.

Mr. President, the rise of international terrorism and international drug dealing require such an international response. The United States has moved in a variety of ways to try to solve the problems of drug dealing and terrorism with the application of extraterritorial jurisdiction. In 1984, for example, enacted in the Omnibus Crime Control Act extraterritorial jurisdiction which would apply to hostage taking and to hijacking. In 1986, our antiterrorism laws reached the full extent of jurisdictional latitude by making it a violation of U.S. law for a terrorist to attack, maim, or murder a U.S. citizen anywhere in the world.

In 1986, the Senate passed a resolution calling on the President to negotiate with other nations for the organization of an international court to try terrorists. In 1988, the Congress enacted legislation calling for a multinational force and requested that the President negotiate within the Organization of American States to create such a force and to provide for an international court.

The necessity for an international approach to problems like drugs and terrorism are demonstrated by the nationalism and understandable national pride in other countries which resent any foreign intervention.

A few years ago, when the United States obtained custody of a notorious international drug dealer named Mata, from Honduras, there were riots outside the United States Embassy in that country. When the United States forced down an Egyptian airliner carrying Abu Abbas and others who were implicated in the hijacking of the Achille Lauro and the murder of Leonard Klinghoffer, there were cries of imperialism, and there was resistance to extradition by Italy and later Yugoslavia. These examples illustrate the need for an international approach to terrorism and the creation of a variety of procedures, including an international court.

Mr. President, the impetus for this multinational drug strike force has come with the events in Colombia and the heroic action taken by the Colombians under the leadership of President Barco. The idea has had many sponsors, one of the most prominent of whom is Prime Minister Michael Manley, of Jamaica, who has taken the lead on the proposal for such a strike force. The strike force would be established under the umbrella of multinational participation. I have had a chance to discuss the matter with Prime Minister Manley. I have suggested his leadership is key because he is from the Caribbean, from Latin America, and it is not the United States taking the lead or being big Uncle Sam coming in and trying to throw its weight around in Latin America.

Mr. President, we are joined on the floor by Senator NUNN, who has other commitments, and I was asked to yield to him and I am glad to do so at this point. I want to express at this time my appreciation for Senator NUNN's participation on this matter. This is a subject which he and I have been discussing for some time, more than a year.

Last fall I made a trip to Latin America, and came back and discussed it with the leadership involved in the drug bill, and Senator NUNN was a leader in that venture, as he is a respected leader on defense matters generally. Events have occurred in the course of the past year, including many conferences and a hearing yesterday. Senator NUNN is an indispensable player here, and I am delighted to yield to him at this time.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Pennsylvania. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this amendment. I commend him on his efforts in the overall drug arena trying to prevent this terrible plague on our Nation. He was very active in the bill last year, the bill that took several months to put together that really has been the foundation of what has been done this year.

This amendment is a good amendment. It is carefully crafted to follow the amendment that the Senator from Pennsylvania sponsored last year, which is now part of the law, that encourages the President to negotiate with the Latin American countries about cooperative efforts in fighting drugs.

This amendment that we will be voting on tomorrow that we are discussing now basically says that the interdiction funds that are in the defense bill for the Defense Department can be used for this purpose. It does not waive any existing laws relating to how those military forces will be used.

I know the Senator from Pennsylvania agrees with me that the only place this multinational force could be used would be in a country that wanted that force to come in and assist them. I think some countries will want to do that. I think some countries will not want to do that. The idea here is not to set up any kind of multinational group that is going to invade a country against its will. The idea is to have a group of highly trained, well paid, qualified people, either in the police type activity or, if necessary, in a higher degree of capability in terms of violence, if necessary, to be able to be available if needed.

We had Ambassadors from Peru and Bolivia and Colombia this morning that testified before our committee. They detailed the problems in their countries, which are considerable. It was the view of the Ambassador from Colombia that they would not want this type force or any other military force, that their primary problems related to equipment and they had plenty of manpower. I can visualize other countries that would take a different view, depending on the seriousness of the situation.

I also believe that this kind of effort can lead to much more cooperation in training, much more cooperation in communication, much more cooperation in intelligence sharing, and it may very well be that in these areas this may very well be the most important part of this forward push.

I commend the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I urge may colleagues to support the amendment.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPECTER. I yield.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of this amendment I urge its adoption. I wish to commend my dear friend from Pennsylvania for bringing this matter to our attention.

Mr. President, I believe it is very important to recall that this multinational drug strike force was authorized in the Omnibus Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. A similar amendment regarding the funding was included in the Senate in the foreign operations bill just last week. The Specter amendment simply allows the Department of Defense to use funds appropriated in this measure to take part in a multinational drug strike force and it further requires that such DOD participation be in concert with existing laws.

As my friend from Georgia indicated, this bill is carefully structured. I think that it meets all the requirements of the rules of the Senate, and I would urge that all of us stand up and vote for its adoption.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I would inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania, this is a sense-of-the-Senate provision, is that correct?

Mr. SPECTER. If I may respond, the provision as to DOD funds is not a sense of the Senate. The provision as to the Department of Defense funds authorizes the expenditures of those funds now available for drug interdiction to be used in connection with a multinational strike force.

There is a sense-of-the-Senate provision as it relates to training, to education, and to crop eradication because those funds would be not reachable directly in this bill.

Mr. STEVENS. The section, Mr. President, that the Senator has just referred to states:

> Funds made available under this act for the Department of Defense drug interdiction activities may be extended to fund the participation of the United States Armed Forces in conjunction with appropriate United States law enforcement and Anti-Drug Abuse Act agencies in accordance with other applicable laws in such a strike force.

It is not the intention of this amendment to authorize a strike force, is it, Mr. President? May I ask that to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SPECTER. The paragraph that the Senator has referred to has a line omitted from it. There has to be a correction on that. There will have to be a modification.

But, as I explained the amendment, it does call for, and is intended to call for, funds from this act to be used for implementing the Drug Act of 1988, which calls for the creation of a multinational drug force.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if I may further, I would be pleased to see such an amendment; the Senator has a right to amend his amendment and I do believe it leads to some misunderstanding, the way it is stated now.

I am familiar with the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 which authorizes creation of the drug strike force. But to my knowledge that has not been created yet. I would like to support the Senator's amendment but I do not want to support an amendment that is in effect a mandate to support something that has been authorized but has not been done yet.

I have no problem with the concept of using funds of the Department of Defense to fund the United States participation in accordance with the laws, the 1988 law. But I am concerned about the reference "in accordance with other applicable laws."

Could the Senator from Pennsylvania give us an explanation, what are the other applicable laws to such a strike force? I only know of one and that is the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988.

Mr. SPECTER. Yes, I would be glad to respond to that. The "other applicable laws" which I am referring to are contained in title 18, United States Code, section 1385, which prohibits use of the Army and Air Force as a posse comitatus; the provisions of title 10, United States Code, section 375, which has a restriction on direct participation by military personnel in conducting a search, seizure, or arrest; and the provisions of title 22, United States Code, section 2291, which has a limitation on the use of military personnel for an arrest, but has an exception for assisting foreign officers.

If I may respond more elaborately, the drafting of the second paragraph does not contain an omitted line. I have checked with my staff and am informed that the intention here, in the concluding phrase, "such a strike force," was to refer back to the first paragraph calling for a "multinational antinarcotics strike force." So the structure is that it is our intent to move forward with a multinational antinarcotics strike force as called for in the drug law of 1988.

Last year we debated this matter and made a provision where the Congress went on record calling for a multinational drug strike force.

Today we are making a provision to be able to use funds from this appropriations bill to fund United States participation in that multinational, antidrug strike force.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for his explanation of the limitations that would be included in that phrase "in accordance with other applicable laws." I had misinterpreted that, thinking the Senator was implying there were other applicable laws that would create a strike force.

The Senator's last statement might also lead to some difficulty. Let me ask this question.

Is it the intention of the Senator from Pennsylvania that this amendment mandate the creation of a strike force? Or that it fund the strike force when it is created pursuant to the law of 1988?

Mr. SPECTER. If the Senator will yield, it is the latter. It is to authorize expenditure of funds, once it is created.

I do not think it is realistic to mandate the creation of a multinational strike force because that is largely an executive function. Of course, the executive of the United States cannot do it unilaterally. Before there can be a multinational strike force there is going to have to be agreement among a number of nations.

What this amendment seeks to do is to authorize the expenditure of funds already in this bill for interdiction, in a variety of contexts, and to say that the Congress authorizes the use of those funds in such a multinational force. But it is going to take considerable activity by the President, by the State Department, and the executive branch to establish such a multinational force.

Prime Minister Manley, for example, has made representations about the willingness of other countries, like Venezuela and Canada, to enter into such a multinational force. But the negotiations will be complicated and I do not intend and do not realistically think we could mandate such a force by this appropriations bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am pleased to have the explanation of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

With the understanding that this is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution that we should participate in the concept of a multinational antinarcotics strike force and that if we do, the funds in this act should be used under the authorization contained in the second paragraph of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I would have no objection to the amendment and would support its adoption.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the distinguished Senator from Alaska for those comments.

I might say, in amplification of the groundwork which was laid for this amendment, that I have had an opportunity to discuss this matter with President Bush. On September 5 a number of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives met with the President, in advance of his speech on the drug strategy, at which time this Senator made a suggestion regarding this idea. I ask unanimous consent to incorporate into the RECORD the full text of my letter to President Bush, dated August 22, 1989.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, August 22, 1989.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In light of the current developments in Colombia, I urge you to consider a U.S. initiative to organize a multinational anti-narcotics military force for the Western Hemisphere. Section 4101 of the 1988 Drug Act calls upon the President to direct our Ambassador to the Organization of American States to initiate diplomatic discussions to form such a multinational force.

Last year, I visited Colombia, Bolivia and Peru and discussed this idea with the leaders of those nations, including President Barco. In general, the responses were guarded, but worth pursuing. You may remember that then-Attorney General Meese talked about such a force when he made a trip to Latin America in the spring of 1988.

When I visited a training camp in Chimore, Bolivia, I was surprised to find that DEA agents, who were both overweight and not young, were permitted to accompany Bolivian military forces on raids against chemical laboratories while Special Forces personnel, who were well trained and in excellent physical condition, were prohibited from doing so by U.S. law. When the Senate considered the Drug Bill, I sought to change that provision of U.S. law but was unsuccessful because my colleagues wanted hearings on the subject.

The current events in Colombia make it especially timely to push this proposal at this time. In the last two days, I have discussed the idea with Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, National Security Advisor Brent Scowcroft, his Deputy Bob Gates, Director Bill Bennett, Deputy Secretary of State Larry Eagleburger, Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Robert Heres, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff-designate Colin Powell, Assistant Secretary of State for Latin America Bernard Aronson, Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics Matters Melvyn Levitsky, and our Ambassador to Colombia Thomas E. McNamara. While some were non-committal, most expressed the view that it was an option worth pursuing.

As I believe you know, I have pressed for the past five years for an International Court and expanded U.S. action around the world on terrorism and drug traffickers including expanded use of extraterritorial jurisdiction such as that employed in the successful prosecution of Fawaz Younis. Our experience with terrorists like Abu Abbas suggests that even friendly nations like Egypt or Italy might have been willing to turn him over to an International Court for prosecution but not to the United States. An international "Devil's Island" to hold terrorists like Hamadei would spare nations like West Germany the problems of being blackmailed by terrorists who then seize West German hostages. Latin American countries like Colombia would find their sovereignty much less threatened by an invitation to a multinational police force and an International Court to try drug traffickers would make extradition much easier.

I realize that you are taking a very few days of well-earned vacation, but this matter is so important and so timely in view of your September 5 speech on drugs that I wanted to call this matter to your personal attention.

My best.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

Mr. SPECTER. I think it further appropriate to make a comment that I am seeking a rollcall vote on this amendment. I discussed this with the distinguished chairman, Senator INOUYE, because I believe the executive branch will be very interested to see a strong vote in support of this amendment, and they will act on it.

I have had occasion to question Drug Director Bennett on the record and he has stated that this is an option which is very well worth exploring. As my letter to President Bush points out, I discussed the matter with Attorney General Thornburgh, National Security Adviser Scowcroft, deputy Secretary of State Eagleburger and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Colin Powell.

I might say Colin Powell was reserved in his response, understandably, in advance of confirmation. But I think it is fair and I know it is accurate to say that there is considerable interest in this measure in the executive branch and it is the view of the Senate, which I hope to memorialize by our vote tomorrow, that this multinational force ought to be established. But this, to repeat, is not something which the Senate can direct or mandate.

This has to come out, not only by action of the executive branch of the United States, but also in conjunction with other countries.

Mr. President, I think it also appropriate to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the statement and proposal of Prime Minister Manley on a multilateral antidrug strike force.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER,
JAMAICA HOUSE,
Kingston.

MULTILATERAL DRUG PROPOSAL

Considerable attention has been given to the multilateral strike force aspect of my proposal for international action in relation to drugs. This is misleading, for, while it is a critically important issue, the strike force is only one component of a comprehensive international strategy which I am proposing to combat this scourge. I therefore set out the elements of this broader, proposal, which is gathering support throughout the Caribbean, in the United States and in countries like Venezuela and Spain.

(1) We will introduce a Resolution into the United Nations calling for the creation of an international capability in various areas of the drug struggle and inviting particular countries to become signatories and to pledge support and finance. It is to be noted that the U.S. Senate has already voted unanimously for a Resolution approving the idea and inviting the U.S. Administration to provide funds now allocated to the U.N. system to assist in the financing of this idea.

(2) Acting under the Resolution, to set up an organisation devoted to the development of the following capabilities:

(i) a central intelligence-gathering operation which would collate and coordinate all information on drug trafficking worldwide including financial flows which are a principal means of tracking the operations of the drug cartels;

(ii) A training facility devoted to (a) narcotics agents in both the investigative and interdiction aspects, and (b) agents trained in narcotics intelligence.

(iii) A reserve pool of narcotics agents and intelligence operatives with experience in different parts of the world. This pool could be used to make available to countries with inadequate resources in this field, on-the-ground support for specified periods of time.

This reserve capability would be particularly valuable for countries which are having their own people undergo training and would help strengthen the anti-drug operations in different countries while they are training to increase the effectiveness of their operations.

(iv) A division devoted to public education and other elements of the demand management side of the drug operations. There is a growing body of experience in different parts of the world about drug education in schools, in communities and in more general public relations programmes. A means of cross fertilising research and knowledge in this field and having small groups of experts who could go to countries with the will to tackle this aspect of the matter could be invaluable.

(v) A central body of expertise in the mounting and maintenance of rehabilitation programmes. Already this aspect of the matter receives attention from a U.N. Agency with headquarters in Geneva.

A technical question would be whether to leave this under its present auspices or incorporate it into a single programme even if its headquarters remain in Geneva. I happen to favour the second course of action.

(vi) A central source of advice in the planning and administration of income substitution programmes. This could include levels of support that would make even seed finance available.

This programme is also in existence with headquarters in Geneva and receives considerable financial support, particularly from the Government of Italy.

Alternative sources of income for peasants who have spent their lives taking their children through the production of the ganja plant or the coca leaf, deserve and need help in adjusting after eradication programmes and in any event, represent a hugh potential source of passionate opposition to any anti-drug operation.

(vii) A multilateral strike force under U.N. command and consisting of specially trained military personnel having regard for the nature of the drug operations which have reached the scale of virtually civil war or gang operations beyond the capacity of local security forces to handle.

Apart from the opportunity this would provide for developing appropriated expertise in this kind of fighting, the great advantage of the multilateral strike force is that it gets around the problem of sovereignty. For example, both the Colombian and the United States Governments have hesitated long over the question of whether to invite U.S. troops to help the Colombian Forces fight the Medellin cartel. In the end, both Governments retreat from the idea because the troops of a foreign power would immediately provoke a controversy about sovereignty. No such difficulty would arise if a Government were to invite a multilateral strike force under the United Nations command and sponsorship.

It is to be understood that all of these facilities which would be developed from small beginnings and grow as commitment, resources and experience expand, would be subject to the overriding principle that assistance would only be in response to a formal request from the Government of a particular country.

This plan has been introduced and won the support of CARICOM, received the unanimous backing in principle from both the Senate and House in Washington, has been endorsed in principle by the Presidents of Venezuela and Spain, and will be introduced at the Non-Aligned Summit and at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in September and October of this year, respectively. It will be introduced as a formal Resolution in the United Nations immediately after the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have considerably more which could be said at this juncture, but the hour is late. I thank my colleagues for their participation and for their support. A rollcall vote is scheduled for tomorrow at 10 o'clock. It may be that other cosponsors may have brief statements and maybe at that time we can face that alternative if or when such requests are made for additional statements.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Specter amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, pursuant to the direction of the joint leadership of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the Specter amendment occur at 10 a.m. tomorrow morning and that no amendments be in order to the Specter amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 2:55 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the bill (S. 737) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain lands adjacent to the boundary of Rocky Mountain National Park in the State of Colorado, with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

At 4:13 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1312) to revise and extend the programs of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. OWENS of New York, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey, Mrs. UNSOELD, Mr. GOODLING, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. BARTLETT, and Mr. GRANDY as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. BYRD) reported that he had signed the following enrolled bill, which was previously signed by the Speaker of the House:

S. 85. An act to authorize the acceptance of certain lands for additional to Harpers Ferry National Historical Park, WV.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. INOUYE, from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Rules and Administration, jointly, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

S. 978. A bill to authorize the establishment within the Smithsonian Institution of the National Museum of the American Indian, to establish a memorial to the American Indian, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 101-143).

By Mr. HOLLINGS, from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments:

H.R. 2991. A bill making appropriations for the Department of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 101-144).

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ:

S. 1677. A bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Solvency Act of 1983 to provide a 3-year extension of the transfer of revenues attributable to taxation of tier 2 benefits to the Railroad Retirement Account; to the Committee on Finance.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ:

S. 1677. A bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Solvency Act of 1983 to provide a 3-year extension of the transfer of revenues attributable to taxation of tier 2 benefits to the railroad retirement account; to the Committee on Finance.

EXTENSION OF TRANSFER OF REVENUES WITHIN THE RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACCOUNT

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Solvency Act of 1983. My amendment will allow tax revenue from tier 2 benefits to be applied to the railroad retirement account for 3 more years.

I am sure that some of my colleagues will remember our efforts at the beginning of the decade to save the railroad retirement system. In 1980, it was evident that the railroad retirement fund was running a deficit due to the disproportionately large number of retirees compared to railroad workers.

In 1983, Congress passed the Railroad Retirement Solvency Act, a bill designed to bring the pension fund back into balance. The measure included a temporary tax on the pension benefits, the proceeds of which were applied to the railroad retirement pension fund. However, the bill prohibited the States from taxing these same pension benefits.

Mr. President, I assumed this matter was settled until the legislature in my own State of Minnesota decided in 1987 to raise taxes in general and to begin taxing railroad retirement benefits despite the 1983 bill. I wrote to the Governor to complain, pointing out that the tax was illegal and urging him to stop collecting it. However, Minnesota continued collecting the tax until a railroad pensioner filed suit against the State. The Minnesota tax court eventually declared the State tax on railroad pensions illegal.

I, along with the railroad retirees in my State, remain concerned about maintaining a healthy level of reserves in the railroad retirement fund. That is why I am introducing this legislation today. The revenue collected from the taxation of railroad retirement benefits is scheduled to be directed into the U.S. Treasury general fund beginning October 1 of this year. While I am aware that the House Ways and Means Committee has included a 1-year extension of the revenue transfer to the railroad retirement fund in its version of the budget reconciliation bill, I am proposing a 3-year extension to allow time for the ongoing railroad retirement system reform studies to be completed, the findings analyzed, and a plan of action implemented.

In closing, Mr. President, I want to say that we have an obligation to finish what we started in 1983 when we sought to keep the pension fund solvent and protect the long-term interests of railroad retirees who have contributed so much to our society. I strongly request support from all of my colleagues for this worthy initiative.●

S. 1678. A bill to provide for the establishment of the Margaret Walker Alexander National African-American Research Center; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

MARGARET WALKER ALEXANDER NATIONAL AFRICAN-AMERICAN RESEARCH CENTER

● Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation to provide for the establishment of the Margaret Walker Alexander National African-American Research Center. My distinguished colleague, Mr. LOTT, is joining me as an original cosponsor of this bill.

This national research center, located at Jackson State University, will be named for Margaret Walker Alexander, professor emeritus in the department of English at Jackson State University and a noted author and poet, perhaps best known for her civil war novel "Jubilee" and her volume of verse "For My People."

The purpose of the center will be the preservation of 20th century African-American materials and archival resources. The facility will serve as a national center for research and teaching in African-American literature and history and as a repository for papers and memorabilia relating to the life of Margaret Walker Alexander and other individuals noted for their work in African-American literature, history, and civil rights.

Since there is currently no national archival oral history research facility focusing exclusively on 20th century African Americans, this center is needed to inform present and future generations of African-American contributions to our Nation.

Mr. President, I urge other Senators to join me in this effort and to cosponsor this bill establishing the Margaret

Walker Alexander National African-American Research Center.●

By Mr. MITCHELL (for himself, Mr. COHEN, Mr. PELL, Mr. KERRY, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. CHAFEE):

S. 1680. A bill to amend the Magnuson Fishing Conservation and Management Act so as to enhance the enforcement of laws concerning American lobster; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

CONSERVATION OF AMERICAN LOBSTERS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation intended to strengthen the conservation and management of lobsters in the United States.

Maine and the rest of the New England States are famous for lobsters. Maine, Massachusetts and Rhode Island lead the region in lobster landings, accounting for 93 percent of all lobsters landed in the United States, followed by Connecticut and New Hampshire.

A careful balance of scientific and technical considerations is necessary to preserve lobsters as a vital and abundant ocean resource. New England lobsters—also known as American lobsters—are a distinct species, homarus americanus, found in waters of the Northwest Atlantic Ocean. Lobster stocks are concentrated in the Gulf of Maine and in waters off southern New England.

Conservation and management of the lobster fishery occurs under a combination of Federal and State law. State laws regulate inshore catches up to 3 miles from the coast. Under the Magnuson Act, Federal regulations apply to catches from 3 to 200 miles offshore. However, Federal regulations require that anyone holding a State lobster permit which is endorsed for lobstering in Federal waters must observe the more restrictive—that is, Federal—requirements for all lobsters caught.

Federal regulations for the American lobster fishery are contained in the Code of Federal Regulations (50 CFR 649). One of the most important conservation measures in the management plan is a minimum legal size for a harvested lobster's body shell length. The current minimum size is 3¼ inches. It is scheduled to increase to 3$^{9}/_{32}$ inches in 1991; and 3$^{5}/_{16}$ inches in 1992.

The Federal regulation follows the schedule of minimum size increases established by State law in Maine, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island. These increases are intended to strengthen and enhance the conservation of American lobster stocks.

In New Hampshire and Connecticut, where State laws have not yet matched the increases scheduled for 1991 and 1992, only a small number of lobster fishermen are not already subject to the Federal minimum size requirements. In New Hampshire, for example, which accounts for less than 3 percent of total New England lobster landings, 75 percent of all lobsters are landed by fishermen holding Federally-endorsed permits.

Unfortunately, foreign imports are undermining the Federal conservation and management system for American lobsters. Approximately 50 percent of lobsters sold in the United States are imported. Of these imports, 10 percent were estimated in 1988 to be below the Federal minimum size. As the minimum size increases over time, the number of imports estimated below the minimum size will increase to approximately 30 percent.

In the U.S. market, where domestic and imported lobsters are intermingled in the stream of commerce, it is virtually impossible to enforce compliance with the Federal minimum size—particularly in places outside of New England, such as Chicago or Los Angeles. There is an open risk of a "black market" developing in subminimum lobsters of U.S. origin.

Moreover, New England lobstermen sees themselves as forced to comply with minimum size requirements which do not apply to imports. From the point of view of basic fairness, this does not make sense. Let any foreign nation observe whatever minimum size it wants within its own waters. But within the United States, such a nation should respect our laws and our minimum lobster size.

In 1988, I introduced legislation to prohibit imports of lobsters which did not meet U.S. conservation standards. The Senate Finance Committee recommended that the provision be specifically included in enabling legislation for the United States-Canada Free-Trade Agreement. However, the provision was dropped from the final legislation that President Reagan signed into law.

The issue of undersized lobsters did not end with the debate over the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement. The problem of undersized lobsters has continued, and the basic unfairness has threatened the stability of the Federal lobster management plan.

As early as March 1988, the Fisheries Council of Canada had requested Canada's Department of Fisheries and Oceans to increase Canada's minimum size. Over a year later, Canada announced a plan to increase its size—but not in all areas of Canada, and without matching the United States increases scheduled for 1991 and 1992.

Canada's increase was supposed to become effective on July 1, 1989. But then, Canada postponed it indefinitely. On August 30, 1989, President Bush personally raised the issue with Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney during the Prime Minister's visit to Kennebunkport, ME. They agreed that the problem needed to be solved, but gave no indication of a solution.

On September 14, 1989, the Nova Scotia/Bay of Fundy Lobster Advisory Committee formally decided to oppose any increase in Canada's minimum size. As a result, Canada's Department of Fisheries and Oceans has indicated that no increase will occur.

Even if Canada should implement the increase previously announced for July 1, 1989, it will not be enough. In Canada, there are 14 minimum sizes, 9 of which are only 3 inches or smaller. The proposed increase will still not affect 15 lobster-producing areas which account for as much as 35 percent of the lobsters imported from Canada into the United States.

New England lobstermen will not accept unfairness. In recent months, the Maine Lobstermen's Association petitioned the New England Fisheries Management Council [NEFMC] to postpone the next scheduled increases in the Federal minimum lobster size. The NEFMC turned down the MLA petition, but controversy surrounding the Federal plan is unlikely to diminish unless the basic unfairness is corrected.

The legislation I am introducing today is intended to strengthen the lobster conservation and management plan. It would prohibit the sale or transportation of lobsters in interstate commerce within the United States—unless they meet the U.S. minimum size. It also would apply to "berried" or "scrubbed" lobsters, which are repsectively, egg-bearing lobsters, or lobsters with visible evidence of eggs having been forcibly removed.

The prohibition would apply both to whole lobsters and lobster parts from undersized lobsters; whether fresh, chilled, frozen, or otherwise preserved or prepared.

I emphasize that the purpose of the legislation is conservation. It would apply to all lobsters sold or shipped in interstate commerce within the United States, regardless of whether or not they are of foreign or domestic origin. One of the effects clearly will be to stop undersized lobsters at our borders, but it will not stop those lobsters that meet our standards. The legislation is not a trade restriction.

Under the legislation, domestic and foreign lobsters are treated equally. The legislation would eliminate the present unfairness, and strengthen the integrity of the U.S. lobster management plan. Legislation of this nature is clearly allowed under article 20 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] and chapter 12 of the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

I also wish to make clear that the legislation does not seek to establish the Federal minimum lobster size per se. Under the Magnuson Act, the proper authority for that determination is the NEFMC and the individual States. The current minimum size is 3¼ inches. Increases of one thirty-second of an inch are scheduled for 1991 and 1992. These sizes depend on a careful balancing of scientific and technical considerations.

Greater scientific research is needed both for lobsters and other fisheries. Good fisheries management depends on good science, and our system needs to be always dynamic and flexible. Most of all, fisheries conservation and management needs to be fair. For Maine lobstermen and the American lobster fishery, that is what this legislation is intended to achieve.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1680

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 307(1) of the Magnuson Fishing Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 1857) is amended (1) by deleting "or" at the end of subparagraph (H), (2) by deleting the period at the end of subparagraph (I) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "or", and (3) by adding immediately after subparagraph (I) the following new subparagraph:

"(J) to ship or transport, or cause to be shipped or transported, or to sell, in interstate commerce or foreign commerce as defined in section 10 of title 18, United States Code, any whole lobster, or any part thereof, of the species homarus americanus (whether fresh, chilled, frozen, or otherwise preserved or prepared) that is smaller than the minimum possession size in effect at the time under the American Lobster Fishery Management Plan (50 CFR 649), or any successor to that plan, implemented under title III of the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act, or is bearing eggs attached to its abdominal appendages, or bears evidence of the forcible removal of extruded eggs from its abdominal appendages.".

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator MITCHELL and my colleagues from New England in introducing legislation to establish a nationwide uniform minimum size standard for lobsters shipped or sold in interstate commerce. While current U.S. fisheries conservation law prevents lobstermen in Maine, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts from landing lobsters below a certain minimum size, there is presently no mechanism for insuring that imported undersized lobsters from Canada do not show up in Dallas, Chicago or Los Angeles. In fact, the need for this legislation has become even more compelling in recent months as the United States has been flooded with undersized lobster imports which threaten to undermine longstanding U.S. conservation efforts.

Frankly, I was disappointed last year that the administration refused to include language in the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement to promote the conservation of American lobsters. New England lobstermen must observe existing Federal and State regulations which set a minimum legal size for a harvested lobster's body shell length to insure that only mature lobsters can be caught. Even though some 50 percent of the lobsters consumed in the United States are imported from Canada, Canadian lobstermen do not have to meet the minimum size requirements for their export sales. This situation clearly undermines the U.S. conservation system and places U.S. lobstermen at a competitive disadvantage.

Federal management of the U.S. lobster fishery falls under the Magnuson Fisheries Conservation and Management Act which regulates the catch from 3 to 200 miles offshore. Individual State laws govern the inshore harvesting out to 3 miles. Under current Federal conservation regulations, those American lobsters with a body shell smaller than 3¼ inches—or about 1⅛ pounds—cannot be landed. In addition, to insure the continued reproduction of the species, it is illegal to land egg bearing females or those females whose eggs have been forcibly removed. While these regulations restrict the actions of U.S. lobstermen, they do nothing to prohibit the sale of undersized imported lobsters—thus creating a dangerous two-tiered system which could irrevocably damage our U.S. conservation efforts.

The legislation we are introducing today fills in the enforcement cracks presently existing in Federal conservation law by banning the sale or shipment of undersized lobsters in interstate commerce. For the first time, both United States and foreign lobstermen would be required to maintain the same minimum size standard for interstate sales in the United States. It is important to remember that this legislation does not violate U.S. obligations under international law as both article 20 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and chapter 12 of the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement clearly allow such governmental actions for conservation purposes.

Maine lobstermen have a long and proud heritage of battling the elements to harvest food from the sea. They have made the sometimes painful sacrifices necessary to ensure the continued abundance of their catch. Therefore, it is simply a matter of fairness and equity to apply a uniform minimum size standard to all lobsters shipped or sold in interestate commerce in the United States. In this era of diminishing resources, I believe that we should be rewarding sound fisheries conservation practices, not pushing those who practice them.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this very important bill that will help conserve the American lobster and at the same time protect our New England lobstermen from unfair competition from imports.

The American lobster is managed under a combination of Federal and State laws. Limits on the size of lobster that may be taken and prohibition of harvest of egg-bearing females are the principle mechanisms for conservation. Federal size restrictions are defined by the American lobster fishery management plan as implemented under the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Mangement Act. These restrictions apply to all lobster caught in Federal waters and to those caught in State waters by lobstermen holding a permit that applies to Federal as well as state waters. State regulations apply within the 3-mile State jurisdiction and are generally consistent with Federal regulation. The Federal size limit is currently 3¼ inches and is scheduled to be increased by one thirty-second of an inch in 1991 and again by one thirty-second of an inch in 1992.

About 50 percent of the lobsters sold in the United Stats are imported from Canada. The Canadians were scheduled to increase their size limits to the current U.S. level of 3¼ inches, but have indenfinitely postponed this action.

Mr. President, this places us in a difficult position. We would like the proposed size increases go into effect because these were developed with conservation of the fishery in mind. However, we do not wish to place our lobstermen at a competitive disadvantage by raising United States standards while Canadian standards remain below our current levels. It is estimated that imports that do not meet the U.S. minimum size requirements will increase from 10 percent to about 30 percent when our size standards are raised.

Our previous efforts to remedy this problem by prohibiting importation of undersized lobsters were unsuccessful because some felt it violated our Free Trade Agreement with Canada.

The legislation that we are introducing today would amend the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act so that all lobsters that are either sold or shipped in interstate commerce in the United States would be subject to Federal regulations. These regulations would then apply to both foreign and domestic lobsters. This legislation will strengthen Federal and State conservation and management efforts while protecting our lobstermen from an influx of undersized lobsters. Mr. President, this measure is urgently needed by our New England lobster fishery.

By Mr. HUMPHREY (for himself, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. COATS, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HELMS, Mr. KASTEN, and Mr. MCCLURE):

S. 1681. A bill to make it a violation of a right secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States to perform an abortion with knowledge that such abortion is being performed solely because of the gender of the fetus, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CIVIL RIGHTS OF INFANTS ACT

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, there is a new and gruesome form of discrimination in America. The purpose of this legislation is to end it.

What am I talking about? Let me read something from the New York Times of December 25, 1988. The title of the article is "Fetal Sex Test Used as Step to Abortion."

In a major change in medical attitudes and practices, many doctors are providing prenatal diagnoses to pregnant women who want to abort a fetus on the basis of sex alone.

The article goes on to say:

Geneticists say that the reasons for this change in attitude are an increased availability of diagnostic technologies, a growing disinclination of doctors to be paternalistic, deciding for patients what is best, and an increasing tendency for patients to ask for the tests. Many geneticists and ethicists say they are disturbed by the trend.

George Annas, a professor of health law at Boston University School of Medicine is quoted in the article with this statement:

I think the profession should set limits and I think most people would be outraged and properly so at the notion that you would have an abortion because you don't want a boy or don't want a girl. If you're worried about a woman's right to an abortion, the easiest way to lose it is not to set any limits on this technology.

Mr. President, that is what I urge this Congress to do—set a limit on abortion—set a limit on discriminatory abortion. Sex-selection abortion is a heinous form of abortion. Talk about equal rights, a sex-selection abortion kills a human being for simply being a gender which is not to the liking of the child's parents.

There have been other reports in the press on this horror.

This one is from USA Today, February 2, 1989:

In a break with past medical attitudes, more geneticists are open to identifying gender for expecting parents early—so they can decide whether to abort.

The change has ethicists debating where a parent's right to information ends and the rights of the unborn begin.

A recent national survey of 212 medical geneticists found 20 percent approved of performing prenatal testing for sex selection; in a 1973 survey, only 1 percent approved.

The article continues and describes who is more likely to be affected by the sex-selection abortion:

"Probably 99 percent of nonmedical requests for prenatal diagnosis are made because people want a boy," says Dr. Mark Evans, an obstetrician and geneticist at Wayne State University, Detroit. Some experts are concerned about the social impact.

Evans turns down nonmedical sex-selection requests. "Being female," he says, "is not a disease."

Quite so. Let me read a section from an article that appeared in U.S. News & World Report, January 9, 1989. The title of this article is "Baby Boys, To Order."

Some demographers and feminists, for instance, are likely to oppose the practice. Looked at as a worldwide phenomenon, sex selection is the natural successor to female infanticide as a method of increasing the ratio of males to females.

Tens of thousands of fetuses, perhaps hundreds of thousands, have already been destroyed in Third World countries for the offense of being female. A few feminists are gingerly using the term "femicide," a rare appearance of the suffix "cide" in a movement that tends to regard abortion as the simple shedding of an unnecessary body part, such as an appendix or a hangnail.

Let me read from an article that appeared in Newsweek, January 30, 1989. This article is called "In India, They Abort Females." You see, in India, a female child is considered a liability, a male, an asset.

The article cites one study indicating that of 8,000 cases of abortion in Bombay, 7,999 involved female fetuses. The article continues:

All very sad and very compelling but for one large fact: Feminists (in India and all over the world, for the feminist community is at one on this issue) are speaking out of both sides of their mouths. When the issue is sex determination and the "selective" abortion of girls, they call it female feticide. But when the issue is reproductive freedom and the abortion of male and female fetuses, they call it a "woman's right to choose." It won't work. They can't have it both ways. Either they accept abortion or they don't.

The American Medical News in February 1989 reported:

A 1988 survey showed that about 10 percent of U.S. geneticists had no qualms about performing genetic testing—developed to detect disease—for sex selection. Another 10 percent accepted the practice with varying degrees of reservation.

The results mark a significant shift from a 1973 survey that found only 1 percent of geneticists approved of prenatal diagnosis for couples who want to abort on the basis of sex alone.

An article appearing in Childbirth Educator, summer 1988, had this interesting thought. The article was called "A Bias for Boys."

It is also easy to see how a radical gender imbalance might affect our society's attitudes toward war. We know that males, for reasons at least partly biological, are more given to aggression than are females.

It's hardly inconceivable that a modern nation with an excess of 10 or 15 million adult males could, through voting and other expressions of public opinion, turn more readily to military action.

Mr. President, I could go on and on with article after article, but I think you get the point. That point is, we have new ground to break in the area of civil rights. We have new ground to break in the area of equal rights.

The Hastings Center is a nonpartisan, nonprofit, organization which carries out educational and research programs on ethical issues in medicine, the life sciences, and the professions. In the latest Hastings Center report appeared an article titled "Fatal Knowledge? Prenatal Diagnosis and Sex Selection." Dorothy C. Wertz, a research professor in the School of Public Health at Boston University coauthored the article with John C. Fletcher, director of the center for biomedical ethics at the University of Virginia.

They begin their report by saying:

Examining the ethical arguments on sex selection through prenatal diagnosis and their implications for social policy is now an urgent task for three reasons: (1) recent data suggest that physicians in the U.S. and some other nations may comply with prenatal requests for sex selection, (2) advances in genetic knowledge, such as international projects to map the human genome, beg a question whether sex selection is a precedent for direct genetic "tinkering" with human characteristics having little or nothing to do with disease, and (3) preconceptual sex determination may become scientifically reliable in the future.

Three different cases are cited where someone would tend to have a sex selection abortion:

Case 1: A couple with four healthy daughters desire a son. They request prenatal diagnosis solely to learn the fetus's sex, in the absence of any medical indications. They tell the doctor that if the fetus is a female they will abort it. Further, they say that if the doctor will not grant their request for prenatal diagnosis they will have an abortion rather than risk having a fifth girl.

Case 2: A couple with three sons in their late teens think their family is completed, but the woman finds herself unexpectedly pregnant at age 42. She has always wanted a daughter. Still, the couple is ambivalent; though they are not eager for a fourth child, they are tempted by the possibility of continuing the pregnancy long enough to have prenatal diagnosis, which is medically indicated at the woman's age, finding out the fetus' sex, and then making their decision about abortion.

Case 3: An immigrant woman from an Asian nation where sons are strongly preferred requests prenatal diagnosis for fetal sex testing. She already has three daughters and says her husband will divorce her, send her home, and "throw her on the dung heap" if she has another.

Now, here are the results when doctors were presented with that information: In contrast to past practice, today doctors are much more willing to comply with such requests. When presented with case 1, 62 percent in a 1985 survey of 295 U.S. geneticists said that they would either perform prenatal diagnosis for the couple—34 percent—or would refer them to someone who would perform it—28 percent.

Mr. President, there is not one reason to have a sex selection abortion. In fact, there are only reasons against it; like, unbalancing the sex ratio and diminishing the status of women. In the Hastings report article, it points out that, "Preconceptual sex selection could contribute to gender stereotyping before birth and perpetuate sexism in society."

I started by talking about civil rights. I hope all Senators can clearly see the need to extend some of those rights to the unborn. That is why I am introducing a bill that would provide that an unborn baby has the civil right not to be aborted on the basis of his or her sex. I might add, this is a bill that mostly protects women. Appropriately, this bill is titled, "Civil Rights of Infants Act." The bill would amend title 42 of the United States Code which contains most of the civil rights statutes.

Mr. President, because the right not to be sex selection aborted would be a civil right, a series of remedies for civil rights violations would be invoked. The scope of these remedies would be as broad or narrow as the remedies for other civil rights violations.

I urge my colleagues to speedily enact this bill into law. The issue is not a Democrat issue or a Republican issue; not a liberal issue or a conservative issue. It is fundamentally an issue of civil rights.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1681

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Civil Rights of Infants Act".

SEC. 2 DEPRIVING PERSONS OF THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS BEFORE BIRTH.

Section 1979 of the Revised Statutes (42 U.S.C. 1983) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 4. For purposes of section 1979 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (42 U.S.C. 1983), and for purposes of other provisions of law, it shall be a deprivation of a 'right' secured by the laws of the United States for an individual to perform an abortion with the knowledge that the pregnant woman is seeking the abortion solely because of the gender of the fetus. No pregnant woman who seeks to obtain an abortion solely on the basis of the gender of the fetus shall be liable in any manner under this section.".

S. 1682. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to encourage savings by increasing the amount of deductible contributions which may be made to an individual retirement account, to allow distributions from individual retirement accounts to be used without penalty to purchase a first home or to pay for higher education expenses, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

SAVINGS AND INVESTMENT INCENTIVE ACT

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, my friend TERRY SANFORD tells the story about two men sitting together on an airplane. After a while, one man musters his courage and says: "One of our deodorants isn't working."

"It must be yours," says the other. "I don't use any."

I think of this when I see the debates over the alarming investment and productivity performance turned in by the United States during the 1980's. Each side finds some way, no matter how tortured, of arguing that it's the other side's fault.

In fact, there's plenty of blame to go around. And no one side has a monopoly on solutions, either. For example, the President's people want to spur investment by cutting the capital gains tax. That could help, even though the benefits would be felt most by the wealthiest Americans.

But in this age of limited resources, why not get the same effect—in fact, a much bigger bang for the buck—by giving a tax break to millions of average families?

That's why, Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce S. 1682 along with 33 Members of the Senate. This bill restores the individual retirement accounts—IRA's. This was one retirement account that never should have been retired. In fact, this bill expands IRA's to help people with the two biggest investments of their lives: Buying a house and sending their children through college or trade school.

Why are IRA's so good?

First, they stimulate savings. There were some economists who used to argue that the old IRA's didn't spur savings. New studies, though, particularly an analysis by David Wise of Harvard's Kennedy School and Steven Venti of Dartmouth, show that that is wrong. Net national savings are increased by as much as half the size of total IRA deposits, which in 1986 were $38 billion.

That is important because the household savings rate in America last year was a woefully low 4 cents on the dollar. In Japan it's 16 cents on the dollar.

And while budget deficits and other factors pushing real interest rates up have also hurt, a major factor stunting American investment is that the pool of money available to invest in manufacturing new products just isn't big enough. You can't swim in a wading pool. IRA's offer us a chance of making that pool big enough for investors to dive right in—not to mention helping keep the American economy afloat.

Second, if we're going to cut taxes, why not give a tax break to the broadest segment of American taxpayers, the middle-income earners who bear the brunt of the tax—paying burden? These are precisely the families that need the expanded IRA that I've proposed.

Since 1949 the monthly cost of owning a house with a mortgage has gone from 14 percent of the average 30 years old's income to 44 percent. No wonder that since 1980 the homeownership rate in America has fallen for the first time since World War II.

The figures for college education are even scarier; the Education Department estimates that 18 years from now, getting a bachelors degree even at a State-run school will cost families $60,000.

For these purposes—all of which still require the kind of long-term savings our economy needs—why not let people withdraw their IRA funds penalty-free?

In the past, nobody argued more strenuously than I for a capital gains cut. In the last week many people have come up to me and asked if we could have both. That would be nice. But we can't. Not this year. The drain on the Federal Treasury would simply be too great.

For while some economists have correctly pointed to the fact that a capital gains cut would gain revenue for the first year, that's only part of the story. After that first year, the capital gains cuts now being proposed would lose an incredible amount of money—the administration's proposal would cost $11 billion a year by 1994. To tout that brief, initial revenue gain is a little bit like the remark by that pitcher who served up a homerun ball to Willie Mays: "For 60 feet it was a helluva pitch," he said.

The point is what happened next. And what happens next with these particular capital gains proposals? An increase in the deficit, more interest to pay off each year—with the taxes of average folks, struggling to write the next mortgage check. That's not right. We need a proposal that helps families buy a house, not one that slams the door shut on them.

The IRA would help. In a way, it is America's real capital gain. It would allow average families to invest capital in America's future while savings for their own future—a gain for all Americans. That's why it's so important to them. And that's why in the next few weeks, it should be so important to Congress.

Mr. President, I encourage my colleagues to join us as cosponsors of this important piece of legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 1682 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1682

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Savings and Investment Incentive Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. DISTRIBUTIONS FROM INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT PLANS MAY BE USED WITHOUT PENALTY TO PURCHASE FIRST HOMES OR TO PAY HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 72(t) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to exceptions to 10-percent additional tax on early distributions from qualified retirement plans) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) DISTRIBUTIONS FROM INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT PLANS FOR FIRST HOME PURCHASES OR EDUCATIONAL EXPENSES.—The following distributions to an individual from an individual retirement plan:

"(i) FRIST-TIME HOMEBUYERS.—Qualified first-time homebuyer distributions (as defined in paragraph (6)).

"(ii) HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.—Distributions to the extent such distributions do not exceed the qualified higher education expenses (as defined in paragraph (7)) of the taxpayer for the taxable year."

(b) DEFINITIONS.—Section 72(t) of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) QUALIFIED FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER DISTRIBUTIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(E)(i)—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified first-time homebuyer distribution' means any payment or distribution received by a first-time homebuyer from an individual retirement plan to the extent such payment or distribution is used by the individual before the close of the 60th day after the day on which such payment or distribution is received to pay qualified acquisition costs with respect to a principal residence for such individual.

"(B) QUALIFIED ACQUISITION COSTS.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified acquisition costs' means the costs of acquiring, constructing, or reconstructing a residence. Such term includes any usual or reasonable settlement, financing, or other closing costs.

"(C) FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER; OTHER DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER.—The term 'first-time homebuyer' means any individual if such individual (and if married, such individual's spouse) had no present ownership interest in a principal residence during the 2-year period ending on the date of acquisition of the principal residence to which this paragraph applies.

"(ii) PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE.—The term 'principal residence' has the same meaning as when used in section 1034.

"(iii) Date of acquisition.—The term 'date of acquisition' means the date—

"(I) on which a binding contract to acquire the principal residence to which subparagraph (A) applies is entered into, or

"(II) on which construction or reconstruction of such a principal residence is commenced.

"(D) SPECIAL RULE WHERE DELAY IN ACQUISITION.—If—

"(i) any amount is paid or distributed from an individual retirement plan to an individual for purposes of being used as provided in subparagraph (A), and

"(ii) by reason of a delay in the acquisition of the residence, the requirements of subparagraph (A) cannot be met,

the amount so paid or distributed may be paid into another individual retirement plan as provided in section 408(d)(3)(A)(i) without regard to section 408(d)(3)(B), and, if so paid into such other plan, such amount shall not be taken into account in determining whether section 408(d)(3)(A)(i) applies to any other amount.

"(7) QUALIFIED HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(E)(ii)—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified higher education expenses' tuition, fees, books, supplies, and equipment required for the enrollment or attendance of—

"(i) the taxpayer,

"(ii) the taxpayer's spouse, or

"(iii) the taxpayer's child (as defined in section 151(c)(3)) or grandchild, at an eligible educational institution (as defined in section 135(c)(2)).

"(B) COORDINATION WITH SAVINGS BOND PROVISIONS.—The amount of qualified higher education expenses for any taxable year shall be reduced by any amount excludable from gross income under section 135."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to payments and distributions after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

SEC. 3. ACTIVE PARTICIPANTS ALLOWED DEDUCTIONS FOR 50 PERCENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT PLANS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Paragraph (1) of section 219(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to limitation on deduction of active participants in certain pension plans) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If (for any part of any plan year ending with or within a taxable year) an individual or the individual's spouse is an active participant, the amount as a deduction under subsection (a) for such taxable year shall be the sum of—

"(A) 100 percent of the amount which would have been allowable for such taxable year if each of the dollar limitations contained in subsections (b)(1)(A) and (c)(2) were reduced (but not below zero) by the amount determined.

"(B) 50 percent of the excess of—

"(i) the amount which would have been allowable for such taxable year without regard to this subsection, over

"(ii) the amount determined under subparagraph (A)."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subsection (o) of section 408 of such Code is amended by striking paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) and inserting the following:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Qualified nondeductible contibutions may be made on behalf of an individual to an individual retirement plan.

"(2) QUALIFIED NONDEDUCTIBLE CONTRIBUTIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified nondeductible contribution' means the portion of any contribution for a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, to an individual retirement plan which is not allowable as a deduction under section 219 solely by reason of subsection (g)(1) thereof.

"(B) YEARS BEFORE 1990.—The term 'qualified nondeductible contribution' includes any contribution to an individual retirement plan for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1990, which was a designed nondeductible contribution (as defined in this subsection as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Savings and Investment Incentive Act of 1989).

"(C) TAXPAYER MAY ELECT TO TREAT DEDUCTIBLE CONTRIBUTIONS AS NONDEDUCTIBLE.—If a taxpayer elects not to deduct any contribution which (without regard to this subparagraph) is allowable as a deduction under section 219, such contribution shall be treated as a qualified nondeductible contribution.

"(3) TIME WHEN CONTRIBUTION MADE.—In determining for which taxable year a contribution is made, the rules of section 219(f)(3) shall apply."

(2) Paragraph (7) of section 219(f) of such Code is amended by striking "408(o)(2)(B)(ii)" and inserting "408(o)(2)(C)".

(3) Sections 408(o)(4) and 6693(b) of such Code are each amended by striking "designated nondeductible" each place it appears (including in any heading) and inserting "qualified nondeductible".

(4)(A) The section heading for section 6693 is amended by striking "DESIGNATED" and inserting "QUALIFIED".

(B) The item relating to section 6693 in the table of sections for part I of subchapter B of chapter 68 is amended by striking "designated" and inserting "qualified".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to contributions for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.●

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today I rise to cosponsor legislation offered by Senate Finance Committee Chairman BENTSEN that I think will help resolve one of the most pressing economic problems facing the United States: our low, personal savings rate.

I believe that one of the first steps we as a nation must take to restore our international competitiveness is to increase our personal savings rate. It is only through our savings that we will have the pool of capital necessary for investment in new plants, new equipment, and a more productive work force.

Senator BENTSEN's bill would restore some of the tax incentives for individual retirement accounts that were eliminated by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. I strongly support restoring those tax incentives. The bill we introduce today would revive the deduction for certain IRA contributions by individuals who now cannot deduct their IRA contributions. It also offers individuals additional incentives to make IRA contributions by permitting early withdrawals from IRA's for education and home purchases.

I introduced similar legislation in May. My bill, S. 1069, also would permit early withdrawals for education and home ownership. The idea behind these early withdrawal provisions is twofold. They create an additional incentive for people to save. And they provide a source of funds for people to meet rising costs of education and housing. But while the IRA's are accumulating interest, they provide a source of funds for capital investment. And that is important to our international competitiveness.

I know there are people who ridicule the idea that we as a nation should or can pass legislation to improve our competitive position in international markets. But I believe those people are wrong; they are gambling with our future and with the future of our children. There are some things that we can do through legislation. For one, we can create an environment that is more conducive to growth than our current business conditions.

In some cases, that means reallocating our Federal spending priorities. In other cases, it means creating incentives for action by the private sector. One of the more effective means of creating incentives is through the Tax Code. That is what this legislation does. It creates tax incentives to encourage savings, to encourage investment, and to improve the productivity of the American worker.

During the Reagan administration, the game in Washington was to raise revenue without calling it a tax increase. The President had declared tax increases forbidden. So we raised taxes but called it something else. Sometimes we called it revenue enhancement, sometimes we called it compliance measures, sometimes we called it tighteners. And, in 1986, we called it tax reform.

Now I am not here to undo those bills. But I fear that in our efforts to go along with President Reagan's position against tax increases, we may have acted without enough consideration of the impact of our actions on the Nation's competitiveness. I am especially concerned that when we acted in 1986 to make the rate cuts revenue neutral, we lost some of the savings and investment incentives that would make us more competitive.

Now is the time for action to restore American competitiveness. Some of the proposals will sound familiar to you. For instance, today we are calling for tax incentives to increase the domestic savings rate and to encourage domestic investment in plant and equipment.

Look at our national savings rate. Since 1981, Congress and the administration have been talking about and trying to increase the national savings rate. But the rate has been falling. From 1960 to 1980, the national savings rate averaged 7.4 percent of GNP. In recent years, it has averaged 2.3 percent. In 1986, it was less than 2 percent of GNP. You heard me right; I said less than 2 percent. That is less than half the rate of England, less than a third that of Germany, and about 10 percent of the rate in Japan.

There are clear explanations for our relatively low national savings rate. We generally must have a reason to save rather than to consume. We save for old age or retirement; we save for emergencies; we save to buy a new house or new cars; or we save to leave something to our children or grandchildren.

But what happens if the Government has encouraged the development of good retirement systems, or if insurance takes care of emergencies, or if the availability of credit replaces savings for houses and cars. What happens is that there is no incentive to save. And that has happened to us. We have lost the incentive to save. So, we simply don't save.

The evidence on the effectiveness of the 1981 savings incentives is inconclusive. But recent work by Larry Summers of Harvard indicates that criticisms of the effectiveness of IRA's may have been premature. In fact, according to Summers, significant evidence indicates that in fact IRA's have encouraged new savings.

I find his evidence persuasive. That is why I think we need to give IRA's another chance. And because our international competitiveness depends in large part on the quality of the U.S. workforce, I am cosponsoring this legislation to allow IRA withdrawals for education. When it comes to international competitiveness, the factors of production that we must focus on are those that develop human capital and technology. We cannot compete with developing industrial nations based on labor costs or equipment costs. But we can compete based on worker skills and technology.

We cannot abandon U.S. manufacturing, but we should prepare for the certain growth in service industries. Contrary to the cynics, these jobs will not all be flipping hamburgers and taking in laundry. They will be in health care, education, retailing, and Government. And they will require higher skill levels than are required of today's jobs. Also, in the future, many jobs are likely to change with advances in technology. The pace of technological development has already created problems for us in the obsolescence of capital equipment. Treasury's Office of Depreciation Analysis is wrestling with the problem of how to depreciate equipment that becomes technologically obsolete before it physically wears out. But what about human capital. The same technological advances that make equipment obsolete also make employee skills obsolete. What are we doing about that? How many of our firms have begun to think about that problem?

The Federal Government needs to lead on this issue. But we need to recognize that basic skills will not be enough to maintain U.S. economic leadership. We also need to encourage advanced education. And we need to encourage continuing education—or retraining—so that U.S. workers are prepared for jobs that change with technological advances.

And the bill we are introducing today does that by exempting premature distributions from the 10 percent excise tax if the funds are used for education.

The second preferred use would be for first-time home buyers. As the baby boomers have reached the stage in life where they want to buy homes, they are finding that their resources are not keeping up with the cost of housing. For these individuals, the rapid increase in housing costs has quickly outpaced their ability to come up with the downpayment for a home. Our bill would make it easier for the first-time home buyer to generate the necessary savings to buy a home by exempting premature withdrawals for home buyers from the 10 percent tax.●

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am proud to cosponsor the Finance Committee chairman's bill to restore and enhance the individual retirement account [IRA]. Senator BENTSEN deserves praise for an outstanding proposal which encourages both planning for retirement while increasing our dismal savings rate.

While some who have looked at the Bentsen proposal consider it to be an alternative to lowering the capital gains rate, I look at is as an addition to the capital gains proposal. I think we can pass both proposals and in so doing stimulate both savings and investment.

There are many important provisions of the Bentsen proposal. First it restores IRA's to all working Americans at a level of at least 50 percent deductibility. Second, it allows IRA funds to be withdrawn for postsecondary education or training as well as for first home purchases. I do not know of two more dearly held goals of Americans than home ownership and educational opportunity. With this new, improved IRA program we will bring these goals within the grasp of many more Americans while, at the same time, increasing our shabby savings rate.

This country's savings rate is abysmal, and the 1980's has seen a continued worsening of an already bad situation. In 1981 the personal savings rate as a percentage of GNP was 5.2 percent, last year that figure had eroded to 3 percent and there are no encouraging signs on the horizon.

Again, I would strongly state that the IRA and capital gains proposals are not mutually exclusive. Rather they can work together in mathematical symmetry to build an even stronger economy.●

● Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I rise to support the bill to restore and expand individual retirement accounts—IRAs. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this bill and commend by colleague and friend Senator LLOYD BENTSEN for his leadership on this issue.

This legislation helps average Americans deal with three of their biggest and most fundamental economic hurdles: First, saving for retirement; second, paying for a college education; and third, being able to buy a first home.

Under this legislation, the limits created in 1986 on deducting contributions to an IRA are partly restored, so at least half would be tax deductible. Currently, the deductions are not available at all to many taxpayers and this bill corrects that. Also, in addition to use for retirement purposes, the funds could be used without penalty for higher education costs of the taxpayer and his child or to meet the down payment and closing costs of a first home.

Passing the retirement, college, first home savings legislation is a big move in the right direction to help average working Americans, If budget conditions allowed it, I would prefer it to be expanded even further. For example, it would be even better to allow full deductibility of IRA contributions for all taxpayers. It would be even better to also let grandparents, aunts and uncles, and others use their IRA to help a child's education. However, I recognize that the Federal budget can only afford so much this year. This bill is not a cure-all, but it does take some big steps forward.

I still believe that the 1986 Tax Reform Act made a big mistake when it disallowed IRA deductions for many middle income taxpayers. That was a major reason I voted against the 1986 tax bill. Unfortunately, Congress and the President threw out the baby with the bathwater when it cut back on IRA savings incentives in 1986. I am glad I voted against that. Today we can begin to correct the 1986 mistake on IRAs and do something to help average Americans save for college or a first home.

Middle income Americans have big concerns about their retirement needs, paying for college, and buying their first home. They are doing all they can to pay the monthly bills. They work hard for a living. They go to work every day in Omaha. They work on farms from dawn to dusk in Buffalo County. The don't have time to write letters to Washington. They don't have high-paid lobbyists. They don't travel to Washington on tax-deductible expense account trips to say they need more tax breaks. They are the backbone of my State and our Nation. They deserve a break. They deserve to win one in Congress, for a change. That is why I support this bill.

Finally, Mr. President, I should note that this bill has been mentioned as an alternative to a capital gains tax proposal currently being debated by the House. I want to be clear that I am not opposed as a matter of principle to changes in capital gains tax laws if they make good economic sense and are fair to taxpayers. I voted against the 1986 tax bill which raised taxes on capital gains. However, I think the particular capital gains proposal currently being considered in the House raises some serious questions. For example, it does not seem to make good ecnomic or business sense to lower capital gains rates for a short period, then automatically hike them back up again as the House version proposes. Such a policy seems more directed at short-term revenue gain, instead of the long-term economic well being of our Nation. There are other concerns, as well. However, those issues are not before us today. I will look forward to future debate in the Senate on those issues.

In summary, Mr. President, the working people of our Nation need the retirement, college, first home savings bill being introduced today. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 74—AUTHORIZING A GIFT OF EQUIPMENT AND TRAINING TO THE NEW SENATE AND SEJM IN POLAND

Mr. DOMENICI (for himself, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. DOLE, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. SIMON, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. MACK, Mr. GLENN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. FORD, Mr. KERREY, Mr. ROBB, and Mr. GRAHAM) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. CON. RES. 74

Whereas Poland is undertaking the historic process of organizing its new Sejm and Senate, the first parliament in Poland where a majority of its members were democratically elected in more than half a century;

Whereas these new citizen-legislators, from many walks of life, are taking on the tremendous responsibility of forming the legislative branch of their government without the benefit of previous legislative experience;

Whereas these new legislators are united in their commitment to dramatically reform the social and economic structure of Poland;

Whereas these new legislators are dedicated to permanently establishing individual freedom and a renewed hope and confidence for the future of Poland;

Whereas the new legislators are faced with reviving the economy and creating the necessary government entities to facilitate an efficient means of governing the country;

Whereas among the many other challenges facing Poland's Parliament over the coming months is the lack of equipment, research and legislative resources; and

Whereas the United States Congress has a well-established system for operating a legislative body and an impressive research capability in the form of the Library of Congress and the Congressional Research Service. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That—

(1) This Concurrent Resolution may be cited as the "United States Congressional Gift of Democracy to Poland Resolution".

(2) That the Speaker of the House, the Minority Leader of the House and the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate, and the Librarian of the Congress shall assign staff having expertise in software, office equipment, legislative research and parliamentary procedure and other lawmaking skills to travel to Poland. The Congressional staff assigned to this mission shall assess the training and equipment needs of the Polish Sejm and Senate, and assist Poland in developing an effective Parliament. Not later than thirty days after completing the assessment, such staff shall submit a report to the Congress and the Librarian of Congress on its findings.

(3) Upon receipt of the report of the congressional Staff, the Leadership of Congress shall endeavor to identify and secure the ways and means to implement an appropriate United States congressional gift of democracy to Poland in the form of equipment and training for the new Senate and Sejm.

(4) The Leadership is encouraged to coordinate this effort with private and public sector experts such as the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs and the National Republican Institute for International Affairs and with parliaments in Western Europe.

(5) Travel expenses incurred by the Senate and the House of Representatives to carry out subsections (2) and (3) shall be reimbursed out of the respective contingent funds of the two House of Congress in accordance with rules governing such funds.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, 1990

KENNEDY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 867

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. WILSON, Mr. KOHL, Mr. SIMON, Mr. DODD, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. CHAFEE, and Mr. LAUTENBERG) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 3015) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . (a)(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration or his designee, shall use amounts made available under paragraph (4) to make a grant to an institution of the type described in paragraph (2) for the establishment of a National Resource and Information Center for Perinatal Addiction.

(2) The grant under paragraph (1) shall be awarded, after a competitive search, to a private nonprofit institution that has an extensive background and experience in performing research on maternal substance abuse and in disseminating such information to professionals, policymakers, the general public and the media, as well as experience in providing educational services to maternal substance abusers and their exposed infants.

(3) The Center established under paragraph (1) shall—

(A) coordinate and disseminate research on maternal substance abuse, treatment options for such women and infants of such women, and prevention strategies;

(B) develop and distribute training and educational information and materials concerning maternal substance abuse;

(C) act as a clearinghouse for information on treatment programs for pregnant women who are addicted to illegal substances;

(D) develop and manage a national toll free hotline to provide information and referrals;

(E) provide policy analysis and program evaluation to the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

(F) provide any other services designed to carry out the purposes of this subsection.

(4) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this paragraph, $2,500,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1991.

(b) Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 509H. GRANTS FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT FOR PREGNANT AND POST-PARTUM WOMEN.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration or his designee, shall make grants to entities to provide assistance to outpatient and residential substance abuse treatment programs relating to pregnant and postpartum women and their infants, that meet the requirements of subsection (b).

"(b) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) DISTRIBUTION.—In making grants under subsection (a), the Administrator shall ensure that grants are reasonably distributed among projects that provide outpatient and residential treatment.

"(2) SERVICES.—An entity shall not be eligible for a grant under subsection (a) unless such entity provides the Administrator with an assurance that such entity will use assistance provided under such grant to provide, arrange for the provision of, or refer individuals to, services that shall include—

"(A) intervention services for pregnant and post-partum women, including—

"(i) substance abuse and addiction treatment services;

"(ii) support services (such as child care and transportation services);

"(iii) education and skill building services (such as parenting and job seeking skill services);

"(iv) integration and coordination of substance abuse treatment services with prenatal or post-partum health care services;

"(v) innovative methods of outreach to identify and recruit target populations for services early in the pregnancy of individuals of such populations;

"(vi) medical screening procedures of pregnant women for past and present substance use and abuse; and

"(vii) after care services;

"(B) interventions where infants are at risk, including—

"(i) direct intervention, treatment, or rehabilitation of infants, which may include other siblings, to reduce or prevent the impact of maternal substance abuse on such children; and

"(ii) supportive services for biologic or foster parents of infants affected by maternal substance abuse;

"(C) service delivery strategies that may include—

"(i) strategies for the coordination, for purposes of identification or service delivery, of family violence and homeless shelter programs, programs under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, and section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, crisis pregnancy centers programs, public housing programs, and prison programs, with other likely points of access for high risk women;

"(ii) strategies concerning the involvement of significant others (such as male partners of pregnant women) as direct intervention targets or strategies to aid in the outreach and service delivery processes for women;

"(iii) strategies for co-locating multiple facilities to facilitate the delivery of services; and

"(iii) innovative strategies (such as case management) to ensure the coordinated utilization of generally unrelated service systems; and

"(D) other services necessary to improve pregnancy outcomes, reduce substance abuse among women of childbearing age, and increase the stability of the family home environment.

"(c) APPLICATION.—The Administrator shall not make a grant under subsection (a) unless—

"(1) an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary;

"(2) with respect to carrying out the purpose for which the grant is to be made, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary;

"(3) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Administrator determines to be necessary to carry out this section; and

"(4) the application contains an assurance that the applicant will provide funds, other than Federal funds, in an amount that is not less than 10 percent of the amount of the grant under subsection (a).

"(d) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the Secretary to discriminate in the awarding of grants under subsection (a) against applicants that propose or provide residential outpatient rehabilitation services under applicable requirements of State law, including applicants that provide services to substance abusing pregnant and post-partum women that receive treatment by order of a court or other appropriate public agency, so long as all such applications include measures that encourage abusing pregnant and post-partum women to seek prenatal care and rehabilitation.

"(f) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $50,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal year 1991.".

KENNEDY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NOS. 868 AND 869

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BIDEN, and Mr. WILSON) proposed two amendments to the bill H.R. 3015, supra; as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 868

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . (a) The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101) is amended by adding after section 8 the following new subsection:

"SEC. 8A. EMERGENCY PROTECTIVE CHILD SERVICES GRANTS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible entities to enable such entities to provide services to children whose parents are substance abusers.

"(b) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive a grant under this section shall be State or local agencies that are responsible for administering protective child services or child abuse intervention services. Such agencies shall include those agencies responsible for administering foster care, child welfare, child protective services, and child abuse intervention programs.

"(c) APPLICATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an entity shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(2) ASSURANCE OF USE.—An application submitted under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) contain an assurance that the applicant operates in a geographic area where substance abuse has placed substantial strains on social service and law enforcement agencies and has resulted in substantial increases in the need for services that cannot be met without funds available under this section;

"(B) identify the responsible agency or agencies that will be involved in the use of funds provided under this section;

"(C) contain a description of the emergency situation with regard to children of substance abusers who need services of the type described in this section;

"(D) contain a plan for improving the delivery of such services to such children;

"(E) contain assurances that such services will be provided in a comprehensive multidisciplinary and coordinated manner; and

"(F) contain any additional information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

"(d) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds received by an entity under this section part shall be used to improve the delivery of services to children whose parents are substance abusers. Such services may include—

"(1) the hiring of additional personnel by the entity to reduce caseloads;

"(2) the provision of additional training for personnel to improve their ability to provide emergency child protective services related to substance abuse by the parents of such children;

"(3) the provision of expanded services to deal with family crises created by substance abuse;

"(4) the recruitment of additional foster care families;

"(5) the recruitment of additional adoptive families; and

"(6) the establishment or improvement of coordination between the agency administering the grant; and—

"(A) child protection and welfare organizations;

"(B) hospitals and health care providers;

"(C) public health and mental health professionals;

"(D) judicial and law enforcement officers;

"(E) child advocates;

"(F) public educational institutions;

"(G) community-based organizations that serve substance abusing parents, including pregnant and post-partum females and their infants;

"(H) public housing officials;

"(I) providers of shelter to abused and homeless females and families; and

"(J) parents and representatives of parent groups.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section, $40,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in each subsequent fiscal year.".

(b)(1) Section 402(A) of the Joint Resolution entitled "A Joint Resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes", (approved October 12, 1984, Public Law 98-473, 98 Stat. 2198, 42 U.S.C. 5116(d) is amended—

(A) by inserting after paragraph (3), the following new paragraph:

"(4) parental substance abuse places children at great risk of abuse and neglect;"; and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (5), (6), (7), and (8) respectively.

(2) Section 405(4)(A) of such Act (98 Stat. 2198, 42 U.S.C. 5116c) is amended by inserting "services to substance abusing parents, including pregnant and post-partum women," after "perinatal bonding.".

AMENDMENT No. 869

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . Title V of such Act is amended by inserting after section 508 (42 U.S.C. 290aa-6) the following new section:

"SEC. 508B. GRANTS FOR TRAINING OF DRUG TREATMENT PROFESSIONALS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible institutions to enable such institutions to provide training services to increase the supply of drug treatment professionals.

"(b) ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS.—Institutions eligible to receive a grant under this section shall include medical schools, schools of osteopathy, school of nursing, schools of public health, school of chiropractic services, schools of social work, and other appropriate institutions that submit an application in accordance with subsection (c).

"(c) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an eligible institution shall submit an application to be Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) FISCAL YEAR 1990.—The Secretary shall use amounts appropriated under section 508 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, to carry out this section in fiscal year 1990.

"(2) SUBSEQUENT FISCAL YEARS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section in each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992, such sums as may be necessary.".

GRAMM (AND PRESSLER) AMENDMENT NO. 870

Mr. GRAMM (for himself and Mr. PRESSLER) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 3015, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . DRUG-FREE SCHOOLS AND CAMPUSES.

(a)(1) Title XII of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section 1212 to read as follows:

"DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE PREVENTION

"SEC. 1212. (a) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, no institution of higher education shall be eligible to receive funds or any other form of financial assistance under any Federal program, including participation in any federally funded or guaranteed student loan programs, unless it certifies to the Secretary that it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol by students and employees that, at a minimum, includes—

"(1) the annual distribution to each student and employee of—

"(A) standards of conduct that clearly prohibit, at a minimum, the unlawful possession, use, or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol by students and employees on its property or as part of any of its activities;

"(B) a description of the applicable legal sanctions under local, State, or Federal law for the unlawful possession or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol;

"(C) a description of the health risks associated with the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol;

"(D) a description of any drug or alcohol counseling, treatment, or rehabilitation programs that are available to employees or students; and

"(E) a clear statement that the institution will impose sanctions on students and employees (consistent with local, State, and Federal law), and a description of those sanctions, up to and including expulsion or termination of employment and referral for prosecution, for violations of the employment and referral for prosecution, for violations of the standards of conduct required by paragraph (1)(A); and

"(2) a biennial review by the institution of its program to—

"(A) determine its effectiveness and implement changes to the program if they are needed, and

"(B) ensure that the sanctions required by paragraph (1)(E) are consistently enforced.

"(b) Each institution of higher education that provides the certification required by subsection (a) shall, upon request, make available to the Secretary and to the public a copy of each item required by subsection (a)(1) as well as the results of the biennial review required by subsection (a)(2).

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall publish regulations to implement and enforce the provisions of this section, including regulations that provide for—

"(A) the periodic review of a representative sample of programs required by subsection (a); and

"(B) sanctions, up to and including the termination of any form of financial assistance, for institutions of higher education that fail to implement their programs or to consistently enforce their sanctions.

"(2) The sanctions required by subsection (a)(1)(E) may include the completion of an appropriate rehabilitation program.".

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

(b)(1) Part D of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 (20 U.S.C. 3171 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section 5145 to read as follows:

"CERTIFICATION OF DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE PREVENTION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 5145. (a) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, no local educational agency shall be eligible to receive funds or any other form of financial assistance under any Federal program unless it certifies to the State educational agency that it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and alcohol by students or employees that, at a minimum, includes—

"(1) mandatory, age-appropriate, developmentally-based drug and alcohol education and prevention programs (which address the legal, social, and health consequences of drug and alcohol use and which provide information about effective techniques for resisting peer pressure to use illicit drugs or alcohol) for students in all grades of the schools operated or served by the applicant, from early childhood level through grade 12;

"(2) conveying to students that the use of illicit drugs and alcohol is wrong and harmful;

"(3) standards of conduct that are applicable to students and employees in all the applicant's schools and that clearly prohibit, at a minimum, the possession, use, or distribution of illicit drugs and alcohol by students and employees on school premises or as part of any of its activities;

"(4) a clear statement that sanctions (consistent with local, State, and Federal law), up to and including expulsion or termination of employment and referral for prosecution, will be imposed on students and employees who violate the standards of conduct required by paragraph (3) and a description of those sanctions;

"(5) information about any available drug and alcohol counseling and rehabilitation programs that are available to students and employees;

"(6) a requirement that parents, students, and employees be given a copy of the standards of conduct required by paragraph (3) and the statement of sanctions required by paragraph (4);

"(7) notifying parents, students, and employees that compliance with the standards of conduct required by paragraph (3) is mandatory; and

"(8) a biennial review by the applicant of its program to—

"(I) determine its effectiveness and implement changes to the program if they are needed; and

"(II) ensure that the sanctions required by paragraph (4) are consistently enforced.

"(b) Each local educational agency that provides the certification required by subsection (a) shall, upon request, make available to the Secretary, the State educational agency, and to the public full information about the elements of its program required by subsection (a), including the results of its biennial review.

"(c) Each State educational agency shall certify to the Secretary that it has adopted and has implemented a program to prevent the use of illicit drugs and the abuse of alcohol by its students and employees that is consistent with the program required by subsection (a) of this section. The State educational agency shall, upon request, make available to the Secretary and to the public full information about the elements of its program.

"(d)(1) The Secretary shall publish regulations to implement and enforce the provisions of this section, including regulations that provide for—

"(A) the periodic review by State educational agencies of a representative sample of programs required by subsection (a); and

"(B) sanctions, up to and including the termination of any form of financial assistance, for local educational agencies that fail to implement their programs or to consistently enforce their sanctions.

"(2) The sanctions required by subsection (a)(1)(4) may include the completion of an appropriate rehabilitation program.".

(2) The Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 is further amended in section 5126(c)(2) by—

(A) striking out subparagraphs (E), (F), and (G); and

(B) redesignating subparagraphs (H) through (M) as subparagraphs (E) through (J), respectively—

(3) The provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

HOLLINGS (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 871

Mr. DANFORTH (for Mr. HOLLINGS), (for himself, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. EXON, Mr. DOLE, Mr. WILSON, Mr. LOTT, Mr. BOND, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. WARNER, Mr. COATS, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. HATCH, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. BURNS, and Mr. CHAFEE) proposed an amendment to amendment 870 proposed by Mr. GRAMM (and Mr. PRESSLER) to the bill H.R. 3015, supra, as follows:

At the end of the amendment add the following new subsection:

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, this section shall not take effect until enactment of a law containing the following provisions:

SEC. 1. (a) This section may be cited as the "Transportation Employee Testing Act of 1989".

(b) The Congress finds that—

(1) alcohol abuse and illegal drug use pose significant dangers to the safety and welfare of the Nation;

(2) millions of the Nation's citizens utilize transportation by aircraft, railroads, trucks, and buses, and depend on the operators of aircraft, railroads, trucks, and buses to perform in a safe and responsible manner;

(3) the greatest efforts must be expended to eliminate the abuse of alcohol and use of illegal drugs, whether on duty or off duty, by those individuals who are involved in the operation of aircraft, railroads, trucks, and buses;

(4) the use of alcohol and illegal drugs has been demonstrated to affect significantly the performance of individuals, and has been proven to have been a critical factor in transportation accidents;

(5) the testing of uniformed personnel of the Armed Forces has shown that the most effective deterrent to abuse of alcohol and use of illegal drugs is increased testing, including random testing;

(6) adequate safeguards can be implemented to ensure that testing for abuse of alcohol or use of illegal drugs is performed in a manner which protects an individual's right of privacy, ensures that no individual is harassed by being treated differently from other individuals, and ensures that no individual's reputation or career development is unduly threatened or harmed; and

(7) rehabilitation is a critical component of any testing program for abuse of alcohol or use of illegal drugs, and should be made available to individuals, as appropriate.

(c)(1) Title VI of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 App. U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"ALCOHOL AND CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES TESTING

"TESTING PROGRAM

"SEC. 613. (a)(1) The Administrator shall, in the interest of aviation safety, prescribe regulations within twelve months after the date of enactment of this section. Such regulations shall establish a program which requires air carriers and foreign air carriers to conduct preemployment, reasonable suspicion, random, and post-accident testing of airmen, crewmembers, airport security screening contract personnel, and other air carrier employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator) for use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance. The Administrator may also prescribe regulations, as the Administrator considers appropriate in the interest of safety, for the conduct of periodic recurring testing of such employees for such use in violation of law or Federal regulation.

"(2) The Administrator shall establish a program applicable to employees of the Federal Aviation Administration whose duties include responsibility for safety-sensitive functions. Such program shall provide for preemployment, reasonable suspicion, random, and post-accident testing for use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance. The Administrator may also prescribe regulations, as the Administrator considers appropriate in the interest of safety, for the conduct of periodic recurring testing of such employees for such use in violation of law or Federal regulations.

"(3) In prescribing regulations under the programs required by this subsection, the Administrator shall require, as the Administrator considers appropriate, the suspension or revocation of any certificate issued to such an individual, or the disqualification or dismissal of any such individual, in accordance with the provisions of this section, in any instance where a test conducted and confirmed under this section indicates that such individual has used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance.

"PROHIBITION ON SERVICE

"(b)(1) No person may use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance after the date of enactment of this section and serve as an airman, crewmember, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employee responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), or employee of the Federal Aviation Administration with responsibility for safety-sensitive functions.

"(2) No individual who is determined to have used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance after the date of enactment of this section shall serve as an airman, crewmember, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employee responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), or employee of the Federal Aviation Administration with responsibility for safety-sensitive functions unless such individual has completed a program of rehabilitation described in subsection (c) of this section.

"(3) Any such individual determined by the Administrator to have used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance after the date of enactment of this section who—

"(A) engaged in such use while on duty;

"(B) prior to such use had undertaken or completed a rehabilitation program described in subsection (c) of this section;

"(C) following such determination refuses to undertake such rehabilitation program; or

"(D) following such determination fails to complete such a rehabilitation program, shall not be permitted to perform the duties relating to air transportation which such individual performed prior to the date of such determination.

"PROGRAM FOR REHABILITATION

"(c)(1) The Administrator shall prescribe regulations setting forth requirements for rehabilitation programs which at a minimum provide for the identification and opportunity for treatment of employees referred to in subsection (a)(1) of this section in need of assistance in resolving problems with the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or controlled substances. Each air carrier and foreign air carrier is encouraged to make such a program available to all of its employees in addition to those employees referred to in subsection (a)(1) of this section. The Administrator shall determine the circumstances under which such employees shall be required to participate in such a program. Nothing in this subsection shall preclude any air carrier or foreign air carrier from establishing a program under this subsection in cooperation with any other air carrier or foreign air carrier.

"(2) The Administrator shall establish and maintain a rehabilitation program which at a minimum provides for the identification and opportunity for treatment of those employees of the Federal Aviation Administration whose duties include responsibility for safety-sensitive functions who are in need of assistance in resolving problems with the use of alcohol or controlled substances.

"PROCEDURES

"(d) In establishing the program required under subsection (a) of this section, the Administrator shall develop requirements which shall—

"(1) promote, to the maximum extent practicable, individual privacy in the collection of specimen samples;

"(2) with respect to laboratories and testing procedures for controlled substances, incorporate the Department of Health and Human Services scientific and technical guidelines dated April 11, 1988, and any subsequent amendments thereto, including mandatory guidelines which—

"(A) establish comprehensive standards for all aspects of laboratory controlled substances testing and laboratory procedures to be applied in carrying out this section, including standards which require the use of the best available technology for ensuring the full reliability and accuracy of controlled substances tests and strict procedures governing the chain of custody of specimen samples collected for controlled substances testing;

"(B) establish the minimum list of controlled substances for which individuals may be tested; and

"(C) establish appropriate standards and procedures for periodic review of laboratories and criteria for certification and revocation of certification of laboratories to perform controlled substances testing in carrying out this section;

"(3) require that all laboratories involved in the controlled substances testing of any individual under this section shall have the capability and facility, at such laboratory, of performing screening and confirmation tests;

"(4) provide that all tests which indicate the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance by any individual shall be confirmed by a scientifically recognized method of testing capable of providing quantitative data regarding alcohol or a controlled substance;

"(5) provide that each specimen sample be subdivided, secured, and labelled in the presence of the tested individual and that a portion thereof be retained in a secure manner to prevent the possibility of tampering, so that in the event the individual's confirmation test results are positive the individual has an opportuntiy to have the retained portion assayed by a confirmation test done independently at a second certified laboratory if the individual requests the independent test within 3 days after being advised of the results of the confirmation test;

"(6) ensure appropriate safeguards for testing to detect and quantify alcohol in breath and body fluid samples, including urine and blood, through the development of regulations as may be necessary and in consultation with the Department of Health and Human Services;

"(7) provide for the confidentiality of test results and medical information (other than information relating to alcohol or a controlled substance) of employees, except that the provisions of this paragraph shall not preclude the use of test results for the orderly imposition of appropriate sanctions under this section; and

"(8) ensure that employees are selected for tests by nondiscriminatory and impartial methods, so that no employee is harassed by being treated differently from other employees in similar circumstances.

"EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS AND REGULATIONS

"(e)(1) No State or local government shall adopt or have in effect any law, rule, regulation, ordinance, standard, or order that is inconsistent with the regulations promulgated under this section, except that the regulations promulgated under this section shall not be construed to preempt provisions of State criminal law which impose sanctions for reckless conduct leading to actual loss of life, injury or damage to property, whether the provisions apply specifically to employees of an air carrier or foreign air carrier, or to the general public.

"(2) Nothing in this section shall be construed to restrict the discretion of the Administrator to continue in force, amend, or further supplement any regulations issued before the date of enactment of this section that govern the use of alcohol and controlled substances by airmen, crewmembers, airport security screening contract personnel, air carrier employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Administrator), or employees of the Federal Aviation Administration with responsibility for safety-sensitive functions.

"(3) In prescribing regulations under this section, the Administrator shall only establish requirements applicable to foreign air carriers that are consistent with the international obligations of the United States, and the Administrator shall take into consideration any applicable laws and regulations of foreign countries. The Secretary of State and the Secretary of Transportation, jointly, shall call on the member countries of the International Civil Aviation Organization to strengthen and enforce existing standards to prohibit the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance by crewmembers in international civil aviation.

"DEFINITION

"(f) For the purposes of this section, the term 'controlled substance' means any substance under section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)) specified by the Administrator.".

(2) That portion of the table of contents of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 relating to title VI is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Sec. 613. Alcohol and controlled substances testing.
"(a) Testing program.
"(b) Prohibition on service.
"(c) Program for rehabilitation.
"(d) Procedures.
"(e) Effect on other laws and regulations.
"(f) Definition.".

(d) Section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(r)(1) In the interest of safety, the Secretary shall, within twelve months after the date of enactment of this subsection, issue rules, regulations, standards, and orders relating to alcohol and drug use in railroad operations. Such regulations shall establish a program which—

"(A) requires railroads to conduct preemployment, reasonable suspicion, random, and post-accident testing of all railroad employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Secretary) for use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance;

"(B) requires, as the Secretary considers appropriate, disqualification for an established period of time or dismissal of any employee determined to have used or to have been impaired by alcohol while on duty; and

"(C) requires, as the Secretary considers appropriate, disqualification for an established period of time or dismissal of any employee determined to have used a controlled substance, whether on duty or not on duty, except as permitted for medical purposes by law and any rules, regulations, standards, or orders issued under this title.

The Secretary may also issue rules, regulations, standards, and orders, as the Secretary considers appropriate in the interest of safety, requiring railroads to conduct periodic recurring testing of railroad employees responsible for such safety-sensitive functions, for use of alcohol or a controlled substance in violation of law or Federal regulation. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to restrict the discretion of the Secretary to continue in force, amend, or further supplement any rules, regulations, standards, and orders governing the use of alcohol and controlled substances in railroad operations issued before the date of enactment of this subsection.

"(2) In carrying out the provisions of this subsection, the Secretary shall develop requirements which shall—

"(A) promote, to the maximum extent practicable, individual privacy in the collection of specimen samples;

"(B) with respect to laboratories and testing procedures for controlled substances, incorporate the Department of Health and Human Services scientific and technical guidelines dated April 11, 1988, and any subsequent amendments thereto, including mandatory guidelines which—

"(i) establish comprehensive standards for all aspects of laboratory controlled substances testing and laboratory procedures to be applied in carrying out this subsection, including standards which require the use of the best available technology for ensuring the full reliability and accuracy of controlled substances tests and strict procedures governing the chain of custody of specimen samples collected for controlled substances testing;

"(ii) establish the minimum list of controlled substances for which individuals may be tested; and

"(iii) establish appropriate standards and procedures for periodic review of laboratories and criteria for certification and revocation of certification of laboratories to perform controlled substances testing in carrying out this subsection;

"(C) require that all laboratories involved in the controlled substances testing of any employee under this subsection shall have the capability and facility, at such laboratory, of performing screening and confirmation tests;

"(D) provide that all tests which indicate the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance by any employee shall be confirmed by a scientifically recognized method of testing capable of providing quantitative data regarding alcohol or a controlled substance;

"(E) provide that each specimen sample be subdivided, secured, and labelled in the presence of the tested individual and that a portion thereof be retained in a secure manner to prevent the possibility of tampering, so that in the event the individual's confirmation test results are positive the individual has an opportunity to have the retained portion assayed by a confirmation test done independently at a second certified laboratory if the individual requests the independent test within 3 days after being advised of the results of the confirmation test;

"(F) ensure appropriate safeguards for testing to detect and quantify alcohol in breath and body fluid samples, including urine and blood, through the development of regulations as may be necessary and in consultation with the Department of Health and Human Services;

"(G) provide for the confidentiality of test results and medical information (other than information relating to alcohol or a controlled substance) of employees, except that the provisions of this subparagraph shall not preclude the use of test results for the orderly imposition of appropriate sanctions under this subsection; and

"(H) ensure that employees are selected for tests by nondiscriminatory and impartial methods, so that no employee is harassed by being treated differently from other employees in similar circumstances.

"(3) The Secretary shall issue rules, regulations, standards, or orders setting forth requirements for rehabilitation programs which at a minimum provide for the identification and opportunity for treatment of railroad employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions (as determined by the Secretary) in need of assistance in resolving problems with the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance. Each railroad is encouraged to make such a program available to all of its employees in addition to those employees responsible for safety-sensitive functions. The Secretary shall determine the circumstances under which such employees shall be required to participate in such program. Nothing in this paragraph shall preclude a railroad from establishing a program under this paragraph in cooperation with any other railroad.

"(4) In carrying out the provisions of this subsection, the Secretary shall only establish requirements that are consistent with the international obligations of the United States, and the Secretary shall take into consideration any applicable laws and regulations of foreign countries.

"(5) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'controlled substance' means any substance under section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)) specified by the Secretary.".

(e)(1) The Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 (49 App. U.S.C. 2701 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"SEC. 12020. ALCOHOL AND CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES TESTING.

"(a) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall, in the interest of commercial motor vehicle safety, issue regulations within twelve months after the date of enactment of this section. Such regulations shall establish a program which requires motor carriers to conduct preemployment, reasonable suspicion, random, and post-accident testing of the operators of commercial motor vehicles for use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance. The Secretary may also issue regulations, as the Secretary considers appropriate in the interest of safety, for the conduct of periodic recurring testing of such operators for such use in violation of law or Federal regulation.

"(b) TESTING.—

"(1) POST-ACCIDENT TESTING.—In issuing such regulations, the Secretary shall require that post-accident testing of the operator of a commercial motor vehicle be conducted in the case of any accident involving a commercial motor vehicle in which occurs loss of human life, or, as determined by the Secretary, other serious accidents involving bodily injury or significant property damage.

"(2) TESTING AS PART OF MEDICAL EXAMINATION.—Nothing in subsection (a) of this section shall preclude the Secretary from providing in such regulations that such testing be conducted as part of the medical examination required by subpart E of part 391 of title 49, Code of Federal Regulations, with respect to those operators of commercial motor vehicles to whom such part is applicable.

"(c) PROGRAM FOR REHABILITATION.—The Secretary shall issue regulations setting forth requirements for rehabilitation programs which provide for the identification and opportunity for treatment of operators of commercial motor vehicles who are determined to have used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance. The Secretary shall determine the circumstances under which such opertors shall be required to participate in such program. Nothing in this subsection shall preclude a motor carrier from establishing a program under this subsection in cooperation with any other motor carrier.

"(d) PROCEDURES FOR TESTING.—In establishing the program required under subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary shall develop requirements which shall—

"(1) promote, to the maximum extent practicable, individual privacy in the collection of specimen samples:

"(2) with respect to laboratories and testing procedures for controlled substances, incorporate the Department of Health and Human Services scientific and technical guidelines dated April 11, 1988, and any subsequent amendments thereto, including mandatory guidelines which—

"(A) establish comprehensive standards for all aspects of laboratory controlled substances testing and laboratory procedures to be applied in carrying out this section, including standards which require the use of the best available technology for ensuring the full reliablity and accuracy of controlled substances tests and strict procedures governing the chain of custody of specimen samples collected for controlled substances testing;

"(B) establish the minimum list of controlled substances for which individuals may be tested; and

"(C) establish appropriate standards and procedures for periodic review of laboratories and criteria for certification and revocation of certification of laboratories to perform controlled substances testing in carrying out this section;

"(3) require that all laboratories involved in the testing of any individual under this section shall have the capability and facility, at such laboratory, of performing screening and confirmation tests;

"(4) provide that all tests which indicate the use, in violation of law or Federal regulation, of alcohol or a controlled substance by any individual shall be confirmed by a scientifically recognized method of testing capable of providing quantitative data regarding alcohol or a controlled substance;

"(5) provide that each specimen sample be subdivided, secured, and labelled in the presence of the tested individual and that a portion thereof be retained in a secure manner to prevent the possibility of tampering, so that in the event the individual's confirmation test results are positive the individual has an opportunity to have the retained portion assayed by a confirmation test done independently at a second certified laboratory if the individual requests the independent test within 3 days after being advised of the results of the confirmation test;

"(6) ensure appropriate safeguards for testing to detect and quantify alcohol in breath and body fluid samples, including urine and blood, through the development of regulations as may be necessary and in consultation with the Department of Health and Human Services;

"(7) provide for the confidentiality of test results and medical information (other than information relating to alcohol or a controlled substance) of employees, except that the provisions of this paragraph shall not preclude the use of test results for the orderly imposition of appropriate sanctions under this section; and

"(8) ensure that employees are selected for tests by nondiscriminatory and impartial methods, so that no employee is harassed by being treated differently from other employees in similar circumstances.

"(e) EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS AND REGULATIONS.—

"(1) STATE AND LOCAL LAW AND REGULATIONS.—No State or local government shall adopt or have in effect any law, rule, regulation, ordinance, standard, or order that is inconsistent with the regulations issued under this section, except that the regulations issued under this section shall not be construed to preempt provisions of State criminal law which impose sanctions for reckless conduct leading to actual loss of life, injury, or damage to property, whether the provisions apply specifically to commercial motor vehicle employees, or to the general public.

"(2) OTHER REGULATIONS ISSUED BY SECRETARY.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to restrict the discretion of the Secretary to continue in force, amend, or further supplement any regulations governing the use of alcohol or controlled substances by commercial motor vehicle employees issued before the date of enactment of this section.

"(3) INTERNATIONAL OBLIGATIONS.—In issuing regulations under this section, the Secretary shall only establish requirements that are consistent with the international obligations of the United States, and the Secretary shall take into consideration any applicable laws and regulations of foreign countries.

"(f) APPLICATION OF PENALTIES.—

"(1) EFFECT ON OTHER PENALTIES.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to supersede any penalty applicable to the operator of a commercial motor vehicle under this title or any other provision of law.

"(2) DETERMINATION OF SANCTIONS.—The Secretary shall determine appropriate sanctions for commercial motor vehicle operators who are determined, as a result of tests conducted and confirmed under this section, to have used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance but are not under the influence of alcohol or a controlled substance, as provided in this title.

"(g) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'controlled substance' means any substance under section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)) specified by the Secretary.".

(2) The table of contents of the Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-570; 100 Stat. 5223) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Sec. 12020. Alcohol and controlled substances testing.".

(f)(1) The Secretary shall design within nine months after the date of enactment of this subsection, and implement within fifteen months after the date of enactment of this subsection, a pilot test program for the purpose of testing the operators of commercial motor vehicles on a random basis to determine whether an operator has used, in violation of law or Federal regulation, alcohol or a controlled substance. The pilot test program shall be administered as part of the Motor Carrier Safety Assistance Program.

(2) The Secretary shall solicit the participation of States which are interested in participating in such program and shall select four States to participate in the program.

(3) The Secretary shall ensure that the States selected pursuant to this section are representative of varying geographical and population characteristics of the Nation and that the selection takes into consideration the historical geographical incidence of commercial motor vehicle accidents involving loss of human life.

(4) The pilot program authorized by this section shall continue for a period of one year. The Secretary shall consider alternative methodologies for implementing a system of random testing of operators of commercial motor vehicles.

(5) Not later than thirty months after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Congress a comprehensive report setting forth the results of the pilot program conducted under this subsection. Such report shall include any recommendations of the Secretary concerning the desirability and implementation of a system for the random testing of operators of commercial motor vehicles.

(6) For purposes of carrying out this subsection, there shall be available to the Secretary $5,000,000 from funds made available to carry out section 404 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (49 App. U.S.C. 2304) for fiscal year 1990.

(7) For purposes of this subsection, the term "commercial motor vehicle" shall have the meaning given to such term in section 12019(6) of the Commercial Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1986 (49 App. U.S.C. 2716(6)).

COATS AMENDMENT NO. 872

Mr. COATS proposed an amendment to amendment No. 870 proposed by Mr. GRAMM (and Mr. PRESSLER) to the bill H.R. 3015, supra; as follows:

At the end of the amendment insert the following new section: "No local educational agency shall use any of the funds which are released by this section unless funds are made available for each fiscal year to the chief executive officer of a State which may be used with existing power for random drug testing programs for students voluntarily participating in extracurricular activities and using existing power such testing is done only in schools which voluntarily choose to participate in such a program.".

WARNER AMENDMENT NO. 873

Mr. WARNER proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 3015, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place, add the following:

SEC. . AMENDMENT RELATING TO THE SPECIAL FORFEITURE FUND.

(a) ASSETS FORFEITURE FUND AMENDMENT.—Section 524(c)(9) of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(9) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as necessary for the purposes described in subparagraphs (A)(ii), (B), (C), (F), and (G) of paragraph (1). For each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, the Attorney General shall transfer not to exceed $150,000,000 in unobligated amounts available in the Fund to the Special Forfeiture Fund: Provided, That such amounts will be transferred on a quarterly basis: Provided further, That an amount not to exceed $15,000,000 or, if determined by the Attorney General to be necessary to meet asset specific expenses, an amount equal to one-tenth of the previous year's obligations, may be retained in the Fund and remain available for appropriation.".

(b) SPECIAL FORFEITURE FUND AMENDMENT.—Section 6073(b) of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) DEPOSITS.—In each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, there shall be transferred to and deposited in the Fund, from the Department of Justice Assets Forfeiture Fund pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 524(c)(9), not to exceed $150,000,000: Provided, That amounts specified in the second provisio of said section may be retained in the Assets Forfeiture Fund and remain available for appropriation.".

Mr. WARNER (for himself, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. WILSON, Mr. ROBB, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. THURMOND, Ms. MIKULSKI, and Mr. KOHL) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 3015, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate section in the amendment, add the following new section:

(a) section 511(e)(3) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881(e)(3)) is amended by—

(1) striking subparagraph (B);

(2) striking the dash and "(A)"; and

(3) striking "; and" and inserting a period.

(b) Section 6077 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 is amended by striking subsection (c).

(c) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective with respect to fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1990.

CRANSTON (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 875

Mr. CRANSTON (for himself, Mr. WILSON, Mr. MOYNIHAN, and Mr. GRAHAM) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 3015, supra, as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment, insert the following: "Provided, That, none of the funds made available under this Act for the Office of National Drug Control Policy from the special forfeiture fund may be used by the Director of National Drug Control Policy after February 1, 1990, if the Director has not by that date designated high-intensity drug trafficking areas pursuant to section 1005(c) of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690).".

DOLE AMENDMENT NOS. 876 AND 877

Mr. DOLE proposed two amendments to the bill H.R. 3015, supra, as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 876

At the appropriate place, add the following:

SEC. . (a) Title XIX of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting after section 1916A (42 U.S.C. 300x-4a) the following new section:

"SEC. 1916B. STATEWIDE DRUG TREATMENT PLAN.

"(a) NATURE OF PLAN.—To receive the drug abuse portion of its allotment for a fiscal year under section 1912A, a State shall develop, implement, and submit, as part of the application required by section 1916(a), an approved statewide Drug Treatment Plan, prepared according to regulations promulgated by the Secretary, that shall contain—

"(1) a single, designated State agency for formulating and implementing the Statewide Drug Treatment Plan;

"(2) a description of the mechanism that shall be used to assess the needs for drug treatment in localities throughout the State including the presentation of relevant data;

"(3) a description of a Statewide plan that shall be implemented to expand treatment capacity and overcome obstacles that restrict the expansion of treatment capacity (such as zoning ordinances), or an explanation of why such a plan is unnecessary;

"(4) a description of performance-based criteria that shall be used to assist in the allocating of funds to drug treatment facilities receiving assistance under this subpart;

"(5) a description of the drug-free patient and workplace programs, that must include some form of drug testing, to be utilized in drug treatment facilities and programs;

"(6) a description of the mechanism that shall be used to make funding allocations under this subpart;

"(7) a description of the actions that shall be taken to improve the referral of drug users to treatment facilities that offer the most appropriate treatment modality;

"(8) a description of the program of training that shall be implemented for employees of treatment facilities receiving Federal funds, designed to permit such employees to stay abreast of the latest and most effective treatment techniques;

"(9) a description of the plan that shall be implemented to coordinate drug treatment facilities with other social, health, correctional and vocational services in order to assist or properly refer those patients in need of such additional services; and

"(10) a description of the plan that will be implemented to expand and improve efforts to contact and treat expectant women who use drugs and to provide appropriate follow-up care to their affected newborns.

"(b) SUBMISSION OF PLAN.—The plan required by subsection (a) shall be submitted to the Secretary annually for review and approval. The Secretary shall have the authority to review and approve or disapprove such State plans, and to propose changes to such plans.

"(c) SUBMISSION OF PROGRESS REPORTS.—Each State shall submit reports, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary may, from time to time, require, and shall comply with such additional provisions as the Secretary may from time to time find necessary to verify the accuracy of such reports and not overly burdensome on the State.

"(d) WAIVER OF PLAN REQUIREMENT.—At the discretion of the Secretary, the Secretary may waive any or all of the requirements of this section on the written request of a State, except that such waiver shall not be granted unless the State implements an alternative treatment plan that fulfills the objectives of this section.

"(e) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'drug abuse portion' means the amount of a State's allotment under section 1912A that is required by this subpart, or by any other provision of law, to be used for programs or activities relating to drug abuse.".

(b)(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall promulgate regulations necessary to carry out section 1916B of the Public Health Service Act (as added by subsection (a)) not later than 6 months following the date of enactment of this section.

(2)(A) Sections 1916B (a)(4) and (a)(5) of such Act (as added by subsection (a)) shall become effective on October 1, of the second fiscal year beginning after the date that final regulations under paragraph (1) are published in the Federal Register.

(B) The remaining provision of such section 1916B shall become effective beginning on October 1, of the first fiscal year beginning after the date final regulations under paragraph (1) are published in the Federal Register.

AMENDMENT No. 877

At the appropriate place, insert:

SEC. . WAIVER AUTHORITY FOR INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS.

(a) Funds appropriated to carry out the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended, or the Arms Export Control Act may be made available for any narcotics-related activities in Colombia, Bolivia, and Peru to carry out any provisions of such Acts notwithstanding the provisions of:

(1) Section 620(q) or section 660 of the Foreign Assistance Act; or

(2) Section 518 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Appropriations Act, 1989, or any other provision that similarly restricts the furnishing of assistance to countries in default on payment to the United States of principal or interest on any loan.

MITCHELL (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 878

Mr. BIDEN (for Mr. MITCHELL), (for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. BIDEN, and Mr. SIMPSON) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 3015, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new sections:

SEC. . Of amounts made available under this Act, $462,584,000 shall be used for the block grant program under part B of title XIX of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x et seq.) to make grants to carry out substance abuse programs, except that such amount shall not be used to calculate amounts to be used for programs and activities relating to substance abuse as required by section 1916(c)(7)(B) of such Act.

SEC. . Section 101 of the Abandoned Infants Assistance Act of 1988 (42 U.S.C. 670 note) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2) by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the semicolon;

(2) in paragraph (3), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before ", to reside";

(3) in paragraph (4), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the semicolon;

(4) in paragraph (5), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the semicolon;

(5) in paragraph (6), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the semicolon; and

(6) in paragraph (7), by inserting "and those infants who are victims of parental substance abuse" before the period.

SEC. . Section 1912A of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-1a) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(4)(B)(i)—

(A) by striking out "0.4" in subclause (I), and inserting in lieu thereof "0.2"; and

(6) by striking out "indicated by the most recent data collected by the Bureau of the Census" in subclause (II), and inserting in lieu thereof "determined by multiplying the percentage of the State's population that resides in urbanized areas of the State (as indicated by the most recent dicennial census compiled by the Bureau of the Census) by the most recent estimate of the total population of the State";

(2) in subsection (a)(4)(B)(ii)(I), by striking out "0.2" and inserting in lieu thereof "0.266";

(3) in subsection (a)(4)(B)(iii)(I), by striking out "0.2" and inserting in lieu thereof "0.266";

(4) in subsection (a)(4)(B)(iv)(I), by striking out "0.2" and inserting in lieu thereof "0.267";

(5) in subsection (b), to read as follows:

"(b)(1) In fiscal year 1989, each State shall receive a minimum allotment under this subpart of the lesser of—

"(A) $8,000,000; and

"(B) an amount equal to 105 percent of the sum of—

"(i) the amount the State received under section 1913 for fiscal year 1988 (as such section was in effect for such fiscal year); and

"(ii) the amount the State received under part C for fiscal year 1988.

"(2) In subsequent fiscal years, each State shall receive a minimum allotment under this subpart that is equal to the amount that such State received in fiscal year 1989 under paragraph (1) for the minimum amount that such State was entitled to under such paragraph plus an amount equal to such minimum multiplied by the percentage increase in the amount appropriated under section 1911(a) in such subsequent fiscal year above the amount appropriated for the immediately preceding fiscal year."; and

(6) in subsection (f), to read as follows:

"(f) For purposes of subsection (e), the applicable amount for each fiscal year is $330,000,000.".

SEC. . (a) Section 5111(a) of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 (20 U.S.C. 3171 et seq.) is amended by striking "$350,000,000" and inserting "375,000,000".

(b) Section 5122 of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (a) and (b) as subsections (b) and (c), respectively;

(2) by inserting the following new subsection (a) after the section designation:

"(a) EMERGENCY GRANTS TO SCHOOLS IN URBAN AND RURAL AREAS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—From the amount available to carry out this section pursuant to section 5121(a), 33.3 percent of such amount shall be used by the chief executive officer in consultation with the State educational agency or the chief State school officer of the State, to make contracts with, and emergency grants to, local educational agencies serving urban and rural communities with severe drug problems.

"(2) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) INITIAL GRANTS.—In awarding grants under this subsection the chief executive shall first award grants to local educational agencies serving the largest city in the State to develop and implement comprehensive approaches to eliminating the serious drug problem that affects schools and students within the boundaries of the local educational agency. Such grant shall be of sufficient size, scope, and quality to be of value and effective.

"(B) LOCAL AGENCIES.—After satisfying the requirements of subparagraph (A), the chief executive officer of a State receiving a grant under this section shall make grants to urban and rural local educational agencies with severe drug problems as determined by the incidence of drug abuse in relation to the size of the school age population. Such grants shall be of sufficient size, scope, and quality to be of value and effective. Such grants to the local educational agency shall be used for the development and implementation of comprehensive approaches to eliminating the serious drug problems that affect schools and students within the boundaries of the local educational agency.

"(3) WAIVER.—The Secretary may waive the provision of this subsection for States in which there is no concentration of drug problems."; and

(3) in subsection (b) (as amended in paragraph (1)) by striking out "IN GENERAL.—Not" and inserting in lieu thereof "REMAINDER.—From the remainder available to carry out this section, not".

COMPREHENSIVE DRUG CONTROL LEGISLATION

COATS AMENDMENT NO. 879

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. COATS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to a bill to be introduced by Mr. DOLE dealing with drug control, as follows:

On page , line , strike the period and insert "of which the Bureau of Justice Assistance shall provide funds for demonstration grants to the States to establish shock incarceration programs as alternatives to imprisonment for first-time offenders who have committed nonviolent offenses and nonviolent drug offenses, 90 percent of which funds shall be reserved and set aside in a special discretionary fund for use by the Director to make grants, and the remainder of which funds to make grants to provide compulsory drug treatment, as required, and literacy education, vocational education, and job training programs by the State or jointly by the State and private entities which shall be made available to nonviolent offenders selected for confinement in boot camp programs: Provided, That no grants shall be expended for more than 70 percent of the cost of the project for which such grant is made and no Federal funds made available to the State shall be used to supplant State or local funds that would otherwise be used to carry out such project.".

● Mr. COATS. Mr. President, it is my intention to offer an amendment to a bill to be offered by Senator DOLE that solely incorporates the remaining legislative initiatives of the President's drug strategy.●

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, 1990

CRANSTON AMENDMENT NO. 880

Mr. LAUTENBERG (for Mr. CRANSTON) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 3015, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert:

SEC. . SONOMA, MARIN, MENDOCINO, AND NAPA COUNTIES, CALIFORNIA.

Section 149(a)(41) of the Surface Transportation and Uniform Relocation Assistance Act of 1987 is amended—

(1) by striking "SONOMA AND MARIN COUNTIES, CALIFORNIA" and insering "SONOMA, MARIN, MENDOCINO, AND NAPA COUNTIES, CALIFORNIA";

(2) in subparagraph (B) by striking "HEALDSBURG" and inserting "SAN RAFAEL TO WILLITS AND NOVATO TO SHELLVILLE"; and

(3) in subparagraph (B) by striking "Healdsburg, California." and inserting "Willits, California, and a highway project for purpose of demonstrating the extent to which traffic congestion is relieved on a major east-west segment of a California State highway which connects Novato, California, and Shellville, California, by construction of high occupancy vehicles lanes along a right-of-way which is parallel to such major east-west segment.".

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS, 1990

PRYOR (AND GRASSLEY) AMENDMENT NO. 881

Mr. INOUYE (for Mr. PRYOR, for himself and Mr. GRASSLEY) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 3072) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes, as follows:

On page 108, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following:

SEC. . (a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), none of funds appropriated by this Act may be obligated for the procurement of the Airborne Self-Protection Jammer (ASPJ) until further operational testing of the ASPJ is conducted and completed and the reports required by subsection (b) have been submitted in accordance with that subsection.

(2) Paragraph (1) does not limit the obligation of funds for the production, maintenance, and operation of 18 Airborne Self-Protection Jammer (ASPJ) production verification units for the purpose of conducting further operational and developmental testing.

(b) Upon the completion of the operational testing conducted in connection with the Airborne Self-Protection Jammer (ASPJ) program, the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation, and the Comptroller General of the United States shall each submit to the Committees on Appropriations and Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the conduct and results of such testing.

SPECTER (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 882

Mr. SPECTER (for himself, Mr. NUNN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. HEFLIN) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 3072, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place in title IX of the bill insert the following:

"It is the sense of the Senate that U.S. participation in a multilateral anti-narcotics strike force, as called for in sections 4101 and 4103 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Pub. L. 100-690), should include the full range of appropriate law enforcement and anti-drug abuse agencies, and that consideration be given to aiding such a strike force by funding from appropriate sources for multilateral intelligence-sharing, multilateral training of law enforcement personnel, and multilateral support for crop substitution, drug treatment, drug research and drug education programs.

"Funds made available under this Act for Department of Defense drug interdiction activities may be expended to fund the participation of United States armed forces in conjunction with appropriate United States law enforcement and anti-drug abuse agencies, in accordance with other applicable laws, in such a strike force.".

WARNER AMENDMENT NO. 883

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. WARNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 3072, supra, as follows:

At an appropriate place in the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . FEASIBILITY STUDY OF LAND TRANSFER FOR USE AS A CORRECTIONAL FACILITY.

(a)(1) The Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the United States Attorney General, shall conduct a study of the feasibility of selling or otherwise transferring to the Commonwealth of Virginia, subdivisions thereof, or any combination of subdivisions thereof, a parcel of land approximately 100 acres not more than 100 miles from the southern boundary of Arlington County, from the military installations within Virginia which encompass land that may be suitable for use by the Commonwealth of Virginia, subdivisions thereof, or any combination of subdivisions thereof, as a site for a medium security correctional facility for persons sentenced in the courts of Virginia or in the United States District Court in Virginia.

(2) The study required by paragraph (1) shall address, at a minimum, the following issues:

(A) Whether there are parcels of land within those installations of the size described which could be released from Federal control without severely affecting the present missions of such installations.

(B) A description of the parcels of land described in subparagraph (A).

(C) A description of the effects, if any, transfer of such parcels of land from Federal control would have on the ability of the Secretary of Defense to effectively carry out the mission of the Department of Defense.

(D) An analysis of the risk, if any, that might be posed to military personnel and their dependents housed on such installations by the operation of such a correctional facility on the parcels of land described in subparagraph (A).

(E) An estimate of the date on which the parcels of land described in subparagraph (A) would be available for transfer from Federal control.

(b) The report of the study described under subsection (a) shall be delivered to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives not later than 60 days after enactment of this Act.

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, in the past 2 weeks, the President and the Senate have been working on an agreement to fund the Nation's war on drugs. I was privileged to be one of the negotiators and now we have reached an agreement to increase funding over that of the proposal forwarded to Congress by the President.

Since January 1989, I have been working with law enforcement agencies to get Congress to pass legislation that will allow State and local law enforcement agencies to retain resources seized in enforcing State and Federal laws.

Up until October 1, 1989, local and State law enforcement officials have the legal right to share drug assets seized under the Federal asset forfeiture law. Nationwide, the Department of Justice during fiscal year 1988 returned $104 million from seized assets to local and State law enforcement officials under this program. This next fiscal year, the Department of Justice estimates that the total may well top $175 million.

Local community budgets are stretched to, and beyond the breaking point because of the increased cost of law enforcement activities in the war on drugs. These assets provide critically needed resources for drug enforcement activities of local and State law enforcement. Officers are risking their safety—their lives—every day; we have an obligation to give them the support and equipment they need.

Unfortunately, last year the House of Representatives passed language to the Anti-Drug Act of 1988 that will dramatically curtail the local participation in the seizure asset program. While intended to address a narrow problem regarding adoptive forfeitures in a few States, the provision in last year's legislation was drawn so poorly as to put in jeopardy joint Federal-State-local drug enforcement efforts in many States. Virginia is one of those States and I am fighting to correct this bad law.

Unless legislative action is taken before September 30, the Department of Justice may have to curtail the seized asset sharing programs with local officials in many States, including Virginia.

The General Assembly of Virginia is moving to make the needed changes to Virginia's Constitution to avoid any problem under present law. However, the necessary changes to the Constitution cannot be completed until November 1990 at the earliest.

Unless the Congress acts now—before October 1, 1989—local law enforcement officials in Virginia stand to lose millions of dollars. In the eastern district of Virginia alone, State and local officials may lose more than $10 million in 1989.

Other States will also be dramatically affected by the cutoff of these funds to law enforcement officials. I'm sure my colleagues have been contacted by law enforcement officials in their own States about how they will be affected unless there is a change in the law.

Mr. President, the Senate has already acted twice on this matter. First in August, the Senate passed S. 976, a bill I introduced that would defer the effective date of the language in the 1988 Act for 2 years. This would allow my own State of Virginia adequate time to change its constitution to address the problem. However, while this approach would address Virginia's problems, there are other States that this extension will not help.

Second during consideration of S. 1352, the National Defense Authorization Act, the Senate joined Senator WILSON and offered an amendment passed by the Senate which replaces the absolute prohibition against asset sharing with a rule allowing asset sharing if it will serve to further cooperation between State or local law enforcement officals and Federal law enforcement agencies.

Additionally, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Senator HOLLINGS, put in an amendment that was added by subcommittee to H.R. 2991, making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for fiscal year 1990. This language would repeal the prohibition on asset forfeiture sharing.

These actions clearly document that the U.S. Senate, in a bipartisan effort, is ready to help local law enforcement retain their fair share of seized assets.

But Mr. President, the Democratic leadership in the House of Representatives has not taken the legislative action to correct this bad law which originated in the House of Representatives. I understand that the House Subcommittee on Crime reported a bill that still does not adequately address the problem. In any event, it does not appear that the House will be in position to consider that bill until early October. Even should that bill become law, it would take some time for the Department of Justice to implement. During this time, State and local law enforcement officials in my State and others could lose badly needed resources for the war against drugs.

Mr. President, time is short. It is clear that the House cannot act on this matter on its own before October 1. The Commerce, State, Justice appropriations bill may not be acted on before that date. The Department of Defense authorizations bill may not be resolved in time.

Mr. President, the Senate has already acted twice on this matter, but I will continue to explore every avenue until this problem is addressed.

My amendment is similar to the language attached to the Commerce, State, Justice appropriations bill reported by the Appropriations Subcommittee except for the addition of language to assure that, whenever passed, it will apply to all forfeitures in fiscal year 1990.

I believe this is the most direct and straightforward resolution of this problem. This approach is supported by the Department of Justice and numerous law enforcement agencies including the Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association, the Fraternal Order of Police, the National Troopers Coalition, the International Brotherhood of Police Organizations, the Police Management Association, the Major City Chiefs of Police, and the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort to resolve the problem before September 30.●

CONTINUATION OF PERFORMANCE MANAGEMENT AND RECOGNITION SYSTEM

PRYOR (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 884

Mr. INOUYE (for Mr. PRYOR) (for himself, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. SASSER) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 3282) to amend title 5, United States Code, to authorize the continuation of the performance management and recognition system through

March 31, 1991, and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 3, line 4, isnert "equal or" before "exceed".

On page 5, after line 21, add the following:

SEC. 6. TEMPORARY CONTINUATION OF PROVISION RELATING TO THE SCHEDULE FOR PAYING THE LUMP-SUM CREDIT TO CERTAIN ANNUITANTS.

Section 6001(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (5 U.S.C. 8343a note) is amended by striking "October 1, 1989" and inserting "December 3, 1989".

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I announce, for the information of Senators, that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, which I am privileged to chair, is scheduled to hold a hearing Wednesday, October 4, 1989, in SR-418 at 10 a.m. to consider the nominations of JoAnn K. Webb to be Director of the National Cemetery System, Edward G. Lewis to be Assistant Secretary of Veterans' Affairs for Information Resources Management, and any other nomination on which the paperwork is completed. This hearing replaces the hearing previously scheduled for this Friday, September 29.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON WATER AND POWER

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that a field hearing has been scheduled before the Subcommittee on Water and Power of the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources to receive testimony on Glen Canyon Dam operations.

The hearing will take place on October 14, 1989, at 11 a.m., in the Shrine of the Ages Auditorium, Grand Canyon Village, AZ.

Because of the limited time available for the hearing, witnesses may testify by invitation only. However, anyone wishing to submit written testimony to be included in the hearing record is welcome to do so. Those wishing to submit written testimony should send two copies to the subcommittee, SD-364, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information, please contact Tom Jensen, counsel for the subcommittee at (202) 224-2366.

Cason as Assistant Secretary for Resources and the Environment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

COLORADO HISPANIC AGENDA AND "AGENDA PEAK"

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I am very pleased to commemorate Hispanic Heritage Month by calling the Senate's attention, once again, to the good work of the Colorado Hispanic Agenda, a nonprofit organization dedicated to the economic, educational, and political progress of Hispanic Americans.

I think the Colorado Hispanic Agenda can serve as a useful model for other States and I commend this outstanding organization to anyone who cares deeply about our Nation's goals of civil rights, equal opportunity, economic progress, educational excellence and the political empowerment of Hispanic Americans.

Following the Agenda's successful publication of a 21-page report on specific goals for the Hispanic community's progress in areas like economic development, education, housing, political participation, and employment, the Agenda officially launched a grassroots effort in the Hispanic community to implement these goals. The result has been a galvanizing force for positive social and political change in Colorado—a force that has established links of cooperation between Hispanic leaders from all parts of the State, all sectors of the community and all walks of life.

I am very proud to be associated with this effort. And I am particularly pleased that the spectacular beauty of Colorado's mountains have also played a part in forging this progress. This summer, 22 members of the Agenda participated in a special outward bound leadership program in Colorado's high Rocky Mountains. This experience combined the rigors of mountain climbing and the challenge of surviving in the wilderness with communal soul-searching and group discussions that helped to forge a renewed sense of unity among the participants.

This outward bound experience culminated in a group climb up Mount Galena, one of Colorado's 13,000-foot peaks along the Continental Divide. On the climb to Mountain Galena, this group christened a smaller mountain peak, "Agenda Peak"—and this spot, located high above timberline in the Colorado Rockies, will always serve as a geographical reminder of the challenges that Hispanic Americans have faced. The climb up Galena came to represent, in a metaphorical sense, the Hispanic community's struggle for equality, opportunity, and political identity. It also represents a long-term commitment by Agenda members to the future development of leadership among young Colorado Hispanics.

I think it is fitting for the Senate to recognize Agenda Peak in Colorado—and to close with the words of one of the outward bound participants, a noted Colorado poet, Ramon Del Castillo, who has written:

Como una familia grande,
They said their "hasta luegos" to los primos
Los hermanos, las hermanas, y los compadres
Of this newly formed family.

The struggle to the mountain
Individually encapsulated and burst open
Like medicine from la curandera.

They planted the tree of life
At Mount Galena.
They placed una bandera
Destined to fly forever.

On return from their journey,
They were greeted con gusto y amor.
Hermanos y Hermanas
Today we have become one!●

COMMENDING THE EFFORTS OF BANK SECRECY ACT COMMITTEE AND WELLS FARGO BANK

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today to commend the Bank Secrecy Act Committee of the Bank Administration Institute and Wells Fargo Bank of California for their leadership in the effort to expose and eliminate the laundering of drug money.

The Bank Secrecy Act Committee, founded in 1985, consists of bankers from across the Nation who are dedicated to eliminating money laundering through the development of a warning system that identifies potential laundering activities. I am pleased to note that Wells Fargo Bank was instrumental in forming this committee.

When the scope of the problem became clear, the committee determined that an active role should be taken to ensure that drug money laundering would be detected. The committee's foresight proved to be a tremendous asset as it worked with banking regulators and the drug enforcement community to provide useful information to expose the deposits of drug money.

Wells Fargo Bank proved to be so effective and diligent in its efforts, that its reporting of suspicious cash transactions in California led to Operation Polar Cap—the largest money laundering identification effort in history.

Mr. President, the efforts of the Bank Secrecy Act Committee and Wells Fargo Bank are indeed laudable. I offer my sincere support for the continuation of the leadership and innovation that these bankers have brought to the fight against drugs and corruption in our society.●

A REPORT BY THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY'S INSPECTOR GENERAL ON CONTRACTOR INDEMNIFICATION

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I wish to bring attention to an important report done by the U.S. Department of Energy's [DOE] Inspector General [IG]. At my request, the IG performed an audit which reviewed the DOE's practices and policies regarding the indemnification of its management and operating [M&O] contractors. Currently, the Department has 52 such contracts which have generated $11 billion in obligations—or about 65 percent of DOE's total obligations of $17 billion.

For several decades, the DOE and its predecessor agencies have maintained a blanket policy to completely indemnify its M&O contractors, bear almost all nuclear and nonnuclear risks, and pay all costs of running those facilities. The rationale for this policy, according to DOE, is based on three concerns.

First, without indemnification the DOE believes that it cannot find qualified contractors to run its facilities because of the extraordinary potential hazards associated with DOE activities. Also, because DOE contractors receive relatively low fees this is supposed to offset the absence of financial risk. Finally, it is assumed that without indemnification, private insurance would be difficult to obtain and would be very costly.

While there may be some merit to these underlying policy decisions, the IG has identified some disturbing deficiencies in the DOE contract system which have important ramifications for the Government and the taxpayer. These deficiencies are quite significant, particularly as DOE begins to spend the enormous sums of public funds projected over the coming decades for nuclear weapons production modernization and cleanup. For example:

Despite the passage by Congress of a provision to the Price-Anderson Act last year requiring DOE to assess civil penalties against contractors for violation of DOE rules, DOE contracts are written in a way which allows the contractor to pass these penalties on to DOE to pay them. Recently, DOE has issued proposed rules to levy civil penalties under the Price-Anderson Act. However, once these rules are promulgated and once penalties are levied, the IG has pointed out that contractors are corporate subsidiaries with little or no assets which could prevent the Government from obtaining penalties.

The DOE does not appear to have a standard definition in its contracts for willful misconduct. In some instances, liabilities due to criminal behavior are allowable costs for the DOE to assume. The IG has pointed out that the DOE had to pay over $3 million, including $420,000 in stolen money, which was fraudulently awarded by the DuPont Corp. at the Savannah River plant [SRP] to a subcontractor, in spite of the high position of the contract employee who participated in the fraud.

There are deviations from existing policies in some contracts that may extend the risk of the Government beyond congressional intent. For instance, DOE's contract with the Sandia Corp. has no requirement at all that costs must be reasonable in order to be allowable.

DOE's use of award fees as a means to require contractor accountability is limited. Only 29 out of 52 M&O contracts contain provisions for award fees. The remainder of the contracts are either fixed fee or nonprofit, and thus, financial incentives for contractor accountability are minimal in several cases. Additionally, nonprofit contractors have been exempted by Congress from being levied civil penalties under the Price-Anderson Act, which further limits the Government's leverage.

Finally, DOE contracts, for the most part, do not give DOE the power to demand removal of contract employees. For example, the DOE's contract with the Westinghouse Corp. at the Savannah River plant does not provide DOE with the same minimal powers it had with DuPont, to demand removal of an employee for incompetence and/or behavior which is contrary to the public interest.

In order to correct these problems, the IG recommends that the Department, at the appropriate time in the contract cycle:

First. Modify all M&O contracts, as necessary and appropriate, to recognize DOE's statutory right to assess civil penalties under the Price-Anderson Act.

Second. Ascertain the extent that civil penalties, under the Price-Anderson Amendment Act of 1988, could in fact be collected from M&O contractors subject to such penalties. If necessary and appropriate, modify the M&O contracts to make parent corporations liable for such penalties.

Third. Modify all M&O contracts so that in the event a contractor fails to remove any employee from the contract work who DOE deems incompetent, careless, or insubordinate, or whose continued employment on the work is deemed by DOE to be contrary to the public interest, the Government reserves the right to require the contractor to remove the employee.

Fourth. Consider modifying M&O contracts, as necessary, to subject all costs incurred under these contracts to a test of reasonableness, including the exercise of prudent business judgment, and disallow all costs failing such a test.

Fifth. Assess the merits of modifying the Department's current indemnification policy and practices to: First, increase the number of contract employees for whose actions the contractors will be held financially responsible in the event of willful misconduct or acts of bad faith; and second, identify additional circumstances for which contractors will be held financially responsible—that is environmental fines and penalties, and so forth).

Sixth. Establish administrative procedures necessary to implement a civil penalties program as authorized by the Price-Anderson Act Amendments of 1988.

These recommendations are minimal and don't require legislation. I am urging DOE Secretary Watkins to adopt the IG's recommendations. The IG clearly indicates the need for the DOE and the Congress to make reform of DOE's system of contracting a high priority. These reforms, at the minimum, should require more financial incentives for contractor accountability. They should also open the contract system so that the Government can draw from a larger pool of innovative and responsible corporations to help deal with the enormous challenges facing our nuclear weapons production complex.

The lesson of the past tell us that to a major extent, the enormous and costly problems facing the DOE's nuclear program are due to a basic failure to adopt normal practices of accountability that are commonplace in the business community. It is time for the DOE to operate in a more businesslike fashion so that the mistakes of the past won't be repeated.●

S. 874, UNIVERSAL VOTER REGISTRATION

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the goal of expanding the opportunities, and eliminating the barriers, to registering to vote in Federal elections is one that I share. My home State of Oregon has led the way in making registration a simple and available process.

S. 874 contains a number of provisions that seek to attain this goal on a national basis, and thereby encourage States to adopt similar approaches to the registration of voters. I do not oppose most of these provisions.

However, no one involved in the election process can ignore the potential for abuse and fraud in the registration process. The integrity of our political system depends upon confidence in the results of free elections. That confidence is undermined not only by low voter turnout, but by real—or perceived—corruption of the voting process.

For this reason, in connection with my support for the concept of universal voter registration sought by S. 874, I support protection of the integrity of the voter registration rolls. An amendment proposed by the minority would have required periodic examination of voter rolls to remove deceased persons and those who could be documented to have moved from the voting district. This amendment was not intended to be a "killer" amendment, but a necessary guarantee that the ease of registering to vote promoted by other provisions of the bill would not be manipulated by unscrupulous campaign or electoral officials.

It became clear during the debate of S. 874 in committee that the majority would not accept this amendment and that the minority did not have the votes to prevail on this amendment. As a result, the bill remains fatally flawed and I could not support reporting it favorably to the Senate.

Should this oversight in S. 874 be corrected, I am ready to give it my approval.●

BEST WISHES TO POLISH AMERICAN CONGRESS

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, on October 1, the Polish American Congress celebrates 45 years in the service of freedom with a banquet in a city that has become a landmark for Polish Americans, Hamtramck, MI.

The city and the Congress come together at the start of Polish American Heritage Month and at a turning point in history.

For Polish Americans and all Americans who love freedom, there could hardly be more exciting times as we look to Eastern Europe. The changes are dramatic, but the daily news from Poland reminds us of nothing so much as the long and difficult road to freedom carved out by the Polish American Congress. For 45 years, it has stood for the values of patriotism here at home, for pride in the Polish heritage, for the education of children, for aid and comfort of refugees and immigrants, and for support of the Solidarity movement.

For Hamtramck, Polish American culture has always been a major influence. Its own road, from its founding in 1798, has been a sometimes difficult one, but it has led to a renaissance.

There is indeed no better place than this city of hope and confidence for the Polish American Congress, the voice of more than 1 million Americans of Polish ancestry in Michigan, to meet, to celebrate, to pray for the future, and for its many friends to come and cheer it on and sing "Stolat".●

LOVE AT WORK

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I stand today to describe for my colleagues the work of some very special people in St. Paul, MN. It was once said that "the one real object of education is to have a man in the condition of continually asking questions."

The Guadalupe area project has accepted that challenge of eduction and today, is a private alternative high school committed to teenagers in need of special support and acceptance. Considered by many to be a human dynamo, Sister M. Giovanni, the project's founder and leader, rests at the core of today's success of the school.

Sister "G," as she is known to her friends, represents the total commitment to good and the Lord's word. Having recently met with Mother Theresa of Calcutta, I was moved by the full and focused devotion of this woman who has pledged her whole life to helping the poor and diseased in India.

That experience reminded me of the treasure we have in Sister G, and how the laughter, tears, prayers, and dreams we have shared over the years hold even greater meaning today. The realization of Sister G's dream, the continued and secure GAP presence in the lives of young people, is marking a milestone in the lives of many believers and critics.

A GAP student is a special individual with often a lifetime of experience under his or her belt by adolescence. But these young people are not victims of society, as much as they are victors of the love of a growing network of people.

The young people at GAP are enrolled because they have not given up on themselves and need the chance to explore, learn, and develop the self-confidence to ask questions. Affected by the complexity of growing up in an urban setting, these teens realized that second chances—and the love and concern of good people, don't come around often.

An education at GAP is a positive mix of personalized instruction geared toward not only learning standard high school fare, but also learning about themselves, as individuals. All too often, a turbulent childhood saps the self esteem and enthusiasm for creativity, disarming a young person who requires those social and development skills to continue asking questions.

Last year was a landmark year for all of those affiliated with GAP—with increased fundraising, ground breaking on an addition to the small school building on Robie Street in St. Paul and a crucial curriculum recognition. GAP received accreditation by the Minnesota Non-Public School Accreditation Association after 1 year of intense assessment and evaluation. We are especially proud because GAP is the first private alternative school in Minnestoa to garner such distinction.

Donors and contributors of course are a vital aspect of the continued success of Sister G's school. Support for this endeavor has come from individuals, corporations, foundations, and churches. The list of friends continues to grow as the word about the GAP experience spreads through the Twin Cities, our State, and region.

Last month, GAP held an open house as a celebration of the new building. Hundreds of people have taken interest in this particular goal, and I truly regret not being able to visit with Sister G, the GAP staff, students, and friends. However, in my dear friendship with Sister G, I have learned that every day at GAP is an open house—that the doors and hearts of all those involved are open to any individual seeking to improve, learn, and dare to ask questions.●

WORKERS' COMPENSATION LAW

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, 75 years ago in July 1914, the New York State constitution was amended to allow for the workers' compensation law. This law provides benefits and medical care for workers who incur a disability on the job. Survivors benefits are also included within this law.

In order to fully appreciate the elemental change created by the workers' compensation law, one need only examine the situation of the New York worker before its 1914 enactment. When a worker was injured, the only available recourse was a lawsuit. This process was often ineffective, expensive, and time-consuming.

At the same time, accidents were so much more common then than they are today. We have recently noted the 78th anniversary of the "Triangle Fire," in which 146 young immigrant garment workers were killed in a sweatshop. No other tragedy so vividly revealed the vulnerability of our workers in the early 20th century. Many faced life-threatening situations in the workplace on a daily basis.

As the New York State workers' compensation law is celebrating its 75th anniversary this year, I would like to note the success of our compensation laws for disabled employees. Today, the workers' compensation law protects almost 7.2 million employees in New York State. It provides for a full range of benefits, including medical treatment, wage replacement, and rehabilitative services. And I should add that the administrative responsibilities of the board include not only the workers' compensation law, but also the disability benefits law, volunteer firefighters' benefit law, the workmen's compensation act for civil defense, and the volunteer ambulance workers' benefit law.

Although workers have made much progress since 1914, dangers to our workers still remain. Indeed, the nature of the dangers are constantly changing, especially given the growth in the number of hazardous substances exposed to workers. The workers' compensation law is as necessary now as it was 75 years ago to maintaining the health and dignity of the American worker.

I hope my colleagues will join me in celebrating the 75th anniversary of this very important New York State law.●

JOE DOHERTY

● Mr. D'AMATO. I am pleased to join with my colleagues, Senators DODD and HATCH, in supporting Senate Concurrent Resolution 62, concerning Joe Doherty.

Joe Doherty has been imprisoned in the Metropolitan Correctional Center in New York City since June 18, 1983. For the entire 6 years and 3 months that Mr. Doherty has been confined to his pretrial detention facility, he has been denied bail. Yet, Mr. Doherty has been convicted of no crime in this country, and has been charged with nothing more serious than illegal entry.

Joe Doherty is being confined in an American prison because he is being sought by the British Government. The Justice Department attempted to extradite Mr. Doherty when he was first arrested in 1983. The basis of the extradition was a murder conviction in Northern Ireland arising out of a 1980 ambush in Belfast in which a British captain was killed.

In December 1984, however, U.S. District Judge John E. Sprizzo denied extradition on the ground that Joe Doherty's offenses were "of a political character." Twice the Justice Department sought to have this ruling overturned, and both times Mr. Doherty prevailed.

The Justice Department then sought to deport Mr. Doherty to the United Kingdom based upon his invalid visa, attempting to achieve through a deportation proceeding what the courts denied in the extradition proceeding.

Joe Doherty once again resisted the Justice Department's efforts and the courts once again sustained him. On November 14, 1988, the Board of Immigration Appeals held that Joe Doherty was entitled to apply for political asylum in this country; however, on June 30, 1989, the Attorney General overruled that decision and denied Mr. Doherty a political asylum hearing.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 62 commends the Board of Immigration Appeals for its decision that Joe Doherty be permitted to apply for political asylum, calls on the Attorney General to reverse his order overruling the BIA's decision, and calls on the authorities to immediately address Mr. Doherty's bail application pending the outcome of his proceedings.

I support this concurrent resolution, and look forward to its swift adoption.●

STUNG TRENG, CAMBODIA

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, this week, the last Vietnamese units officially withdrew from Cambodia. In this, one bloody decade of utter devastation is drawing to a close. It is hardly an ending, though. Cambodia's future is too uncertain and too difficult for sighs of relief. The Vietnamese are leaving, but the murderous Khmer Rouge remain.

Newsday's renowned and talented columnist, Sydney H. Schanberg, has captured the historic importance of the Vietnamese withdrawal in a portrait of Stung Treng, Cambodia. Mr. Schanberg gives us a glimpse of the withdrawal in its elemental human terms. Among his valuable observations is the following one worthy of our special consideration. He states: "[A]ny time the people of two nations who have been tense or adversarial or downright hostile for centuries share a kindly experience together, it is progress and it is worth recording." Indeed.

Mr. President, I recommend Mr. Schanberg's report, "Time To Go, Time To Be Friendly," to my colleagues and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The report follows:

[From Newsday, Sept. 25, 1989]

TIME TO GO, TIME TO BE FRIENDLY

(By Sidney H. Schanberg)

(Sidney H. Schanberg, associate editor and a columnist for Newsday, won a Pulitzer Prize in 1976 for his reporting for The New York Times on the Khmer Rouge takeover of Cambodia. His book, "The Death and Life of Dith Pran," was made into the Academy Award winning movie. "The Killing Fields," Last month, Schanberg returned to Cambodia for the first time since 1975. This is his sixth report.)

PHNOM PENH.—In the capital, the ceremonies seem stylized rituals—programmed, necessary for appearances at home, important to be seen on television abroad. But in a dusty province town 150 miles northeast of Phnom Penh, some of the friendly emotions felt genuine this weekend as the final units of the Vietnamese army in Cambodia began their pullout to go home after 10 years of controlling and defending this country's soil.

True, Stung Treng had its full share of stiff banquets and long formal speeches—with their obligatory positive references to solidarity and fraternity, and their equally obligatory negative ones about the murderous Khmer Rouge, whom the Vietnamese drove out of power in Cambodia in 1979. But when the good-bye parade began on Saturday morning—a caravan of hundreds of trucks filled with Vietnamese soldiers who had been posted in this region—their 10 years together seemed to seize both the Vietnamese and the Cambodian townspeople.

It's presumptuous for a westerner to believe he knows with any degree of certainty the thoughts of people so culturally different from him, but on some occasions, emotions cross those barriers. And the atmosphere in that town square became one of mutual likability. The Vietnamese smiled and laughed and waved flags and rice stalks. The Cambodians lining the long street surged forward to touch the soldiers and shake their hands and give them flowers and cigarettes and coconuts.

Little girls in blue and white uniforms, who had been part of the ceremonies on the reviewing stand, were too small to reach the soldiers' outstretched hands, so they asked a foreign journalist to lift them up. One who was raised high gave a rose to a soldier. Another gave a pin with a national emblem.

Still other children, giggling with excitement, ran to the jeeps of Vietnamese officers and placed around the officers' necks the red scarves the children had been wearing for the formalities. There was no mistaking the officers' emotions as they spread their arms and hugged the children tight.

Maybe it was just because of the moment. And maybe part of it was because a few—though only a few—cameras of the foreign press were there. Nonetheless, any time the people of two nations who have been tense or adversarial or downright hostile for centuries share a kindly experience together, it is progress and it is worth recording.

Stung Treng is one of those remote towns in Cambodia, where the people appear to have little emotional link to the central government. The town has a population of 16,000, so it's not a hamlet, but it's in the middle of a jungly, heavily forested area in the northeast, where hunters trap boas and leopards and sell the skins. Monster-size river bass are caught here regularly. Stung Treng sits on a wide tributary, just about 500 yards from a junction with the surging Mekong. In a sense, you could call it wild country.

It's also an area of minorities. Many Laotians live here—the border with Laos is only 35 miles to the north—as do clusters of several tribal peoples.

Stung Treng's remoteness is accentuated by the absense of television antennas, at a time when the rooftops of most Cambodian towns are sprouting them like bean shoots. The town is too far away from Phnom Penh's station or any other television signal in Southeast Asia.

Other artifacts from the outside world do reach here, though. Like motorbikes and stereo boxes and Heineken beer and Pepsi, all of which arrive by strange routes from Singapore and Thailand.

Gold is here, too, but that's common everywhere in Cambodia. It's what people do with their savings, since there is little trust in banks. Lots of Vietnamese soldiers were in the Stung Treng market on their last day, buying small amounts of gold. For some reason, it's cheaper here than in Vietnam.

They were also buying other mementos to take home. Their favorite thing was parrots, which abound here. So on the eve of the pullout, as one walked through streets clogged with Vietnamese military trucks, every third truck had a soldier playing with a parrot on his hand or should. Other men strummed guitars and sang romantic songs from home.

Stung Treng was one of those provinces in Cambodia that were taken by the Khmer Rouge almost immediately when their original war begain in 1970 against the American-supported government of Lon Nol. Thus, the people here lived under that barbaric regime for nearly nine years, before the Vietnamese swept in and installed a Cambodian government friendly to Hanoi.

Hanoi's troops then stayed on to keep the Khmer Rouge from coming back to power—meanwhile training and building a Cambodian army to take over for them. But as the Vietnamese skirmished and sometimes battled with the Khmer Rouge, who had assumed their earlier guerrilla form, the years stretched on and they were drained by casualties.

According to Hanoi's figures, Vietnam has lost 55,000 of its soldiers in the fighting against the Khmer Rouge since 1977. It's almost as many as America lost in the war against the Vietnamese. Add another statistic: The Khmer Rouge, when they ruled Cambodia from 1975 to 1979, were responsible for the deaths of more than a million Cambodians—by execution, forced marches, slave labor and starvation. This region is a graveyard.

But in places ravaged by war, people reach away from death to hold on to life. That's why soldiers buy parrots and play guitars.

The Stung Treng area has not been one of the regions of heavy fighting during the time of the Vietnamese presence, but the war is never really out of mind. On the afternoon before the departure ceremonies, as Cambodian provincial and village militia rehearsed their role by drilling in the streets, other soldiers holding mine detectors slowly and carefully swept the parade ground, where the Vietnamese troops and the Cambodians who will replace them would stand at attention the next morning.

On their last night in Stung Treng, most of the Vietnamese soldiers—2,600 were massed in the town from all over the region—spent the hours quietly, cooking dinner over campfires and preparing their gear for the two-day trip east to their own country. But some, those with a little cash left over, took themselves to the local bars for a few final beers in Cambodia.

At one of these makeshift spas, which had run out of chairs, four soldiers scrunched over and shared their seats with some foreign journalists. However, our convivial time—over warm Tsingtao beer cooled with chunks of ice—was cut off abruptly at 9 o'clock. That was when the political officer from the soldiers' unit showed up with one of the world's sourest faces and directed them to head for their hammocks. He refused to be wheedled out of his wet-blanket attitude. In fact, he wouldn't even speak to us.

Morning broke clear and sweltering. The townspeople started gathering as early as 6 a.m. The loudspeaker on the reviewing stand began playing taped music to get everyone in the mood. There were traditional songs, nationalistic songs, songs from Vietnam and then bizarrely, a German rendition of a song from the '40s in America—"Chattanooga Choo-Choo." No one seemed to find it out of place.

Anyway, shortly thereafter came the speeches and the exchange of gifts and finally the parade that made everyone feel good. It lasted—the cheering and clapping and touching and hugging—for just a little more than an hour. And then the Vietnamese were gone.

It would be nice to think that the good feeling will cling to Stung Treng for some time to come. But chances are that while it will probably remain as a memory, the civil war or some other hardship will get in the way of its spirit fairly soon.●

THE CONTINUING MENACE OF HATE CRIMES

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise today to bring your attention to two recent articles from the Washington Post. Each of these articles focuses on incidents of hate-related attacks. In addition, one of the articles specifically suggests the need to initiate a national data base to record the occurrences of hate crimes. I have introduced and urge you to support S. 419, the Hate Crimes Statistics Act. These articles emphasize how harmful hate crimes are to society, and how statistical monitoring can help in the effort to find solutions to this national problem.

I believe my colleagues would find it beneficial to review these news stories. For this reason I ask to have both articles inserted into the RECORD in their entirety.

The articles follow:

GAY ACTIVISTS SAY ASSAULTS ON HOMOSEXUALS ARE RISING

(By Kara Swisher and Brooke A. Masters)

It is only after some time talking to Rod Johnson that you stop looking for the scars. On his scalp, which required dozens of stitches. On his hand and each of his fingers, smashed and shattered. On his arm and shoulder, broken in three places.

Last September, just before dawn, Johnson walked near a section of Rock Creek Park known as a sexual rendezvous spot for homosexual men. Johnson, 37, said he was on his way home from his job as a waiter in Georgetown when he turned a blind corner and encountered a gang of "skinheads"—three or more. "They came out of the shadows," he said, ". . . and I was totally encircled—there were people on front, back and sides," slamming him with baseball bats and taunting him with anti-homosexual epithets that he still cannot bring himself to repeat. "They weren't waiting for me, just for someone."

Three young men were arrested 48 hours after the beating and are awaiting trial after pleading not guilty.

In an interview last winter, Mark Hyder, 18, one of those charged, told The Washington Post that he and his friends went to the park that night specifically looking for someone gay, which Johnson is, to beat up. "I have a hatred for gays," Hyder said.

Such incidents of "gay bashing," a class of hate crime, are on the rise nationwide, according to law enforcement officials and gay activities. "Gay bashing is a problem in the city and all over the country," said D.C. police Inspector Melvin Clark.

Accurate statistics on gay bashing and other hate crimes—those motivated by racial, religious, ethnic and other prejudices—do not exist, but bills pending in Congress, the District and state and county legislatures across the United States would mandate the collection of such data and increase the penalties for hate-motivated crimes. The Hate Crimes Statistics Act, a national data collection bill, passed the House in June and awaits actions on the Senate floor this fall. In the District, a more far-reaching bill that includes stiffer penalties will be voted on this fall.

The inclusion of anti-homosexual crimes in those bills is controversial, and many efforts, including one last year in Congress, founder on this point. Those opposed to including homosexuals view the bills as an attempt to legitimize homosexuality. "Sexual preference has no business being elevated to the same status as race, color, religion or national origin," said Rep. William Dannemeyer (R-Calif.) on the House floor earlier this year.

Ensuring that hate crime laws also protects homosexuals is second only in priority to AIDS for most homosexual groups. "If it does not stay in, it sends out a dangerous signal that this kind of crime is less reprehensible," said Kevin Berrill, who heads the National Gay & Lesbian Task Force's Anti-Violence Project. "It makes us second-class citizens."

Even as politicians and advocacy groups wrangle, gays and lesbians continue to be menaced by acts ranging from simple verbal attack to murder. Stories abound, though many do not appear in the mainstream media.

Locally, cars filled with young men regularly cruise around Dupont Circle—dubbed "Fruit Loop" by detractors—shouting slogans such as "Die, faggots." In 1987, four teenagers came into Lambda Rising, a gay and lesbian bookstore on Connecticut Avenue NW, and threw books all over the floor and shouted, "You faggots . . . have got AIDS," according to employee Jim Bennett.

Phase 1, a lesbian bar in Southeast Washington, installed a wooden barrier near its door because so many people had thrown bottles and rocks at the patrons.

In Doylestown, Pa., two men were sentenced to death for driving a homosexual man they had met in a bar to an open field and slashing his throat. "There's no question that they killed him only and solely because he was gay," said Bucks County District Attorney Alan M. Rubenstein, who prosecuted the case.

Last month, a California appeals court overturned the murder conviction of three men who attacked and killed a gay man in San Francisco five years ago, ruling that they should have been charged with manslaughter because no murderous blows had been struck before victim's head fatally struck the pavement.

The crime that shocked the homosexual community the most this last year concerned two lesbians gunned down while camping. Last summer, Stephen Roy Carr stalked Claudia Brenner and her lover, Rebecca Wight, as they hiked along the Appalachian trail and shot them at point-blank range with a rifle. Wight died within minutes. Seriously wounded in the face, Brenner walked four miles to a road for help.

In July, Carr, who said he shot the women because they were lesbians, was sentenced to life imprisonment without the possibility of parole for first-degree murder.

"I thought it was probable I would be harassed all my life, maybe even physical harassment. But I never thought it would be an issue of life and death," Brenner said. "He followed us all day, hunted us. He tried to kill both of us, and he succeeded with Rebecca. But I won't let him kill me in spirit."

Most law enforcement officials don't group these crimes together, and without solid statistics cannot assign more officers to the problem. But gay groups do try to record the violence.

The task force released a report in June, which it dubbed a "wake-up call to the American people," claiming more than 7,000 cases of harassment in 1987, 42 percent more than the year before. Verbal abuse accounted for 67 percent of the total. It also reported 70 homicides.

Locally, a yearlong study by the Lesbian and Gay Anti-Violence Task Force, a coalition of area gay advocacy groups, conducted polls in the homosexual community and asserted that 44 percent of male and female homosexuals have suffered harassment or attacks. A Maryland anti-violence hot line project recorded 175 incidents in 1988. There were no statistics for Virginia.

Gay activists said the poll also shows an uneasiness with law enforcement officials. They said two-thirds of D.C. attacks were not reported to police. Of those who reported, 74 percent said they lacked confidence in the U.S. Attorney's Office.

They cite the experience of Ed Hassell. In 1983, two high school students he met in a local bar took him to a deserted park, where they beat and tried to castrate him. They pleaded guilty to assault with a deadly weapon and were put on probation. "I would never file any charges again," Hassell said.

In the trial, the defense attorney and the judge said that Hassell made a sexual advance on his attackers, which Hassell denied.

While homosexual groups say there has been a lull recently in violence, they criticize D.C. government attempts to keep statistics. Only one report of anti-homosexual violence and four reports of hate-related crimes have reached the Office of Human Rights since July 1987.

D.C. police and the U.S. Attorney's Office blame part of the problem on reluctance among victims to report, and the absence of a special space on the crime forms to indicate a hate crime. The form is now being revised, and the Metropolitan Washington Council of Governments plans to recommend that all local governments use a reporting form that includes anti-homosexual violence, said Michael Cash, deputy director of the Fairfax County Human Rights Commission.

"It's hard to tell if the program is at fault or it's the lack of reporting by the gay and lesbian community," said the District's Inspector Clark. "We are not any magicians, and need everyone to be as open as possible." Said Janice Smith of the D.C. Human Rights Office, "We are looking into producing educational seminars for the police, because we're committed to this."

Area gay groups acknowledge that many homosexuals who should report crimes do not. They meet with the police monthly to work together on the problem. "Gay citizens are still paranoid about it," said Chris Bates, co-chairman of the Mel Boozer Roundtable, a black gay group. "It's all got to do with the closet mentality."

Collecting data is the point of the Hate Crimes Statistics Act that passed the House by a vote of 383 to 29. The bill authorizes the Justice Department to collect data on hate-motivated homicides, assaults, robberies, burglaries, thefts, arsons, vandalism, trespassing and threats. The FBI already publishes a Uniform Crime Report from 16,000 state and local police departments on many crimes, but does not separate hate crimes. The bill aims to help law enforcement officials spot trends and formulate enforcement and educational strategies. "We ought to know the level of the poison that is in our system," said Sen. Paul Simon (D-Ill.), the bill's sponsor.

This bill has attracted much wider support than anti-discrimination bills that protect gays. More than 100 national groups are fighting hard to keep homosexuals in. "We're not just talking about the Bidens and the Kennedys," said Michael Lieberman, associate director of the Anti-Defamation League. Indeed, congressional supporters include such conservatives as Sens. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) and Alan Simpson (R-Wyo.).

But the Senate leadership has not yet scheduled the bill for a vote on the Senate floor because Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) has threatened to attach amendments deemed unacceptable by the bill's supporters. A copy of Helms' amendment obtained by The Washington Post says, in part, that "the homosexual movement threatens the strength and the survival of the American family." Helms derailed a hate crimes statistics bill last year, Helms' office did not return repeated phone calls.

In the District, the Bias-Related Crime Act of 1989, proposed by council member

John A. Wilson (D-Ward 2) and expected to reach the full council this month, would go a step further by increasing penalties for hate crimes and providing appropriate civil relief for the victims. Among the provisions: Criminals would face 1½ times the maximum punishment and, in some juvenile cases, parents could be held responsible for civil damages. "It's a real and symbolic statement . . . because there is a lack of an explicit signal saying this is wrong," said Roger Doughty, the president of the Gay and Lesbian Activists Alliance.

Maryland and Virginia have reporting laws and impose additional penalties for hate crimes, but neither includes anti-homosexual violence. Montgomery County is poised to become an exception this fall when the County Council votes on a measure, introduced by its president, to extend the protections to homosexuals.

Nationwide, five states—California, Oregon, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Connecticut—formally monitor anti-gay crimes, though many cities and counties do.

None of the laws will come soon enough for Johnson, who still vividly remembers his assault in Rock Creek Park. He is now preparing for the trial and plans to file a civil suit against Hyder, of Sutherland, Va., and the others charged with assault with intent to kill and armed robbery, David M. McCall, 18, of Dale City, and Richard C. Grimes, 18, of Montgomery County. "There was no warning. It's not like I had two minutes to stand there and watch," he said. "And I honest to God didn't feel a thing. I felt implosions and heard reverberations and sound. . . . But I didn't say a thing—it was like I moved myself to a higher plane or something."

After the attack ended, Johnson managed to get up and flag help. "I was so enraged that just a simple cry of help was so minimal," he said. "I had to express anger or get out some primal scream. I think everyone in Northwest heard me yell."

It took Johnson months to recover physically, and emotional scars remain. There is the fear of being alone in the dark, a childhood kind of terror most people ultimately shed, but is back again for Johnson. A man who loves the fresh air, he now keeps his windows tightly locked. He takes cabs door to door and pays the cabdriver an extra dollar to wait for him to get inside safely. He moved to a new house in upper Northwest when he found it too painful to live near the scene of his attack.

A year later, Johnson has nightmares. His doorbell rings and there's a man there about to attack him. "Sometimes I run, sometimes I stand my ground, sometimes I slam the door," he said. But the outcome is always the same—Johnson is brutally beaten. "I'm always the victim."

HATRED INTRUDES ON COMMUNITY—JEWISH HAVEN HIT BY VANDALISM

(By Sue Anne Pressley)

If it's Saturday in the Kemp Mill community, the streets are filled with families walking to synagogue. Cars are not driven, phones go unanswered, money can't be touched. And the Nut House is closed until dark.

The neighborhood, near Silver Spring in Montgomery County, is the largest Orthodox Jewish community in the Washington area, and is considered to be the largest between Baltimore and Miami. It is a newer, suburban version of an ethnic community, where the Hebrew bookstore and the kosher butcher are found in a strip shopping center, and the Nut House, the region's only kosher pizza parlor, closes on Friday evenings for the Sabbath.

"Everything that is needed for the total Jew is right here," said Rabbi Herzel Kranz, after counting off the neighborhood services available to Jewish families—the Hebrew Day School, the Yeshiva High School, the Hebrew shelter for the homeless, the two synagogues on the same street. In fact, only 25 percent of Kemp Mill's 2,000 families are Orthodox Jews, but their presence is quite visible—the men in their yarmulkes, the women in their head covers, the Sabbath parade along the sidewalks to synagogue.

In recent weeks, however, the normal rhythms of the middle-class neighborhood have been disturbed by a series of burglaries and acts of vandalism, leading to widespread rumors of a siege by "skinheads" or other racist groups. One night, swastikas were spray-painted on several vehicles, including some belonging to non-Jews; on another night, about 40 car windows were shot out with BB guns. Two weeks ago, in scenic Kemp Mill Park, the statement "All Jews Must Die Now" was painted on a sidewalk.

Already, residents of the area had been shaken by a March incident in which a young Asian man was beaten in nearby Sligo Creek Park by a group of youths and young adults who shouted racial epithets.

The new concerns brought more than 300 residents to a community meeting last week, where county police and other authorities insisted that the neighborhood is not the target of any organized hate group.

"In none of the cases have we any evidence to allow us to factually attribute these cases to an organization of neo-Nazis or skinheads," said Lt. Richard Swain of the county police. "It just doesn't exist. They didn't even know how to make a swastika."

Instead, police believe most of the latest damage has been caused by youths who live in the community, "your neighbors' children," Swain said. The case resulting from the March beating, in which 10 people were arrested, is in the courts, and a neighborhood man was recently charged with the vandalism in Kemp Mill Park; police say his inspiration was apparently the recent movie "Betrayed," which details the actions of a white supremacist group.

Residents of Kemp Mill, many of whom lost relatives to the Holocaust, agree that no hateful acts—no matter how young or ignorant the offenders—can be allowed to intrude upon the peace of their community. "I've lived here since 1959," said Nathan Blitzstein, a retired businessman. "Until now, everything is nice, a quiet neighborhood. This is our home."

The second-graders at the Hebrew Day School are having a lesson in ancient law. They sit attentively in a room at the Silver Spring Jewish Center, one of two Orthodox synagogues on Arcola Avenue. The boys are wearing yarmulkes, some embroidered with their names, one decorated with Ghostbuster cartoons.

At the front of the classroom, Ellen Shames, a blue sports jacket over her arm, is explaining the ancient biblical law that forbids Jews to wear garments containing both linen and wool. Her task is to check for the offending shatnos, she said, ripping out linings and sending snippets of material to a special lab in New York for testing.

Rabbi Kranz breaks in to explain. "You see, students," he said, "God wanted not to mix the different parts of the world he created, the animal kingdom with the vegetable kingdom. For whatever reasons. And I guess God has His reasons."

The life plan for the Orthodox, who make up about 5 percent of the region's 160,000 Jews, is laid out in the five Books of Moses in the Old Testament. There are 613 commandments, "a whole ancient system, a whole kaleidoscope; the Bible touches everything," Kranz said. From there, for example, come the dietary laws that forbid eating shellfish or pork or mixing meat and dairy foods, and the strict guidelines for observing the Sabbath.

Kemp Mill's reputation as the center for Orthodox life is a fairly recent development. Initially, the region's Jewish community was established in the District, near Capitol Hill, but the migration to the suburbs after World War II brought several synagogues to eastern Montgomery County. Because Orthodox Jews do not drive cars on the Sabbath, they try to live within walking distance of the synagogue; thus, the Orthodox community, including lawyers, teachers, and business executives, began to spring up.

In 1962, Rabbi Gadaliah Anemer was the first to begin services in his home near the new Kemp Mill subdivision, which was then under construction. Several years later, he founded Yeshiva High School. Eventually, Anemer's Young Israel congregation and the Silver Spring Jewish Center would occupy synagogues within a stone's throw of each other on Arcola Avenue.

"Orthodoxy is the religion that Jews have practiced for thousands of years," Anemer said. "The numbers may be small, but we are strong."

At the Nut House, a customer may order a pepperoni pizza—but the meaty ingredient is vegetable pepperoni.

The region's only kosher pizza parlor, on Georgia Avenue, strictly follows Jewish dietary laws, and a rabbi appears daily to inspect the preparation of food. For 25 years, the business was a Planters Peanut outlet—thus the name—but about five years ago, owners Ira Fieldman and Harry Atkin decided to introduce pizza. It is now the dominant item on the menu.

The restaurant is located in what amounts to the Orthodox shopping district. Around the corner is the Shalom Strictly Kosher Meats and Delicatessen, where the signs over the meat counter read "Lots of Lox," and "Cry Me a Liver." The only two Hebrew bookstores in the Washington region are nearby, as well as a couple of kosher bakeries.

At the Nut House, there's a no frills, New York-style operation. An Israeli poster decorates the wall. Tacked on the bulletin board are a flier for Jewish Vegetarians of North America and a notice about an "Analysis of Israel's Current Political Situation."

"There aren't many dining options around," said Fieldman, who closes the restaurant for the Sabbath, which is observed from sunset Friday until sunset Saturday. "A lot of Orthodox people are just getting used to being able to eat out."

In Montgomery County, acts of racial or ethnic harassment are on the rise, Kemp Mill residents were told at their community meeting Wednesday night. Through August, 133 such incidences were reported, authorities said, compared with 88 for the same period last year.

A teacher's aide at the Hebrew Day School, who found a white swastika painted on her car door one recent morning, said she cannot think about the sight without crying.

"Both of my parents are survivors of the labor camps in Poland," she said. "We really have no relatives; my uncles, my aunts, they all died over there. At first, I thought this thing was directed specifically at me, and then I heard it was random.

"But I've thought about it a lot," she said, "and it still makes me sad."●

CONTINUATION OF PERFORMANCE MANAGEMENT AND RECOGNITION SYSTEM

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of H.R. 3282, a bill to authorize performance management and recognition system through March 31, 1991, now at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3282) to amend title 5, United States Code, to authorize the continuation of the performance management and recognition system through March 31, 1991 and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 884

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senators PRYOR, STEVENS, and SASSER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk will read as follows:

The Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], for Mr. PRYOR (for himself, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. SASSER) proposes an amendment numbered 884.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, line 4, insert "equal or" before "exceed".

On page 5, after line 21, add the following:

SEC. 6. TEMPORARY CONTINUATION OF PROVISION RELATING TO THE SCHEDULE FOR PAYING THE LUMP-SUM CREDIT TO CERTAIN ANNUITANTS.

Section 6001(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 (5 U.S.C. 8343a note) is amended by striking "October 1, 1989" and inserting "December 3, 1989".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 884) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, "Shall the bill pass"?

So the bill (H.R. 3282), as amended, was passed.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT EXTENSION

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 262, S. 1672, a bill to extend the expiration date of the Defense Production Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1672) to amend the Defense Production Act of 1950.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I rise to speak on behalf of S. 1672, a bill reported by the Banking Committee on September 20, 1989. This bill simply extends the expiration date of the Defense Production Act [DPA] for 1 year, from September 30, 1989, to September 30, 1990, and authorizes appropriations under the act of $50 million for the Defense Department to carry out its existing DPA programs for an additional year. Let me briefly explain, for those who are not familiar with this statute, what the DPA is and why the committee wants a 1-year extension in its present authorities.

The Defense Production Act was initially enacted in 1950 to mobilize the Nation's productive capacity after the outbreak of the Korean war. The act has been reauthorized and amended a number of times, most recently in 1986. When first enacted, the DPA contained seven titles. After the Korean war, authorities in four of the act's seven titles were permitted to expire. Presently, only three titles of the DPA are in effect, and they are due to expire on September 30, 1989, unless renewed.

Title I grants to the President the power to prioritize performance of specific contracts to meet urgent defense requirements, and to allocate resources to industries to optimize the production of defense materials. Title III authorizes the President to use loans, loan guarantees, purchase commitments, and grants to encourage contractors to establish or expand activities to provide increased industrial capacity for defense needs. Title III programs are presently managed by the Department of Defense with the Air Force serving as executive agent. The bill authorizes $50 million for the Defense Department to continue its title III programs during 1990.

Under title VII, the President is authorized to provide antitrust defenses to private entities conducting joint activities under voluntary agreements aimed at solving production and distribution problems impairing national defense preparedness. The creation of such voluntary agreements must be initiated by the President, and must be approved by the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission before any antitrust protections are accorded to the participants.

Since the last renewal of DPA authorities in 1986, a number of reports have been issued by the Department of Defense, the Defense Science Board, the Center for Strategic and International Studies, and the Office of Technology Assessment expressing concern that the United States is experiencing a substantial decline in industrial sectors necessary to support defense production. A 1988 report entitled "Bolstering Defense Industrial Competitiveness" authored by the Under Secretary of the Department of Defense stated:

Many basic industries of importance to defense production have declined, threatening the responsiveness of our industrial base. Left unchecked, such erosion could rob the U.S. of industrial capabilities critical to national security.

That report argued that certain industries such as semiconductors, telecommunications, and computers are of strategic importance because they are linked to so many other important elements of the industrial base.

In October 1988, in a report that received front page coverage in the New York Times, the Department of Defense's Science Board released its own examination of this issue entitled "A Study of America's Defense Industrial and Technology Base." That Board, made up of distinguished American industrial and financial leaders, stated that in the years since its last report in 1980:

The global, political and economic scene has changed considerably, America's technological superiority has diminished. Many countries including Japan and the Soviet Union challenge our leadership in technologies essential to defense. We are losing out in the semiconductor field * * * these technologies are the foundation of our very defense system * * * more and more of our defense systems require manufactured components from foreigners.

The Defense Science Board also stated that our allies "make a concerted effort to directly tie their nation's industrial policy to national security goals," and called upon the U.S. Government to identify and support "those technologies where our country should be a leader or competitive to assure national security and economic competitiveness."

The Center for Strategic and International Studies in a recently completed analysis entitled "Deterrence in Decay" written under the leadership of Senators BINGAMAN and MCCAIN, stated:

> The U.S. defense industrial base faces significant challenges and little is being done to address them. If present trends persist, the once-mighty arsenal of democracy could become * * * perhaps even incapable of manufacturing the material required for deterrence or for protecting U.S. national interests around the globe.

The Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] issued its own study on the decline of U.S. high technology industries needed for the Nation's defense. That report entitled "Holding the Edge" states that U.S. leadership in high technology industries that are vital to defense is eroding in the face of strong international competitiveness. It further stated that "longstanding industrial and trade policies may have to be reformed if the United States is to maintain the industrial capacity necessary to support essential dual use technologies."

Facing the expiration of basic DPA authorities this year, the Banking Committee had planned, in preparation for a multiyear reauthorization of the act, to hold a series of hearings to examine such concerns and to determine whether the Nation's industrial and technological base is adequate to ensure the Nation's defense. Due to the need to devote most of its attention in 1989 to legislation dealing with the savings and loan crisis, the committee has so far been able to hold only two hearings on these issues.

On July 11, 1989, the committee heard from three former officials who had major responsibilities for ensuring the adequacy of our Nation's national defense: Mr. Frank Carlucci, former Secretary of Defense and presently vice chairman of the Carlyle Group in Washington, DC; Adm. Bobby Inman, former Deputy Director of the Central Intelligence Agency and presently chairman and CEO of Westmark Systems, Inc., of Austin, TX; and Dr. Robert Costello, former Under Secretary of Defense and presently at the Hudson Institute in Indianapolis, IN.

On July 19 the committee heard from: Mr. Robert Galvin, chairman of the board of the Motorola Corp.; Mr. Norman Augustine, chairman of the board and CEO of the Martin-Marietta Corp.; and Mr. Stanley Pace, chairman of the board and CEO of the General Dynamics Corp.

On July 24, 1989, Senator DIXON of the Banking Committee introduced S. 1379, a bill to make amendments to the authorities accorded to the President by the DPA. The administration has also requested that a number of amendments be made to the DPA.

Many of the witnesses at the July 11 and 19 hearings urged the committee to use the occasion of renewing the DPA as an opportunity to carry out a thorough examination of issues related to the competitiveness of our key industries and the adequacy of our defense industrial base. In order to provide adequate time for such an examination, the bill reported by the committee reauthorizes the current law for 1 year.

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the legislation to extend the authorities of the Defense Production Act. The authorities of the act will terminate, unless extended, on September 30, 1989.

The Defense Production Act has been used during the last few years to deal with critical defense production problems. Two recent examples illustrate the importance of these authorities. In March 1989 the rocket propellant mixing facility at the Hercules Aerospace Co. in Magna, UT, was destroyed. The title I authorities of the act were used to assemble a temporary mixing plant. In May 1988, an explosion in Henderson, NV, destroyed Pepcon, one of the two domestic producers of ammonium perchlorate, an essential ingredient for solid rocket fuel. This explosion affected strategic and tactical missiles used by the military, and launch vehicles used by NASA. The DPA authorities are now being used to provide for the production and distribution of this chemical to meet U.S. defense and commercial space program requirements.

The authorities are also being used to give priority to the construction contract for a new facility to produce ammonium perchlorate of highest quality for space program use. By using the priority and allocations authorities of the Defense Production Act, work on that facility is being completed within a year after it began. Without the priority status, it has been estimated that construction would have required 2 to 3 years to complete.

The continuation of these authorities is essential to our industrial readiness and vital to our national defense. It is critical that the Senate act today, and vote to extend the Defense Production Act.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Banking Committee be discharged from further consideration of the House companion, H.R. 3281; that all after the enacting clause be stricken and the text of S. 1672 be substituted in lieu thereof, that the bill be read the third time and passed and the vote to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

So the bill (H.R. 3281), as amended, was passed.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED—S. 1672

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1672 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENT BY THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore, and upon the recommendation of the Republican leader, pursuant to Senate Resolution 171 (101st Congress, 1st session), appoints the following Senators as Republican Party members of the special delegation of Members of the Senate that shall host an International Conference on Global Environmental Issues: the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ].

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M. AND MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 9:30 a.m., Thursday, September 28; and that following the time for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business until 10 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the Senate will be voting at 10 a.m. tomorrow with a strong possibility of other votes occurring throughout the day and into the evening. Mr. President, it is my hope that we can complete action on the DOD bill tomorrow, as well as the remaining appropriations bills—State, Commerce, Justice and the VA-HUD bill—and the short-term continuing resolution.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 9:30 A.M.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, if my dear friend from Alaska has no further business, and if no Senator is seeking recognition, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess, under the previous order, until 9:30 a.m., Thursday, September 28.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:56 p.m., recessed until Thursday, September 28, 1989, at 9:30 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SOVIET DRAFT LAWS ON CONSCIENCE

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the Congressional Human Rights Caucus recently held a briefing on the proposed drafting of the new Soviet law regarding religion—the freedom of conscience.

The Soviets have been promising for about 2 years that a new law offering protection for religious believers would be forthcoming. The prospects, Mr. Speaker, are still uncertain but they have at least two drafts on the drawing board, and I understand the third draft is near completion.

During a recent trip to the Soviet Union with my colleague, Congressman FRANK WOLF, we had several lengthy discussions with Soviet officials about the possible ramifications of the second draft language. Although the Soviets acted surprised and distraught that we had copies of their so-called secret second draft, we questioned a number of the provisions and pressed the authorities on point after point.

In reading the draft, several questions come to mind:

What regulations would govern the registration of synagogues and churches? Would it require approval of a legal document, thus setting the congregations up to arbitrary denial? Or, would registration be merely a pro forma procedure?

Would the new law adequately protect religious believers against discrimination in their education, jobs, and career?

Are provisions made for conscientious objectors? Would alternative community service be available? The draft law suggests that a court decision would be required prior to an individual being relieved of "legally established duties," that is conscription in the Army.

What would be the role of the Council on Religious Affairs in protecting the rights of religious believers?

Mr. Speaker, I believe that codification of a new Soviet law guaranteeing freedom of conscience will be an important step in making the welcome changes of glasnost and perestroika systemic and not simply arbitrary. A well written law will offer the religious believers a legal recourse should local authorities decide to be heavy-handed. Most importantly, the religious activists will have a document on which to depend for legal protection.

Mr. Speaker, the drafting of a new law on conscience should fit into the equation leading up to the 1991 Moscow Human Rights Conference. Secretary of State James Baker has again and again reiterated that U.S. participation in—and sanction of—the conference is contingent on the release of prisoners of conscience, removal of certain obstacles to free emigration, abolition of objectionable provisions of the criminal code and the approval of legislation regarding freedom of the press and freedom of religion.

The changes in the Soviet law on conscience are very important and we must be very conscious of the proposed language. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of my colleagues I would like to insert for the RECORD the testimony given at the hearing by Rev. Stan DeBoe, O.SS.T. I believe his summary of the changes in the Soviet Union on behalf of the religious community and his concise presentation of the concerns which remain regarding the Soviet law on conscience would be beneficial for my colleagues:

FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE FOR ALL SOVIET CITIZENS

(Statement by Rev. Stan De Boe, O.SS.T.)

The changes that are taking place at unprecedented rates in the Soviet Union under the policies of glasnost have had a great effect on religious believers. Although all citizens have benefited from the reforms, religious believers, being the largest group, have also been the greatest beneficiaries.

Some of the changes which are most evident include:

1. The return of church buildings and monasteries. According to researchers at Keston College in the last year and a half 1,715 "cult buildings" have been returned to religious associations, permission to build 229 new structures has been given and 257 buildings are being re-equipped for religious usage.

2. The increased availability of Bibles and religious literature. Customs and postal regulations have been relaxed to allow people to carry more religious literature into the Soviet Union and several Western Christian organizations have received permission to import large quantities of literature. It has also been reported that the most popular exhibit at the recently concluded Moscow Book Fair was the religious literature booth.

3. The increased permission for emigration of Jews and Pentecostals.

4. The amount of coverage that religious events receives in the Soviet press. These include interviews with religious leaders, reporting on religious activities and the printing of letters which report of continued problems that believers have with local officials.

As welcomed as these changes are, it should be remembered that none of them are as of yet guaranteed by a change in the Soviet laws on religion. The Law on Religious Associations of 1929 is still on the books, although it is not being followed. New laws have been promised and several drafts have been circulated and discussed. Two drafts have been reported by and commented on by Keston College. The first was written by Yuri Rozenbaum, the second was submitted by Konstantin Kharchev, the former Chairman of the Council for Religious Affaris.

According to researchers at Keston, the following points would be changes for religious believers under the new laws, if enacted:

1. Freedom of conscience appears to have a broader interpretation, with greater freedoms given to religious education. This would expand the understanding of freedom of conscience and remove the unequal position which believers now have and allow for freedom of religious and anti-religious propaganda.

2. Guarantees against discrimination, preventing the bringing of any civil or criminal cases against citizens simply on the grounds of their religious faith.

3. Restore to religious organizations the right of juridical person.

4. Greater scope for charitable activities and literature production. Both drafts omit the ban on religious organizations carrying out charitable activities, make provisions for religious groups to participate in public life and social organizations and allow all citizens to "freely acquire and use" religious literature in the language of their choice.

There are still some questions left unanswered by the drafts such as:

1. The matter of atheistic education as a part of school curriculum.

2. Atheistic education funded by taxes, which are paid by believers, also.

3. The registration of church bodies. Registration gives permission for churches to be open and function. The drafts continue to use registration as a form of sanctioning rather than as recognition of an existing community. Also, there seems to be two different forms of registration. In the draft by the CRA, all religious institutions from parish to Patriarchate are defined as "religious associations," "religious groups," or "religious societies," which may apply for registration if a group of ten (10) adult citizens apply with the local soviet. The Rozenbaum version allows for registration of statutes rather than associations.

Also unanswered is the question of the status of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, the largest illegal religious body in the Soviet Union. Though neither draft explicitly permits many of the activities that believers would like to involve themselves in, the current climate seems to be that everything that is not expressly forbidden is permitted.

The Supreme Soviet has placed discussion of the draft laws on its calendar for this session, as the twenty first of twenty three items, although they do not have to be discussed in any particular order.

To conclude, I would like to quote Dr. John Anderson, a researcher at Keston College from his March, 1989 commentary: The new law seems likely to be a significant improvement on its predecessor, especially as the last article of the CRA draft states that should the USSR accede to an international treaty whose provisions differ from the Law on Freedom of Conscience then the former shall be applied. Yet one must express certain reservations about the ambiguous phrasing of some of the CRA draft and note that while Gorbachev has expressed the desire to create a "law governed state", many officials remain reluctant or psychologically unable to commit themselves to such a formula. For this reason party policy seems likely to remain more important than law for the immediate future.

Mr. Speaker, I also would like to include for the RECORD excerpts from the testimony presented by Pamela Braun Cohen, national president, Union of Councils for Soviet Jews:

THE STATE OF JEWISH RELIGION AND CULTURE IN THE SOVIET UNION

(Remarks of Pamela Braun Cohen, National President Union of Councils for Soviet Jews)

It is said that laws will be introduced and debated in the next session of the Supreme Soviet and the Congress of Peoples' Deputies that would reform and democratize basic human rights and freedoms in the Soviet Union, including emigration, expression, thought, press, and religious conscience. All of these have long been matters of priority concern to the United States Congress in general, and particularly to the members of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus. They are of paramount concern to Soviet Jews, Pentacostals, and other religious believers in the Soviet Union.

Today's briefing has focused on the draft of the proposed new Soviet law regarding religion and freedom of conscience. The threshold question, of course, is whether or not such a law will be enacted in today's Soviet Union. Equally important, however, is to understand the context for such legislation: the conditions of Soviet society that make institutional reform so vital, and its implementation the acid test of true reform.

I am therefore pleased to respond to your request for information on the state of Jewish religion and culture in the Soviet Union.

Like the more than half-million evangelical Pentacostals, and unlike most of the other 100 or so ethnic nationality groups in the USSR, Soviet Jews have been singled out for religious and cultural persecution the Bolshevik Revolution. They have been the target of the government's virulent policy of anti-Semitism. And absent geographical and political representation, Jews do not have either resource as a unifying base to conduct an adequate defense.

Religious believers in the USSR share a history of religious persecution. They also share a common concern that only institutionalized reform of the laws on freedom of religion, conscience, and emigration will prevent anti-reform elements from reversing even the slight progress that has recently been observed.

The last 70 years of Soviet rule have been characterized by an unremitting, governmental onslaught on Jewish culture and religion amounting to an attempted, and nearly successful, cultural genocide. A succession of hammer blows annihilated all but traces of Jewish life in the Soviet Union. Jewish religious activity was suppressed, institutions closed, religious and cultural leaders arrested, Jewish self-expression denied. That a spark of Jewish consciousness and tradition remains alive today in the Soviet Union is a near miracle.

Jewish tradition, education, self-definition and regularized institutional contact with the world Jewish community were ripped from Russian Jewry, leaving them defenseless against the government's anti-Semitic policy; defenseless to pass Jewish identity to succeeding generations; defenseless to form a community.

The current situation reflects some progress. The Soviet policy of "cultural autonomy" was adopted at the 19th All-Union Party Conference in the summer of 1988. It provided. . . . "Ethnic groups that have no (national) territories should be granted their national cultural needs . . . and to satisfy their religious requirements. . . ."

However, such "autonomy" has not been officially extended to Jews, and positive changes have affected only the surface of the Jewish community, i.e., those few Soviet Jews who have already developed Jewish consciousness.

Today, Jews are especially vulnerable to the broader instability of economic, interethnic and nationalist tensions in the Soviet Union. As we continue to await governmental action on reforms of emigration and freedom of conscience statutes, we also see a refusal by President Gorbachev to include the Jewish Problem in the Supreme Soviet or Communist Party debates concerning the nationalities crisis, despite the fact that nearly 200 Peoples Deputies have urged him to do so, and despite the fact that these deputies have joined the Jewish leaders in seeking a governmental commission to deal with mounting anti-Semitism. So while it is unclear whether there is either sufficient support or time for reformers to make substantive reforms, it is clear that the Soviet Union remains a profoundly anti-Semitic and officially atheistic nation.

Permit me to close with the observations of Vladimir Dashevsky, head of the Moscow Jewish organization "Machanayim", a leader of the Jewish religious community in the Soviet Union, and one of the Soviet Jewish leaders with whom I have discussed these remarks to assure accuracy. He has asked me to tell you:

"These are times of enormous instability in the Soviet Union. In terms of freedom of conscience and religious practice, there has been some partial progress, particularly in the reduction of official intimidation of religious believers. But this progress is given as a favor to demonstrate the "good will" of the authorities; it is not accorded as a matter of right to Soviet Jews and other religious communities. Therefore, we cannot perceive the progress as substantive or real until or unless it is based on rights guaranteed by institutionalization into law and then implemented."

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS HONORS JOSE GUTIERREZ

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, every year the National Endowment for the Arts honors distinguished master folk artists with a fellowship grant for their exemplary artistic traditions in music, crafts, and dance. Today, I stand before my colleagues as the proud representative of Jose Gutierrez, 1 of the 70 recipients selected by his peers as a National Heritage Fellow for 1989.

Jose Gutierrez, a Mexican jarocho musician-singer from Norwalk, CA, began his music career more than 30 years ago. Born on a ranch known as La Costa de la Palma—the Palm Tree Coast—in the State of Veracruz, Mr. Gutierrez is from the region of the jarochos, the local name for the people of the southeastern coastal plain of Mexico.

He grew up surrounded by music. Both his grandfathers were experienced instrumentalists and singers, as was his father and several of his uncles. At the age of 8 he was given his first guitar, a mosquito, the smallest of the rhythm guitars in the characteristic jarocho ensemble. From this early age, Jose has fond memories of staying up till all hours of the night listening to the men of his family making their music, until at last he would fall asleep still clutching his beautiful little guitar.

At the age of 15, Mr. Gutierrez took up the requinto, a small four string melody guitar that plays off against the jarocho harp in explosions of rapid fire syncopations. He recalls hearing of a jarocho group in need of a player, and upon applying, being laughed at for his youth. He tried out nonetheless, and outplayed the other musicians. "I left them waiting," he said, recalling that tryout performance. That particular incident marked the beginning of his professional career in Veracruz.

In the early 1960's, Jose Gutierrez was invited to Mexico City where he was soon performing and recording with what was then considered to be, and still is, the best jarocho ensemble in Mexico.

The late 1960's saw the beginning of Jose Gutierrez' remarkable touring career. He visited and played in almost every European country spending more than a year in Germany alone. He also toured Asia, the Philippines, Australia, all of South and Central America, and Canada. He settled in the United States in the early 1970's where he has made his home in California while continuing his remarkable music career. He was an artist-in-residence at the University of Washington in Seattle for a year, and the master artist/instructor for numerous individual apprenticeships funded through State and Federal sources. He has performed both at the National Folk Festival and at the Smithsonian's Festival of American Folklife, at the Old Town School of Folk Music in Chicago, and for the World Music Institute in New York City.

Even with all these activities he has been unable to support himself and his family through his musical talents alone; and today he works as an automobile mechanic. His dream is to eventually start a small recording studio.

His impeccable technique, the depth and solidity of his musical sensibility, and his wide-ranging comprehension of the complexities of the jarocho tradition make him one of the truly remarkable musicians of our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring Jose Gutierrez for his artistic and artisan accomplishments. He is truly worthy of the national recognition bestowed to him by the Folk Arts Program of the National Endowment for the Arts.

"THE BELL OF DAWN," FROM A CUBAN PRISON

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, Ernesto Diaz Rodriguez has been imprisoned for many years in a Cuban prison. His crime is principled opposition to Fidel Castro.

He has written a book of poetry that is both moving and significant, and the Miami Herald, on September 12, 1989, published an appropriate editorial which deserves to be read by Members of this House:

FROM A CELL, BEAUTY

Inexplicably, poetry has flourished in prisons for centuries, Peru's Cesar Vallejo wrote poems in his jail cell that do not betray a caged existence. Renaissance Italy's Torquato Tasso and Russia's Osip Mandelstam transformed their captors cruelty into works that join wisdom to the loveliest diction.

In our own "dark times," jailed Cuban poet Ernesto Diaz Rodriguez continues the tradition of heroic captives who defy wardens and prison guards with works of unsparing lyricism and hopeful simplicity. The recent publication of a bilingual edition of Mr. Diaz's extraordinary collection of children's poems, The Bell of Dawn, will go unnoticed in fashionable literary circles. That is to be lamented for many reasons.

Ernesto Diaz Rodriguez has been one of Cuba's plantados—prisoners who refuse to "reform"—for more than 20 years. He is from a family of humble fishermen. Initially set at 15 years in prison, his term was extended to 40 years after he was charged in a surrealist indictment with "conspiring to overthrow the Cuban regime"—from his dank, vile prison cell!

Mr. Diaz has been beaten and deprived of basic rights in all the Cuban jails that he has inhabited. PEN, an international group of writers, has taken up his cause. A Washington-based group, Of Human Rights, published the collection. His sons, whom he has not seen in years, live in Miami. Former political prisoner Julio Hernandez Rojo, now of Miami, illustrated the book.

Mr. Diaz wrote the The Bell of Dawn for his sons and for children everywhere. Wholly devoid of bitterness and anger, The Bell of Dawn is written in the key of hope. Images of life's renewal in Nature abound: "Oh my son, if only I could/with a plough of frost/scratch furrows in the night/that holds my throat so tight/do you know what I would do? First/I'd plant white roses."

Astonishingly, these lines were smuggled on minuscule sheets of paper from one of Cuba's worst prisons. And Mr. Diaz has not stopped writing. The Cuban regime must free him. Surely it realizes by now that it will never break the spirit of a man who sings to children from his punishment cells. Cuba's jailers have succeeded only in making Ernesto Diaz Rodriguez's voice purer and his universal message deeper.

THE BUREAUCRACY DOES WORK

HON. AL SWIFT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, the motivational technique that is least used in politics and government is positive reinforcement. The electorate tells us more frequently what we've done wrong than what we've done right. And, in turn, Members of Congress tend to berate the bureaucracy far more often than we praise it. That's too bad. It is as useful to let people know what they do that pleases us as it is to identify what does not.

I recently got a letter from a constituent who understands this very well. The objects of his praise were the people in his local Social Security office in Everett, WA. I asked his permission to put this letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where others could see that usually Government does work the way it is supposed to.

The letter was addressed, importantly, not to me but to "Dear helpful and concerned staff." I thank Mr. Leonard Gurian for writing the letter and I'm happy to share it with all of my colleagues.

I would like to thank you people for your concern and advice in my recent "misunderstanding" with the Social Security Administration. Even if there was no direct part in the resolving of the problem on your part the fact that you were there to give me some encouragement and advice was certainly comforting. You helped to give perspective that I did not have and could not have achieved elsewhere at so "little" cost.

I would also like to put on paper my feelings about the people at the local office of the Social Security office. With no exception they were polite, tolerant (of a man who was quite angry when he first went out to the office) informative, patient, straightforward, and actually, I felt, wanted to help me.

Too often we hear of bureaucrats who want to chalk up one more for the team (or for themselves) having shot down Joe Citizen. No so here. I wish I had the name of the person who helped me at the window out there—she was excellent. Mr. Ron Ferwerda who ultimately passed judgment on my case could not have been any more fair. Perhaps he went by the book but how refreshing it was to be told that if I were prepared to culminate the business right then and there I would not have to come back for the second session.

When I went in for the appointment I felt quite strongly that I should not have to pay for three months of the over-payment because I had been advised when I applied for S.S. to ask for those months. Mr. Ferwerda agreed. Although I felt that someone, somewhere fouled up in sending me the money for the months I did not deserve, the fact is that the money was not mine and should be paid back.

Well, enough already. One hears so many horror stories about people trapped in the labyrinth of government red-tape over "sins" never committed it was indeed heartening to have come out of this business with a judgement that I felt was the only fair one. Thank you.

Sincerely,

LEONARD GURIAN.

VINELAND'S ITALIAN-AMERICANS HONORED

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues the accomplishments of four exemplary Italian-Americans that hail from Vineland, NJ. Cesarina DeCesero, Aldo Fiocchi, Dr. Nicholas Marchione, and Elsie Lovecchio have worked hard over the years to improve their communities and, as an Italian-American myself, I am proud to recognize the accomplishments of these individuals and urge my colleagues to join me in honoring their contributions.

This coming Saturday, September 30, these four individuals will be honored with the 1989 Italian Heritage Spirit of Achievement Award at the Italian-American Heritage Gala Ball in Vineland, NJ. The awards were announced by the chair of the Quincentennary Jubilee Commission in recognition of the respect for traditional Italian values that Cesarina, Aldo, Nicholas, and Elsie have demonstrated. As a member of a congressional task force that will act as liaison to the Christopher Columbus Quincentennary Commission, I am pleased to join in calling attention to the accomplishments of my fellow New Jerseyites.

Also Joseph Fiocchi has dedicated much of his life to helping Vineland's youngsters grow to appreciate the art of sportsmanship and has stood as a positive and influential model for many generations. Aldo was born 78 years ago to a hard-working Italian family from Vineland. As a young man, he enjoyed playing baseball for his Vineland team and in later years, gave much service to the East Vineland Little League. His career took many paths including working at Polmonari's Bakery, farming his property, and working as an Invader Oil dealer. Generations of schoolchildren will remember him as the schoolbus driver for 23 years. He has been active in his community and he, and his wife, Dorothy, have three daughters and five grandchildren.

Aldo Fiocchi's name has become synonymous with dedication to helping local youth grow and learn to handle the responsibilities of adulthood. His efforts will be remembered by many generations of baseball players.

Although Elsie Lovecchio is no longer with us, I know her family will be proud of her when she is given, posthumously, the Heritage Spirit of Achievement Award. In her life, Elsie made many contributions to improving her community and helping her neighbors. A native of New York City, Elsie was particularly proud of her Italian heritage. Learning both Italian and Spanish, she became the first official Spanish interpreter in the South Jersey area's court system. She gave 27 years of service to the municipal, county, State, and Federal court systems and often was called upon to help many of our area Italian residents who needed assistance with the language. Elsie found the time to volunteer on behalf of many civic and charitable organizations, including the Vineland Jaycettes, the American Cancer Society, the Heart Association, the Women's Auxiliary of Newcomb Medical Center, and the Lion's Club Auxiliary. She and her husband Sonny had two children. To her family and to the countless men and women that came into contact with Elsie, her life was a blessing.

Cesarina DeCesero emigrated from Italy with her family in 1956 and soon adapted to her new community and country. Rina pursued her lifelong dream to become a teacher at Saint Francis of Assisi School, and at Vineland Public Schools. She has been instrumental in strengthening the Italian program at Vineland High School and her student can experience the language and culture of Italy through her efforts. Every 2 years, she organizes student trips to Italy and helps further their understanding of the rich cultural traditions of our ancestors. She is truly a credit to her profession and her community and I am pleased that she is being honored through this award.

And last, but not least, Dr. Nicholas Marchione has spent more than half a century as a physician, serving his community with untiring devotion and unstinting humanitarian efforts. Dr. Marchione has been a member of the medical-dental staff of Newcomb Hospital in Vineland, as well as medical director at the Bishop McCarthy Residence for Skilled and Intermediate Care and at the Cumberland Community Adult Medical Day Care Center. A member of many professional associations, he is also the secretary for the Newcomb Foundation Board of Trustees and is on the advisory board of the Vineland Senior Center.

I take special pride in knowing that these Vinelanders will be honored Saturday night. They have met the challenges of daily life while upholding their devotion to their families and their communities and demonstrating pride in their heritage and their roots. I urge my colleagues to join me in commending Aldo Fiocchi, Elsie Lovecchio, Cesarina DeCesero, and Nicholas Marchione.

UNITED STATES FOREIGN POLICY TOWARD A PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF THE ANGOLAN CIVIL WAR

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a sense-of-Congress resolution urging a reassessment and modification of American policy toward Angola. The resolution seeks to strengthen the bond of the African heads of state who are attempting to mediate an end to the fighting between the Government of Angola and the UNITA insurgency. My hope is that this resolution epitomized a bipartisan group of over sixty Members of Congress will stimulate a long-overdue policy debate on this vital question.

The 14-year Angolan war, as we all recognize, has been a massive human disaster. It has left in its wake over 100,000 dead, 50,000 amputees, 400,000 refugees, and 600,000 internally displaced. This large human loss I believe, has to get our attention, and strongly influence the formulation of our policies. Years of efforts by both sides, fueled by outside interests, to settle this conflict by military means have failed. In the meantime, Angolan society has been devastated. Other means—by that I mean diplomatic means—must now be emphasized.

Let me also state from the outset: It is no secret that I and many other Democrats have strongly opposed United States military involvement in what is essentially an internal conflict in Angola.

Repeatedly, I have emphasized that the support which the United States has provided UNITA since late 1985 was ill-conceived: It placed us in an unholy alliance with South Africa; it catered to overly simplistic East-West ideological labels which look even more irrelevant in the Gorbachev era; it was counterproductive to both the exit of Cuban forces from Angola and an eventual reconciliation between the Government of Angola and UNITA, and it hindered the United States from pursuing an even-handed diplomacy.

Nonetheless, these important differences between myself and the administration have not prevented us from cooperating at other levels in seeking peace in Angola.

I applauded the administration's work in brokering the Angola-Namibia accord which laid the basis for the withdrawal of South African and Cuban forces from the region and provided for the transition to independence of Namibia.

In June 1987, I, late Congressman Mickey Leland, and Congressmen MURTHA and RAHALL traveled to Angola to retrieve an American pilot. During that trip, we pressed the Angolan Government to present new proposals for the withdrawal of Cuban forces, and not simply to wait until more time had elapsed. That intervention contributed to advancing the Reagan administration's quest for an Angola-Namibia accord.

It is in this context, then, that I wish to reassess where American policy toward Angola currently stands. While much of what I have to say will be critical of the administration's approach, we nonetheless share common goals. Moreover, my concerns are driven by the urgency of the human disaster in Angola, and by an appreciation that the peace process begun in June at the Gbadolite summit has indeed virtually broken down.

United States policy toward Angola is simply not working. Now is an appropriate moment to advance the public debate of U.S. policy—to question whether policy should be determined by rigid ideological commitments and well-connected public relations firms, or whether there is the possibility for greater rationality and balance in U.S. foreign policy.

In this regard, I have been heartened by the response of Democrats and Republicans alike to this sense of Congress resolution concerning United States relations with the Angolan Government.

This resolution acknowledges important steps taken by the Angolan Government at the urging of the United States—in terms of Cuban troop withdrawal, macroeconomic reform, and entering negotiations with UNITA—and calls on the administration to reciprocate by taking steps to begin normalizing relations with Angola—through the establishment of a United States liaison office in Luanda, support of Angola's entry into the IMF and World Bank, and delivery of humanitarian assistance to all Angolans.

The resolution is not intended to be anti-UNITA, or to deny that UNITA represents a real constituency, and that the Government of Angola must continue to take difficult steps in reconciling with UNITA. It is intended rather to signal the vital need for more balance and moderation in U.S. policy. And apparently, that is a theme which resonates strongly among a large bipartisan segment of Congress: The resolution has 46 Democratic cosponsors and 15 Republican cosponsors.

Any solution to the crisis in Angola requires a realistic compromise that bridges the maximum demands of the Angolan Government and UNITA. Critical to any success are African mediation efforts, centered in the southern African region, that aim at pressing the two sides to moderate their demands; these initiatives, above all other developments, require the strong support of the United States and others.

Unfortunately, however, the administration's evolving diplomatic approach in Angola has begun to fall short in this regard, something which I find deeply disturbing.

After first seeming to support African-led efforts, the administration has drifted into a posture where it now increasingly backs UNITA leader Jonas Savimbi's maximum demands and his refusal to comply with the agreements he made at the historic Gbadolite summit last June. In effect, U.S. policy seems to have become hostage to Savimbi's personal agenda. Lost in the process is any sense of where United States national interests and goals lie, with respect to Angola and the surrounding region.

The administration has moved into a closer and closer embrace of Savimbi, with little apparent regard for: First, how cynical this appears to the other major parties to the negotiations; second, how threatening it is to the ability of the African heads of state to bring the Government of Angola and UNITA soon to a fair compromise; third, and how this contributes to the prolongation of the massive human suffering of innocent Angolans, so long as the fighting continues and real negotiations are postponed.

This approach by the administration has begun to do serious damage to the African-led efforts for peace and a fair compromise in Angola. If the administration continues along its current course, I fear it will systematically undermine the prospects for peace in Angola.

When the United States appears so biased in its perspective, it is hardly surprising that Mr. Savimbi and UNITA become ever more hardline, militaristic, dismissive, and obstructive in the peace talks.

Reaching a peaceful solution in Angola will require sacrifice by both sides. Yet we reportedly provide increasing military assistance to UNITA at the same time that we refuse to pressure Mr. Savimbi to compromise. However much the administration truly desires to see a reconciliation in Angola, its approach has nonetheless proved terribly ineffective: We should not be surprised that the peace process has in recent weeks virtually broken down, partly as a consequence of U.S. policy, and principally due to Savimbi's hardline actions. Savimbi has refused to accept Mobutu's proposal for a cease-fire, rejected what he agreed to at Gbadolite, and now spurned a direct appeal from President Bush and Assistant Secretary Cohen to appear at the September 18 round of talks in Kinshasa.

Contrary to what the administration told us when the peace process began at the Gbadolite summit in June, the administration has not stood to the side and respected the integrity of the negotiations as they unfolded under the direction of African leaders.

Instead, the administration has recently begun to intervene directly in the negotiations, prescribing the exact contents of an eventual settlement.

It has reinterpreted the understandings reached at Gbadolite—strictly in line with Savimbi's preferences—in a way that directly contradicts both the communiques issued by the African heads of state at Gbadolite in June, Harare in August, and Kinshasa in September, as well as the individual statements of Presidents Mobutu, Kaunda, Bongo, Perreira, and others. We are led to believe that Savimbi in fact did not commit himself to negotiate an integration of UNITA into the Angolan political structure and a temporary and voluntary retirement, something altogether different from the opinion of the respected and friendly African leaders who have participated in the talks.

The administration has aggressively intervened in the negotiating process by demanding that any final settlement be in line with Savimbi's position that the Angolan Government be dissolved, a national unity government be established, and an election be held to write a new constitution.

Finally, the administration has not followed through on its expressed desire not only to continue supporting Savimbi, but at the same time to demonstrate a degree of balance and impartiality through steps which would begin to normalize relations with the Government of Angola.

Instead, there is continued, strained communication with the Government of Angola and no evidence whatsoever of a commitment by the administration to reward the Government for the withdrawal of Cuban forces under the United States-brokered Angola-Namibia accord, for its extensive macroeconomic reforms, and for its decision to negotiate with UNITA. There is still no United States liaison office in Luanda. Nor has the administration supported Angola's full participation in the IMF and World Bank. This implicitly denies us any serious leverage in our dealing with the Angolan Government.

In closing, let me simply reiterate my desire for a serious reappraisal of United States policy toward Angola. The moment has arrived for a far more balanced, informed, and rational policy, one less partisan in conception, less driven by narrow ideological passions or narrow political pressures here in Washington. The human disaster in Angola has gone on for far too long.

IN HONOR OF THE MOST REVEREND FRANCIS JOHN MUGAVERO

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Most Reverend Francis John Mugavero on the occasion of his retirement. For the past 21 years, Reverend Mugavero has served the community where he was born and raised as Bishop of the Diocese of Brooklyn, NY. Since his ordination in 1940, Reverend Mugavero has devoted his time and energy to improving the lives of the people of New York.

During his distinguished career, the Most Reverend Francis John Mugavero has accomplished more than many Americans who devote their lives to serving God and mankind. In honor of his work on behalf of the retarded, Reverend Mugavero has received the humanitarian award from the Association for Help of Retarded Children, and the Man of the Year Award from the Community Mayors of New York State. But his work with the retarded is just one facet of Reverend Mugavero's career. In fact, it would be difficult to list all the honors which Reverend Mugavero has been accorded. In 1987 alone, Reverend Mugavero received the family of New York award from Governor Cuomo, the Laguardia medal from Mayor Koch and was honored by resolution in the New York State Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues in the House join me in commending the Most Reverend Francis John Mugavero for his service and dedication to the people of New York. His commitment to lightening the burden of the poor and less fortunate among us has been an inspiration for us all.

REPEAL SECTION 89—SUPPORT THE DORGAN AMENDMENT BUDGET RECONCILIATION

HON. DANA ROHRABACHER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN]. His amendment would repeal the unfair section 89 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

The goal of section 89 was to expand the benefits of health insurance to cover more workers. The result of section 89? Many businesses have been forced to drop their plans altogether.

When Congress passed section 89, it saddled businesses, large and small alike, with huge administrative costs, increased paperwork, and possible tax penalties. It is obvious that Congress must repeal section 89.

Section 89 was designed to prevent fringe benefits such as health insurance from being provided only to highly paid employees. If a small business offers health, life, or accident plans to their employees, they are subject to a series of complicated nondiscrimination tests for each individual plan.

Section 89 is excessively expensive and complicated, and is causing many employers to reduce or eliminate benefits completely, rather than risk noncompliance. Regulations were finally issued for section 89 on March 7 by the Treasury Department. These regulations were described as "the size of a short but intricate novel." Witnesses in hearings before the Committee on Small Business estimated that aggregate compliance costs will range from $1 billion to $5 billion. The answer is not revision, the answer is repeal.

I urge my colleagues to support the repeal of section 89. I include the following article on section 89 in the RECORD.

SECTION 89: TAX CODE LIMITS WORKERS' CHOICES

(By Roy E. Cordato)

Over the last decade workers have come to benefit by an invigorating dose of competition and choice with respect to health insurance plans. While most companies once offered their employees one health insurance policy—take it or leave it—most workers now have the opportunity to choose among dozens of options. Workers can now make trade-offs between higher or lower wages and more or less extensive health care insurance coverage. They can tailor their compensation packages to their own needs. If they are young, single, and at low risk, they have the opportunity to accept more of their compensation in the form of wages and less in the form of extensive health care insurance coverage. Conversely, if they have a family or are older workers who may be at higher risk, they can make other trade-offs. Clearly, these kinds of options have helped the average wage earner.

One section of the Internal Revenue Code threatens to take a good part of that freedom away by penalizing both employers and employees in workplaces where these kinds of options are available. The justification for Section 89, instituted as part of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, is based on knee-jerk egalitarianism. The tax system is being used here to reduce "employee-benefit discrimination" i.e., to see to it that lower paid workers get the same health care coverage as higher paid workers. In order to comply with Section 89, employers will have to correct disparities in health care coverage that is freely chosen by lower and higher paid workers. If these disparities are not corrected, those higher paid workers with more extensive plans will have to pay a tax penalty. The virtues of free choice are turned into vices by the tax code.

There are many problems with the Section 89 requirement, not the least of which is the underlying assumption that all employees within a workplace should have the same level of health insurance coverage. The fact is that when free choice is allowed, it is likely that equality of result will never be achieved. People make choices based on their own needs and preferences, which always differ from one person to another. Policies that attempt to force quality of result at the expense of free choice can never make people better off. Section 89 is no exception.

But even from an egalitarian perspective, this provision in the tax code doesn't make much sense. Its intent is not to ensure that everyone's level of compensation is the same, but to equalize one component of everyone's compensation package in a given workplace. In fact, however, the after-tax dollar value of workers' compensation packages isn't likely to be any more "equitable" after than before Section 89's leveling process takes place.

If lower paid workers are forced to take more extensive health insurance coverage, it will be at the expense of money wages or some other benefits. The issue for employers is how much it costs them to compensate labor, not what form that compensation takes. The value of a worker's compensation package is determined by how much the worker contributes to the production process. Without an increase in productivity from the worker, there is no reason to expect that the dollar value of his compensation package would be increased.

This would be especially damaging to very low paid employees, working at or near the minimum wage. Since their wages could not be lowered, those whose productivity does not justify a higher valued compensation package would lose their jobs. In cases where higher paid workers have to take less extensive coverage, wages or other benefits would have to be increased in order for employers to retain their services. Section 89 would neither make compensation among workers more equitable nor make workers better off.

Obviously Section 89 is no deal for employers either. Many companies offer their employees hundreds of health insurance options. Remember, simply offering health insurance plans in a nondiscriminatory way is not good enough for the social engineers who crafted Section 89. Companies will have to determine if the dollar value of the insurance plans that their employees actually choose is distributed among them in such a way that lower paid employees do not have lower valued plans. As with nearly all government programs, free choice is the enemy of Section 89.

Given that the administrative costs of this process will be very high, it may be cost effective for companies to take what might best be called the noncompliance option. If a company decides not to put itself through the battery of tests that the IRS requires, or if the IRS determines that inequities still exist, those employees earning over $75,000 (as low as $45,000 under some circumstances) who have higher valued plans will be taxed on a portion of those benefits. Since this would be tantamount to a pay cut for these workers, it is likely that employers, in order to retain them, would increase their wages to compensate for the added tax burden. It may be less expensive for an employer to do this than to bear the costs associated with strict compliance. Of course the Treasury is hoping that many employers will take this option because it is these tax penalties that are supposed to make Section 89 a $300 million revenue raiser for the government.

This suggests that Section 89 was put in the tax code more for its possibilities as a revenue raiser than as a means of achieving social justice. The government benefits from Section 89 to the extent that it is not complied with. This could provide the logic behind why it has been made so complicated.

Section 89 also might be a back-door method of implementing a mandated health insurance program. As with proposals to mandate health insurance, the formula that is used to determine if the values of health insurance policies are distributed equally includes part-time employees working more than 17.5 hours per week. This means that many part-time employees, who typically haven't qualified for health insurance benefits, must be provided with the same plans as full-time workers.

This could impose real hardships on these workers. In particular, it would create an incentive for employers to offer part-time employment that entails less than 17.5 hours of work per week. Workers who desire less than full-time employment, but more than just a few hours a week, may have to piece together an income from several different sources. Those employees who remain part-time, but work more than 17.5 hours per week, will probably have to trade off lower wages in exchange for their health insurance benefits. Since most people who work at part-time jobs do so for the extra cash, not for the benefits, this kind of trade-off would clearly make them worse off.

As social policy, Section 89 of the IRS Code has no justification. It presumably is meant to improve living standards for lower paid workers. But in reality it will make workers in all income categories worse off by restricting their liberty to choose the compensation package that best fits their needs and to freely negotiate labor contracts. In addition it will raise labor costs to business, which will mean slower growth and job creation rates for the economy as a whole.

CENTENNIAL CEREMONY HONORS CENTRAL RAILROAD TERMINAL IN JERSEY CITY

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, ceremonies marking an important page in America's history will be held in Jersey City on Saturday, September 30, 1989, at 10 a.m. in Liberty State Park. The event will be a celebration commemorating the 100th anniversary of the Central Railroad of New Jersey terminal, which ceased operation on April 29, 1967.

This great railroad station carried tens of thousands of passengers daily in the New Jersey rail systerm. Its train base emptied into a ferry house which allowed passengers to take short boat rides to Manhattan.

Just a few hundred feet from the point where the Hudson River meets upper New York Bay, the terminal offers perhaps the most exciting view of New York City's skyline to the east, and the Statue of Liberty to the south. It performed its greatest task during the heavy migration periods when individuals from all over the world were taken from Ellis Island by ferry to the train station. It was from this terminal that thousands of men, women, and children ventured forth to communities throughout the country to start new lives.

The train terminal served as a tremendous people mover and was saved from destruction or conversion as commercial or industrial property on several occasions. The Jersey City terminal was one of several railroad-maritime passenger terminals that once existed in the New York Harbor area. It was a harborside facility, serving both train and ferry traffic. The existing Jersey City terminal complex dates to 1914, when a new train shed and ferry house were built around the remodeled 1889 station house.

The pride of the terminal was the corrugated steel ferry house. According to the Jersey Journal of March 25, 1975:

Completed in 1893, it was the marvel of its time. Like the rail yards behind it, the terminal stands on the filled-in salt marsh that was called South Cove by early Dutch settlers.

It was from this ancient inlet, from a dock at what is now Phillip Street in the village of Communipaw, that the first ferry moved across the harbor. The gleaming CNJ terminal, like the others to the north, was the East Coast railhead of the nation's train network. Short of spanning a mile-wide river, Jersey City was as close to New York as you could get.

The main terminal building is topped by a huge lantern-like beacon, similar to the one atop the historic Metropolitan Life Building across the river.

On each side of this centerpiece, four gables protrude from the mansard roof, from which eager tourists could get an unusual view.

Behind it lies the train shed, which once shielded 20 trains from the weather. The steel and concrete ribs of its roof are supported by more than 250 cast iron ionic columns. One of these is missing, though.

As the first few passengers hopped off the steam-powered trains in 1893, this column was shipped to Chicago as an example of American manufacturing skill at the Columbian Esposition. After an 18-month display, it was sent back, but never made it. There was a train wreck, and the column was badly damaged.

The beautiful station was saved in 1965–66 by then-Governor of New Jersey, Richard J. Hughes, who arranged for financial assistance to save the railroad property.

On November 17, 1966, an auction was to be held, conducted by the famous Joseph P. Day Co., of New York City. It was canceled by the Governor of New Jersey.

In 1975, the railroad terminal was placed on the National Register of Historic Places and the State Register of Historic Places, as plans were being made for a new Liberty State Park, State Environmental Protection Commissioner David J. Bardin said "It is a fitting tribute to a unique part of our State's heritage."

Governor Byrne said,

The terminal exemplifies several facets of New Jersey's heritage. It reflects the State's industrial development. It symbolizes the great immigrant era. And it stands as a notable accomplishment of our 19th century architects, engineers and construction trades.

Bardin said,

During the migration period three ports received immigrants processed at Ellis Island, New York, Hoboken and Jersey City—and many opted for Jersey City because it was closest to Ellis Island and the Statue of Liberty.

These ethnic groups contributed to the cultural and industrial development of the city for many decades afterward.

In 1990, there were 125 boats, with 45 routes, creating a spider web of crossing on the Hudson and East Rivers and the upper bay.

Quoting from an article, "Moving People in the Port," by Norman Brouwer, an 1888 article in Harper's Weekly noted:

All around the ends of these cabins were locker-seats of mahogany, without arms. The rest of the cabin was finished in walnut and mahogany or bird's-eye maple. In some of these boats, the cabin floor was covered with oil-cloth or carpet, and the seats were cushioned and upholstered with crimson velvet. Besides the seats around the cabin ends, there were three-legged stools which, when the voyage was prolonged, the passengers gathered around the stoves in cold weather, and calling for a hot toddy, would tell stories or play whist, or call Ben the fireman, who was a famous fiddler in his day.

As the boats increased in size, the cabins moved to the main deck, gaining still more headroom. Stained-glass transoms were fitted above the doors, and stained-glass windows ran around the ceilings. By the 1880's, the darker woodwork was giving way to elegant cream-colored paneling trimmed with gold; steam piping or radiators were replacing stoves for heating, and gas or electric lighting was replacing the earlier kerosene lamps. The benches around the sides remained, usually built of cherry or maple. When upper deck cabins were added, similar benches ran around the exterior, lining a continuous promenade circling the deck. This arrangement last survived on the Staten Island ferries, "Miss New York," and "Mary Murray" retired in the early 1970's.

The Central Railroad terminal is now a center for many community activities. It has been upgraded and its vast covered terminal is used annually for an ethnic festival, which attracts tens of thousands of individuals in September.

There is also an excellent flag day program, which has been conducted by Morris Pesin, volunteer director of the City Spirit of Jersey City. The flag program brings people of all cultures and backgrounds to the area for a day of arts and crafts, music, dance, and an exchange of the best which the people from many lands have given to America.

The terminal is part of beautiful Liberty State Park, which is considered by many the jewel of the Hudson. It was my pleasure, along with Congressman JAMES J. FLORIO, in 1979, to welcome Congressman John F. Seiberling, of Ohio, who as a member of the Committee of the National Park Service announced a large grant which began the reincarnation of this beautiful park.

The park is developing beautifully. Thousands of visitors come each weekend, to see the Statue of Liberty which is but 600 yards from the Jersey City shoreline.

With the help of the New Jersey State Department of Environmental Protection, Division of Parks what was once a cathedral to train travel will become a place to reflect upon what America was, what America is, and what America could be in the future.

Rededication ceremonies will be at 12 noon, with live entertainment, an exhibit, ethnic foods, and ferry rides.

I am deeply pleased to represent the 14th District where this commemoration is taking place. I am sure my fellow Members of this House want to join in this grand salute.

WSM: A HISTORY OF EXCELLENCE

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a radio station in my hometown, Nashville, TN, that has played an integral role in the history of broadcasting—radio station WSM.

Many of my colleagues are familiar with those call letters. WSM radio, a vanguard of the broadcasting industry, has been a pioneer in radio history since the 1920's.

WSM's stature in broadcasting history is best illustrated through the following outline of accomplishments:

In 1925 WSM makes its first broadcast from the Capitol Hill Building in Nashville. It carries a world series game, announced by Jack Keefe, which is heard via loudspeakers on the capitol building. The call letters, reflecting insurance company ownership, stand for "We shield millions."

In 1927 the "WSM Barn Dance" is given the name "Grand Ole Opry."

In 1932 the Federal Radio Commission awards WSM a clear channel license at 650 kilocycles, and grants the station permission to increase from 5,000 to 50,000 watts.

WSM erects an 878-foot tower in Williamson County. It is one of four diamond-shaped towers built by Blaw Knob Co. of Pittsburgh, PA. The tower is still in use today.

In 1939 the "Grand Ole Opry" moves to the new war memorial auditorium, and in November the "Grand Ole Opry" premiers on the NBC radio network.

In 1941 WSM's experiments with FM operation debut on W47NV, the first commercially operated FM station in the country.

In 1943 the "Grand Ole Opry" moves to Ryman Auditorium.

In 1947 FCC rulings allow W47NV to redesignate itself WSM-FM.

From 1951-86 WSM radio 650 has the longest running, daily, live in-studio orchestra show in radio history.

In 1966 WSM-AM moves it operations from Capitol Hill to the new Knob Hill facility in west Nashville.

In 1968 WSM-AM, with FCC approval, buys WLWW-FM. Operating at the frequency of 95.5 WSM debuts at 100,000 watts.

In 1972 WSM becomes incorporated, bringing together WSM AM/FM, WSM-TV, Opryland USA, the "Grand Ole Opry," and later, Opryland Productions.

In 1974 the "Grand Ole Opry" moves into the new Opry House at the Opryland entertainment complex on March 16.

In 1981, in December, WSM and AP radio announce plans to form the country music network, later to become the music country radio newtwork, a late-night programming service to broadcast via satellite with WSM-AM as the flagship station.

In 1982, in March, WSM AM/FM moves its operations to a site on McGavock Pike adjacent to the Opryland complex.

WSM and AP radio debut music country network on April 1.

WSM becomes Nashville's first AM stereo station on December 6, during ceremonies on the stage the Grand Ole Opry House.

In 1983 WSM-FM makes its debut as Nashville 95FM, "The New Country," on Monday, January 23. Veteran radio personality Charlie Douglas joins music country network as primary host on Monday, June 30.

On September 1, Opryland USA, Inc., which includes WSM/FM, the Grand Ole Opry, the Nashville Network, Opryland USA Theme Park, and the Opryland Hotel is purchased by Gaylord Broadcasting Co. of Dallas, TX.

In 1984 Nashville 95FM takes country music to the top in the fall arbitron ratings book.

In May the music country radio network moves into a new studio located in the lobby of the Opryland Hotel.

Some of the accomplishments I've listed as part of WSM's history represent corporate achievements, while others reflect true milestones in broadcasting history. But, they all display an excellence in management, commitment, and dedication to service for millions of listeners WSM has served throughout the years.

Earlier this month, on September 14, 1989, WSM-AM received the National Association of Broadcasters' Crystal Award for excellence in local achievement. WSM was one of 10 recipients chosen from 50 finalists from across the Nation to be recognized for its ongoing air commitment and community involvement. According to NAB, "The award is achieved through tremendous levels of coordination of management, programming, sales/marketing, promotion, and engineering staff on behalf of the community interest and well being."

In 1989 WSM became the first radio station ever to win the Scripps Howard Award, the Edward R. Murrow Award, and the Peabody Award in the same year, for a news program on violence in Nashville.

WSM also became the sole winner of a radio award from the President's Committee on Handicapped Employment for a new series called. "I Love Life," which focuses on people who have overcome adversity.

I am very proud to boast that I grew up listening to WSM radio, the home of the Grand Ole Opry in "Music City U.S.A."

I am also very proud to be able to pay tribute today to this historical broadcast entity.

To the management and staff of WSM radio in Nashville, and to everyone ever associated with WSM radio, I offer my thanks and congratulations for a job very well done.

TRIBUTE TO THE VERY REVEREND DONALD J. HARRINGTON

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend a special welcome to the newly appointed president of St. John's University in New York, the Very Reverend Donald J. Harrington, C.M. He officially assumed his stewardship of our Nation's largest Catholic university on August 7. Father Harrington will be joining a group of 25 top students in Washington for the annual Insider's View of the Capital, sponsored by the SJU Washington Alumni Chapter.

A native of Brooklyn, Father Harrington returns to the city of his birth with a tremendous record of accomplishment in the field of higher education. He most recently served as president of Niagara University, a Vincentian Fathers school located in Buffalo, NY. He was the youngest president of Niagara in over 120 years.

In the tradition of St. Vincent DePaul, Father Harrington has stressed the use of university resources and facilities for the betterment of the community at large. At Niagara, he participated in local efforts to improve education, health care, economic development, and environmental problems. We look forward to his involvement in the Greater New York area.

Since St. John's was founded in 1870, the university has grown to serve 20,000 students, primarily commuters from middle class families throughout the Metropolitan New York area. Tens of thousands of students have benefited from the affordable and high quality education St. John's has offered to students of every race, creed, and color.

I am a graduate of St. John's School of Law, and four of our other colleagues in the House have attended or graduated from various schools in the university. Over the years I have been privileged to participate in many university activities in New York and Washington. I look forward to working with Father Harrington on issues of regional and national concern. I know that the entire membership of the 101st Congress joins me in welcoming him and wishing him well in the challenges which lie ahead at St. John's.

IN HONOR OF THE 78TH ANNIVERSARY OF TAIWAN'S INDEPENDENCE

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the people of Taiwan as they mark the 78th anniversary of the founding of their Government. Taiwan's achievements are indeed worthy of celebration. Since 1911, Taiwan has been transformed from an agrarian society to a modern, commercial, and industrial economy. Today, Taiwan is the 12th largest trading entity in the world. Taiwan's remarkable economic success is a tribute to the effective policies undertaken by the Taipei government. Through the leadership of the Kuomintang Party, Taiwan has succeeded where many nations have failed. Trade in Taiwan has tripled every 5 years since 1955, and Taiwan has one of the highest standards of living in the world. The United States economy has benefited from certain aspects of the success of Taiwan. The United States is Taiwan's largest trading partner and supplies 22 percent of all imports in Taiwan.

Mr. Speaker, on this important anniversary, let us honor Taiwan for the important accomplishments this island nation has made in the last 78 years. Taiwan's economic growth and democratic ideals should be a shining example for other nations in that part of the world.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO JOSEPH A. FERNANDEZ

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and admiration that I rise today to salute an outstanding public servant from my 18th Congressional District of Florida who, in 2 years as superintendent of Dade County public schools, has earned a national reputation as an innovator and risktaker.

I am speaking of Dr. Joseph A. Fernandez. As the superintendent of the Nation's fourth largest school system, Dr. Fernandez has restored the gift of learning to students and teachers alike.

He is a man who gets things done through energy and sheer force of personality. He has forged links between the business community and schools, invested schools with more decisionmaking power, and spearheaded a successful drive for a $980 million bond issue to build 49 schools to alleviate an overcrowded school system.

During his tenure as superintendent, the Dade County school system's dropout rate fell 5.5 percent. Through his school-based management program, he simultaneously raised morale among teachers and won a reputation of excellence for Dade County schools.

Other innovative programs include: a teacher evaluation program administered by other teachers, voluntary Saturday classes, and shorter class periods to free teachers to work with students on personal and academic problems.

In a school district which is about 45 percent Hispanic, 33 percent black and the remainder non-Hispanic white, he has been the great unifier. He understands the delicate ethnic balance and has gotten the parents of each group to work together by stressing the importance of education to the community and the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that all the Members in this exalted Chamber will rise with me to wish Mr. Fernandez good luck as he leaves south Florida to continue his work in education as the chancellor of the New York school system, the Nation's largest school system.

A LIFETIME OF SERVICE

HON. RONNIE G. FLIPPO

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, October 7, 1989, the King's Memorial United Methodist Church of Decatur, AL, will celebrate the 112th anniversary of the church. As part of this celebration, a very special member of the congregation, Mrs. Mable Collier Lockhart, will be honored for her community service.

In a time where volunteerism is needed in our communities throughout our Nation, Mrs. Lockhart is a shining example of how one person can make a difference and influence the lives of thousands of individuals.

Mrs. Lockhart is now 80 years old; however, age has not slowed her enthusiasm and determination to help her community, her church, and the young people in Alabama.

Mrs. Lockhart began teaching in Alabama at the age of 15 and continued teaching while attending college. For 42 years Mable Lockhart taught thousands of children in the State of Alabama and specifically the Tennessee Valley area. Her devotion to education, her leadership and vigor provided a stimulus to children to strive for greater achievements and explore the vast world in which we live.

Over the years she has served her church in numerous capacities as well as civic organizations that assist the hungry, the lonely, the homeless, and others with special needs. Young and old have benefited from Mrs. Lockhart's hard work. As a Scout den mother and Girl Scout leader, young men and women have benefited from her wisdom and leadership. Through the Meals on Wheels Program and the Retired Senior Volunteer Program, Mrs. Lockhart has cared for her neighbors who are in need. Her service to her church over the years has provided comfort and friendship to many in the Decatur region.

It is indeed an honor for me to join with the members of the Decatur, AL, community and the congregation of King's Memorial United Methodist Church in saluting a lifetime of service by Mrs. Mable Collier Lockhart.

CUBS CLINCH DIVISION TITLE

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, every spring Sports Illustrated issues its baseball scouting report for the coming season. This year it said that the New York Mets couldn't be beaten. Their lineup was "an embarrassment of riches." So good that the Mets second stringers could take fourth in the division all by themselves.

By contrast, it said the Cubs were lousy. They'd finish fifth at best. The article snidely remarked that "the Cubs [are] still in the thick of their 90-year plan," referring to their last World Series victory in 1908.

But last night the Cubs tossed out that 90-year plan as they became the first team in baseball to clinch a division title. They finished ahead of St. Louis, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Montreal, and, oh yes, the wonder boys from New York.

Mr. Speaker, now that the Cubs have conquered their east coast rivals, they are poised to vanquish the west coast Giants and then win the World Series.

HAPPY 78TH ANNIVERSARY TO TAIWAN

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as Taiwan—the Republic of China—gets ready to celebrate her 78th anniversary on October 10, my colleagues and I wish to congratulate Taiwan's President, Dr. Lee Teng-hui, and commend him for his leadership of his country.

Mr. Speaker, much has been written about Taiwan's economic achievements, and we are proud of her economic successes. In fact, Taiwan is our fifth largest trading partner and a major market for our goods as well as major supplier to our markets. Until last year, Taiwan was running large trade surpluses with us. Last year, however, this trend was reversed and the surplus was reduced by 35 percent. It is my belief that Taiwan will continue to cut her surplus with us, as Taiwan's representative Ding Mou-shih told us that his Government is fully committed to balancing her trade with us. Ding specifically mentioned Taiwan's detailed timetable for the elimination of Taiwan's surplus with us by 1992. I believe Taiwan is the only country that has made such a clear commitment.

Congratulations, President Lee. We wish you all the best.

THE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION FOR TUOLUMNE COUNTY, CA, REGARDING LONG-TERM WATER CONTRACTS

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will allow the Tuolumne Regional Water District in my district to enter into a long-term water contract with the Bureau of Reclamation for delivery of water from the New Melones Reservoir.

Normally, this legislation would not be needed. Normally, the Bureau has the authority to negotiate and enter into water delivery contracts as long as the appropriate Federal and State requirements have been met. However, with the approval of the energy and water appropriations bill, a water contracting moratorium went into effect that placed a prohibition on all new Central Valley project water contracts. I agree with my good friend and chairman of the authorizing committee, Mr. MILLER, that the controversies surrounding the contracting of remaining CVP yield in the delta warrant slow and careful consideration. Unfortunately, I disagree that every contract regardless of its impact on the delta must be held up until the moratorium expires on October 1, 1990.

Tuolumne Regional Water District's right to its allocation of New Melones water is based in the Flood Control Act of 1962, sec. 203 and in the final supplemental environmental impact statement. The act reads, "* * * before initiating any diversion from the Stanislaus River basin in connection with the operation of the Central Valley project, the Secretary of the Interior shall determine the quantity of water required to satisfy all existing and anticipated future needs within the basin and the diversions shall at all times be subordinate to the quantities so determined." What this means is that New Melones water cannot be used to settle any water contracting disputes in the rest of the CVP, including the delta, until the in-basin users' needs are met. Holding the Tuolumne contract is contrary to the spirit and intent of this act.

Mr. Speaker, Chairman MILLER has assured me, as a member of the authorizing subcommittee, that the committee will consider my legislation as quickly as possible and I appreciate assistance and cooperation.

TRIBUTE TO CAREY WELT

HON. RAYMOND J. McGRATH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay homage to a brave firefighter from my district. On August 22, 1989, explosions rocked a propane plant in New Cassel, NY. Fire and debris fell among the surrounding residential neighborhoods and police evacuated nearly 10,000 people from their homes.

Among the dozens of firefighters who responded to the emergency call was Nassau County Fire Inspector Carey Welt. As the fires burned, it was discovered that a half-full 15,000 gallon propane tank was feeding surrounding flames with the highly combustible gas. Fire officials at the scene said that an explosion of that tank would have had the destructive equivalent to a small atomic blast. Structures within a quarter-mile radius would have been leveled. Inspector Welt, at great personal risk, crawled on hands and knees to the tank to shut an open gas valve leaking propane.

Fire Inspector Welt's selfless, heroic action saved many lives and millions of dollars worth of residential property. I ask all of my colleagues to join me in honoring this courageous and dedicated public servant.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, PRESIDENT LEE

HON. HAROLD L. VOLKMER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, on October 10, 1989, President Lee Teng-hui of the Republic of China on Taiwan will join his countrymen in a grand celebration of their country's 78th birthday. Taiwan truly has much to celebrate. Its citizens enjoy a high standard of living and its economy continues to boom. With a severe labor shortage, people all have good jobs and in a recent survey, people from all walks of life expressed a high level of satisfaction with their leaders and their environment. In fact, President Lee Teng-hui received a 97-percent job approval rating, making him one of the most popular leaders in Chinese history.

Yes, we here in the U.S. Congress observe the efforts of President Lee Teng-hui and his countrymen with pride and confidence. To Ambassador Ding Mou-shih here in Washington, we wish to say:

Keep up with the good work. You are doing an excellent job representing your government and your people. It is always rewarding whether listening to you explain your government's policies or having a genuine Chinese dinner at Twin Oaks. You are superb!

Happy birthday, President Lee.

THE GOOD NEIGHBOR ACT

HON. DAN SCHAEFER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. SCHAEFER. Mr. Speaker, all of us are concerned about crime. According to the U.S. Department of Justice, we have good reason to be. At current crime rates, the Department estimates that over 83 percent of all Americans will be victimized by a violent crime at some point in their lives. This is a sobering statistic. Unfortunately, with drug abuse rampant across the country, this statistic is not unrealistic.

However, there is hope. Studies have shown that in order to win the war against crime we must move away from our lopsided dependence on the Government and its enforcement agencies and move toward a partnership between the Government and the people. This partnership should have two goals. First, to encourage the people to provide the police with any information that might assist them in solving a crime. Second, the Government must ensure the people that when individuals are convicted of crimes, they will serve their time.

In the hopes of moving this partnership forward I have introduced the Good Neighbor Act of 1989. This bill would designate as tax-exempt moneys received by citizens in recognition for their assistance in solving a criminal investigation. In order to qualify for the tax-exempt status, an award must be sponsored by a qualified nonprofit organization, and the arresting agency must certify that the information provided by the taxpayer materially contributed to the arrest. It is my hope that this measure will encourage more people to come forward and participate in the various crime stopper programs which exist throughout the country.

In addition, I have cosponsored H.R. 2529 which would increase penalties against criminals and others who wrongfully use or possess firearms. For instance, this measure would create a mandatory 5-year minimum sentence without opportunity for parole for the unlawful possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, fugitive from justice, unlawful user of a controlled substance, or one who deals in stolen firearms.

While these two measures alone are not going to solve the problems of crime in America, I believe they are a step in the right direction.

I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring the Good Neighbor Act which I am introducing today. By doing so we are recognizing the courage which is required when a citizen is willing to individually stand up against crime.

THE COMMUNITY TOWNSHIP LIBRARY IN CONCORD TOWNSHIP, PA

HON. CURT WELDON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, this Sunday afternoon, October 1, 1989, the Community Township Library in Concord Township, PA will be cutting the ribbon on its new library. This library will serve the residents of the towns of Bethel, Birmingham, Chester Heights, Concord, and Thornbury.

This ribbon cutting is a culmination of years of hard work and efforts by many people. It was through the joint efforts of private citizens, local elected officials, business and labor that the dream of this library became a reality. The Community Township Library certainly has come a long way. It began in a closet in an elementary school 10 years ago and for the past 3 years has been housed in four trailers behind the Concord Township Municipal Building.

It is with great pleasure that I rise today before my colleagues of the 101st Congress to officially recognize the efforts of all those individuals who worked tirelessly to see this library built.

I am extremely proud of the system of libraries we have in Delaware County and I am certain that this library will be an important participant in our system. With the rapid development and growing population in western Delaware County, I look forward to this library serving as a hub for the community, providing a cohesive force as our county grows.

As much as this project was the work of many, I do feel the need to recognize one individual in particular. Rachel Kohl has been the librarian of the Community Township Library since its inception on January 15, 1979. It has been her fortitude, commitment, and dedication that has brought the library to this wonderful stage. It is my understanding that this library is to be re-named the Rachel Kohl Community Library. This is a fitting tribute to such a special person.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying congratulations for a job well done to all those whose hard work allowed this ribbon-cutting ceremony to occur.

COMMEMORATING FRANKIE SUE DEL PAPA AS ITALIAN-AMERICAN OF THE YEAR

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a preeminent civic and community leader of Nevada, Secretary of State Frankie Sue Del Papa. On Saturday, October 7, 1989, the Augustus Society and the Nevada Society of Italian-American Lawyers will honor this exceptional Las Vegan as the Italian-American of the Year. She is truly deserving of this recognition.

Frankie Sue Del Papa is a native Nevadan. She was raised in Tonopah, but went to junior high and high school in Las Vegas. She was very active in her student days. As student body vice president of her high school she organized a magazine drive to raise the money to build a cover for the school cafeteria.

While attending the University of Reno on a Sons of Italy scholarship, she served as her dorm president, was a student senator, and ultimately study body president. She organized a clean-up of Manzanita Lake on campus and among other things, urged the planting of trees as a gift to the campus from the graduating class.

Elected to a 6-year term in 1980 as a regent of the University System, again she served in many capacities. She helped organize the push for question 5 in the 1986 general election, passage of which has resulted in millions of additional dollars flowing to education in Nevada. She also chaired the search committee that brought UNLV President Bob Maxson to Nevada.

Frankie Sue Del Papa has always been recognized as a leader in our community. She has generously served the State of Nevada in a variety of ways, sharing a special interest in involving youth, advancing the rights of women, the arts and the environment.

She has been a long-time supporter and participant with Nevada Girl's State. She served as vice-chair of the 1977 Nevada Conference on Women and was a delegate to the national conference. She has supported many efforts to improve the rights of women. She helped with the organization of the Nevada Women's Fund. Also, in this regard, as a law student, she helped save the Sewell-Belmont House in Washington, DC, the long-time headquarters of the National Women's Party that led the fight for women's suffrage.

She has served on the founding board of directors of the Nevada Institute for Contemporary Arts of UNLV. She has served many years in many different capacities and helped with fundraising for both the Sierra Arts Foundation and the Nevada Museum of Art.

She currently serves on the national advisory committee for the Trust for Public Lands and is secretary of the National Secretaries of State organization.

Mr. Speaker, by any standard—be it community service, civic leadership or professional contributions—Frankie Sue Del Papa represents the finest in southern Nevada's commitment to excellence. I urge my colleagues to join me today in honoring Ms. Del Papa for her well-deserved recognition as the Italian-American of the Year. Her contributions and commitment to Nevada have earned her respect and recognition throughout the State as one of Nevada's finest citizens.

TRIBUTE TO SACRED HEART RETREAT AND RENEWAL CENTER

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Sacred Heart Retreat and Renewal Center on the occasion of their 50th anniversary. Since 1939, Missionaries of the Sacred Heart have provided a variety of retreat and renewal programs to the poor, lonely, and broken hearted.

The Missionaries of the Sacred Heart were founded in Issodun, France, in 1854 by Father Jules Chevalier. He was deeply touched by the need to address all that was morally bad. Father Chevalier became convinced that only God's love could touch people's lives and change them in a way that happiness could be found. Father Chevalier's dream expanded to the United States on July 22, 1939, when the U.S.A. province was given canonical approval. Youngstown, OH, was no exception to that dream. The Sacred Heart arrived in Youngstown on September 29, 1951. In 1953, the retreat house was built, enabling the organization to have a base for their various relief programs.

For 36 years, the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart have kept Father Chevalier's spirit alive. They have motivated others to reach out to those in need. The volunteers of the Sacred Heart make a large difference in the success of their organization. It is difficult to measure the time and energy provided by these dedicated individuals. They have made tremendous contributions to the smooth operation of the retreat house. The organization offers many inspirational programs to their community, such as the Retrouvaille Program, or "Rediscovery," designed to help, heal, and renew couples who are drfiting apart from each other. Other such programs include Life's Healing Journey, Women's Reflective Retreat, Reflective Retreat Weekend, and a Goals Program. Each of these retreats provide the guidance and motivation for those who feel desperate and lonely.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Sacred Heart and Renewal Center for their impeccable service to their community. The reason for the Sacred Heart's success stems from their understanding and compassion for other people's problems. We are deeply indebted to these members for their dedication and the contributions they have made to our area's causes. I am honored to represent these outstanding individuals.

UKRAINIAN GRADUATES OF WINDSOR AND DETROIT

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Ukrainian Graduates of Windsor and Detroit, an outstanding group who were very active in the Detroit and Windsor area and who take great pride in their ethnic heritage. I am asking to honor them on the occasion of their 50th anniversary.

The Ukrainian Graduates of Windsor and Detroit was founded in 1939 by a group of university graduates who wanted to form an organization that would be dedicated to the interests of the Ukrainian community in the Detroit and Windsor area. They succeeded in doing so and have maintained an active membership of 150 over the past 50 years. The members are a diverse group comprised of teachers, doctors, engineers, and other professionals.

The organization serves as a professional link with community affairs and intercultural projects with other ethnic organizations. There is also a monthly publication entitled "The Bulletin" which is an important link among the members keeping them abreast on monthly events, activities, graduations, weddings, and so forth. Members often refer to The Bulletin as a way into a close knit family since members are not exclusively in the Detroit and Windsor area. It also features Ukrainian history and current events in the Ukraine.

Education plays an important role in the goals and objectives of the club. Twelve scholarships are awarded annually to high school students of Ukrainian descent who show promising futures.

Ukrainian culture also plays an important role in the organization. One of their major activities is a type of folk egg decorating called pysanky. Members have taught classes and have had displays at museums and at shopping malls. One ambitious member even wrote a book about it.

The Ukrainian Graduates of Detroit and Windsor truly deserve to be recognized on their 50th anniversary since this organization has become such a vital part of the lives of Ukrainians living in the area and have brought them closer to their roots. I am very honored to be selected as their recipient of the Honorary Ukrainian of the Year Award for 1989 especially on their 50th anniversary.

My dear colleagues, please join me in recognizing such an active group that promotes ones' ethnic heritage. I congratulate them on their 50th anniversary and thank them for presenting me with such a prestigious award.

I SALUTE THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

HON. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. ROBERT F. (BOB) SMITH. Mr. Speaker, a small democratic nation on the verge of world prominence will be celebrating her 78th National Day soon. I am speaking of Taiwan, the Republic of China, whose anniversary on October 10 this year will celebrate not only founding of the first democratic nation in Asia, but also nearly eight decades of unparalled growth and democratic advocacy.

If the world at large has not yet taken sufficient notice of this tiny but mighty island republic, it soon will have cause to, because Taiwan is changing drastically, improving itself economically, politically, and socially at a very rapid pace.

We admire Taiwan's successes to date and congratulate Dr. Lee Teng-hui, Taiwan's youthful and vigorous President and Ambassador Ding Mou-shih, Taiwan's top representative in Washington.

RESOLUTION TO DESIGNATE MONARCH BUTTERFLY AS THE NATIONAL INSECT

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a House joint resolution designating the Monarch butterfly as our national insect.

The majestic Monarch butterfly is indeed the monarch of all insects and worthy of special acknowledgment. Insects play a crucial, yet often uncelebrated, role in maintaining the ecological balance of our planet. Unfortunately, excessive human intrusion into the environment has threatened the existence of many species of insects. Such is the case with the Monarch butterfly.

The Monarch butterfly, native to North America, has inhabited this continent for over 1,000 years—long before the Europeans ever set foot on North American soil. The Monarch has been able to survive this millennium through its unique ability to sequester the poison from its host plant, the milkweed, thus making the Monarch toxic to its predators. Tragically, the urbanization of America has resulted in a great reduction of the milkweed host plant, as well as in a reduction of the groves of trees the Monarch overwinters upon in California and Mexico. At one time this loss of habitat threatened the very existence of the Monarch.

Despite the intrusion of humans on its sensitive environment, the enduring Monarch continues to flourish and returns triumphantly every year to its overwintering sites in the central California coast, particularly in Pacific Grove, CA. Each fall millions of Monarch butterflies return to the towns of Pacific Grove, Capitola and others, where they are greeted by annual festivals and parades held in honor of their return.

I believe the Monarch butterfly stands as an important reminder to all of us of the breauty of our environment and the need for the protection and conservation of our natural wonders. I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring the Monarch by cosponsoring my resolution to designate the Monarch as our national insect.

A copy of the resolution follows:

H.J. RES. —

Whereas the monarch butterfly, native to North America, is found throughout the United States;

Whereas the monarch is a unique representative of over 60 species of butterflies and nearly 90,000 other insects that are an integral part of the natural heritage of the United States;

Whereas the great numbers and diversity of insects play a vital role in the daily lives and ecology and the environment;

Whereas the population of monarchs is declining under pressure from urbanization and loss of habitat which results in the reduction of the host plant (milkweed) and overwintering groves of trees in California and Mexico;

Whereas conservation efforts are underway in both California and Mexico to maintain these overwintering sites;

Whereas Pacific Grove, California, holds an annual festival celebrating the return of the monarchs to overwinter until spring when the monarchs begin a northward flight; and

Whereas the monarchs enhance the beauty of the environment and signals the need for protection and conservation of the natural wonders: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the monarch butterfly is designated and adopted as the national insect of the United States, and the President is authorized and requested to declare each such fact by proclamation.

YARMOUTH'S 350TH BIRTHDAY

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, this week the people of Yarmouth are joining with friends from across Cape Cod, and from sister Yarmouths in Maine, Nova Scotia, and as far as Great Britain to observe the town's 350th birthday.

Those who first came to this land could not have possibly envisioned the community that would flourish here more than three centuries later.

The town, originally called Mattacheese, was settled along an old Indian path in the village which we now know as Yarmouth Port. Throughout its early days as an active seaport for fishing and merchant trade, Yarmouth sea captains and their families helped establish the honored tradition of Yankee shrewdness and ingenuity which went a long way toward helping the community grow and prosper.

Nothing boosts our capacity and courage to confront new challenges today like the knowledge that those who preceded us also braved—and overcame—their own hardships. Yarmouth's legacy is a vibrant heritage of which we can all be very proud. It is with pride and pleasure that we salute the past—and future—of the town of Yarmouth, as we celebrate this historic occasion.

EMPLOYEE TRUSTEES ON PENSION BOARDS

HON. MIKE SYNAR

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, today I voted against an amendment by Representative MARGE ROUKEMA which struck a provision originally included in the budget reconciliation bill by Representative PETER VISCLOSKY. The Visclosky amendment required that single-employer pension plans have an equal number of employers and employees on their boards of trustees.

I want to point out that I am unhappy about the manner in which the Visclosky amendment came to the floor. I would have appreciated having the benefit of hearing records on this issue.

Nonetheless, I believe that giving employees some discretion in where their pension funds are invested is good policy. Pensions are the deferred income of employees. It is thus only fair that all employees should have a say in where their money is invested.

During the debate, those who supported striking the Visclosky provisions stated that there is no precedent for joint trusteeship. In fact, multiemployer plans have been managed in this fashion for over 40 years. Other opponents cited their concerns about the performance of these pension plans under joint trusteeship. It is important to note that multiemployer plans generally perform as well as single-employer plans.

Quite simply, this is a fairness issue. The democratic process is invigorated by giving employees a voice in where their pension funds are invested.

FIGHTING ON THE FRONT LINES OF THE DRUG WAR

HON. LAMAR S. SMITH

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, recently I flew over some of this Nation's most beautiful country.

My plane flight over the United States-Mexico border provided breathtaking views of mountains, mesas, and the mighty Rio Grande.

I was flying into Marfa to attend the dedication launch of Texas' first aerostat radar balloon, deployed along the border to deter drug smuggling aircraft from penetrating U.S. airspace.

As the plane followed the Rio Grande, I could look down and clearly see the land to two countries on either side. Nothing but water stands between American and Mexican soil.

The trip brought home to me both the importance of protecting our country from drug smugglers and apparent ease with which they may enter.

I am working toward two goals for the drug war in Texas:

First, supporting local community efforts, and second, stopping drug trafficking along the Southwest border.

We would not be here today without the commitment and hard work of the local communities.

The people who make all this happen are the ones who deserve the greatest thanks. Without local residents, there would be no aerostat and no troops to win the war on drugs.

In west Texas, local residents and the Federal Government are joining forces to beat drugs at the border.

No trespassing—that is what the radar balloons tell those drug traffickers on the other side. For you, no trespassing, no vacancy, no thanks. We simply do not want your business.

Cooperation and community action help keep the dealer's business out of our daily business.

We must recognize that funding without community action is like building a house without a foundation.

After working on the aerostat project with the people of west Texas, I can assure you that the foundation there is rock solid.

Over 3 years ago I was campaigning for Congress in San Angelo. I was there with a California Congressman to discuss the virtues of having odd-looking balloons along the south Texas skyline.

We were in a small room, with a map pinned to the wall.

As we talked, we drew circles on the map with coffee cup saucers to designate radar boundaries. That day I saw evidence of the kind of support that would lead to the completion of the Texas project.

When I arrived in Washington I began work on the aerostat. I have been involved in site selection and have tracked the balloon's progress.

All involved have played a significant role in this project.

Our actions are part of the battle plan we will use to attack drugs in this country.

It is support like that I saw in west Texas that will allow the war on drugs to be successful. And it is this support that demonstrates our collective strength.

But for all this strength, we need something more. We need the enlistment of others.

Without the enlistment and resolve of parents, teachers, friends, and community leaders, our interdiction, prosecution and treatment efforts will prove powerless.

Ultimately, it is what is said in the living rooms, the classrooms and the community rooms across America that will make the real difference. It will make the difference because it will teach values.

Values that tell our young people that they can do better than drugs.

Values that say there is a stark difference between right and wrong.

And values that say offenders will not go unpunished.

There are already critics of our efforts. They say we are not spending enough money. Or they say we are spending too much money. Or worse, they say this Nation is too hooked on drugs to quit.

Well, I have one thing to tell these people: Americans are too determined, too ambitious, too smart to let us languish.

Can we succeed? Yes.

If our national community exhibits anything like the community support I saw in west Texas, then I will be convinced that we can, together, accomplish extraordinary things.

REFUGEES

HON. HELEN DELICH BENTLEY

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with immense regret that I bring the tragic issue of the innocent Khmer refugees who are living along the Khmer-Thai border to the attention of my colleagues.

These refugees have been controlled by various factions of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. These people are extremely scared and worried after hearing rumors about repatriation which is likely to occur in the next few months. This does not mean that those people do not want to return to their homeland, but that they are afraid of being forced to repatriate by the factions who have controlled them for years.

If Khmer people, who live in the camps in Thailand, want to go back to Cambodia with Khmer Rouge, they should be able to do so. Just the same, if they want to go back to Cambodia with Son Sann, they to should retain that right. Forcing these refugees into repatriation is self-damning.

Condoning such action does nothing for the progression of human rights, it only inhibits this process which we are continually striving for. Once again, it is time to truly recognize the needs of these war stricken refugees. Let us take quick action before this forced repatriation transpires.

DOBROSLAVE PARAGA—A BRAVE ADVOCATE OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN YUGOSLAVIA

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of my colleagues in the Congress to a resolution that I recently introduced concerning Mr. Dobroslave Paraga, a Croatian human rights advocate from Yugoslavia. My resolution, House Resolution 240, is identical to one that was introduced by Senator DON RIEGLE of Michigan. I want to commend my good friend for his leadership on the issue of human rights violations in Yugoslavia. The story of Mr. Paraga's struggle for human rights in that country should be known by all Americans who cherish basic human freedoms.

Mr. Paraga has distinguished himself by bravely calling upon the Government of Yugoslavia to respect the human rights of all ethnic groups in that multiethnic country. I salute his dedication to promoting basic human liberties. I believe that this resolution will call the attention of Yugoslave officials to the fact that Congress does care about the freedoms of a young man and that this institution resents state-sponsored oppression anywhere in the world. Soon, Mr. Paraga will return home and I want Yugoslav authorities to know that Congress will be watching. I hope that this resolution sends a signal to those who want to improve the human rights posture of that country.

In brief, House Resolution 240 calls upon the Government of Yugoslavia to respect human rights in that country and honor Yugoslavia's commitments to international human rights accords. It also calls upon the Government to free political prisoners and end its abuses of Mr. Paraga.

The story of Mr. Paraga is a heart rending one. He was sentenced for speaking out against the Government of Yugoslavia and he spent part of his prison time on the notorious "Naked Island." He believes that a young human rights advocate who was arrested with him was tortured to death by Yugoslav prison authorities. Mr. Paraga was also exposed to the madness of a Yugoslav mental institution as part of his punishment for speaking the truth. That, however, was not the end of his ordeal.

In 1987, the Government of Yugoslavia sentenced him to 6 months conditional imprisonment and ordered him to remain silent about his experiences as a political prisoner until 1991. Mr. Paraga recently left Yugoslavia and has been telling the American public about the cruelties that he endured for speaking the truth about the refusal of the Government of Yugoslavia to craft and implement a credible human rights policy.

His story is well known by Amnesty International and by other international human rights groups. He is an eloquent spokesman for the cause of human rights in Yugoslavia and has risked his life so that his countrymen can experience the basic freedoms which we enjoy every day.

I am disappointed that Yugoslavia, a country that claims to be modern and Western-looking, has such an abominable human rights record. The story of Pjeter Ivezaj, the recent bloodshed against ethnic Albanians in the autonomous Province of Kosovo, and the Paraga story lead me to believe that Yugoslavia needs to put its human rights house in order. The Government of Yugoslavia can start an internal healing process by ending the harassment of Mr. Paraga and allowing him and his family to return to their home in Croatia.

FOR CONTINUED NEA SUPPORT

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, September 27, 1989 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

THE CONGRESS AND THE ARTS

The Congress generally does not pay much attention to the arts. Since its creation in 1965, the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) has never constituted more than one-half of one percent of the federal budget. Nevertheless, NEA-supported art affects Americans in many ways. The NEA provides grants and loans to individuals, groups, states, or organizations involved in the arts. Loan and grant recipients range from painters and photographers to opera and ballet companies.

The NEA serves several purposes. First, it encourages and rewards artistic merit. No other organization makes such a systematic effort to define and identify artistic excellence. Second, the NEA provides public exposure to art which otherwise would not be available. Many artistic undertakings, such as opera or the symphony, require a great deal of initial funding. Third, agency grants, which carry enormous prestige, serve as a catalyst to generate private donations to the arts. Every dollar of NEA support brings in at least three dollars in private donations. Without this initial NEA support, many art programs would not be able to operate.

Government support for the arts is not a new venture. As early as 1817 the Congress appropriated funds in order to adorn the Capitol with works of art. The Smithsonian Institution was chartered in 1846 to set up a national art collection. In 1935, Federal Project Number One was created to provide unemployment relief in the fields of art, music, writing, and theater. The NEA is the most recent government agency to support the arts. The NEA considers what types of art to support through a "peer-review" system. Panels of experts in a specific field of the arts are authorized by the NEA to judge artists' applications for grants and loans in that field. The review panels decide which proposals are worthy of being funded.

Over the years, NEA grants and loans have been widely reviewed as successful and have received little public criticism. During the past year, however, the funding mechanism of the NEA has come under increased scrutiny. Several NEA-supported projects made national news because of the explicit or obscene nature of the art work. This controversy has prompted some Members of Congress to call for an overhaul in the peer-review process.

Critics of the NEA make several points. First, the number of Americans who actively patronize art galleries or symphonies is quite small, and many citizens are not aware of art projects supported by the NEA. Second, the peer-review panels are frequently dominated by "old-boy" networks. Sometimes the peer-review panels represent their own artistic and scholarly cliques and dole out money to allies and proteges. Unknown artists often unable to receive funding from the NEA panels. Third, members of the review panels are neither directly accountable to the public nor subject to congressional scrutiny. The arts community often wants generous public support for the arts, but no public voice in how the support is used. Allowing an agency to act regardless of public support or opinion is a risky precedent. Fourth, although designed to preserve artistic freedom, the broad nature of the NEA's grant policy does not preclude the possibility of art being produced that may be deeply offensive to many Americans.

Based on concerns about the nature of some of the art recently funded by NEA, some Members of Congress have proposed a broad restriction on what art the agency could support. Their amendment would prohibit NEA funding for any art which "denigrates the objects or beliefs of the adherents of a particular religion or non-religion; or which denigrates, debases, or reviles a person, group, or class of citizens on the basis of race, creed, sex, handicap, age, or national origin." This proposal makes a good point; there is legitimate concern about the kinds of art that public funds are allocated to underwrite. Taxpayers ought not have to pay for art that most Americans find offensive or indecent.

The question raised by the amendment is not whether government should censure the arts (all agree it should not), but what kind of art should receive public funding. As it stands, the proposal is too restrictive. It would be difficult to find any art, whether in dance, theater, photography, film, opera, or painting, that does not violate the specific language of this amendment. I think the government has to be careful about imposing standards of conformity and respectability. Congressional control of the type of art the NEA may support will hinder the artistic process. Creative arts require exploration and risk; artists must be free to explore strong, provocative, and controversial themes. Art would not be served under a process that makes the Congress the judge of what is art.

When the NEA was first created it was provided complete discretion in deciding what art it would support. The Congress deliberately set up the peer-review panels to create a buffer between arts and politics. By providing the NEA with a strong measure of autonomy it was hoped that all forms of art would have equal opportunity to receive support. The peer-review process is fallible; the panels have made mistakes, and they will probably make more. But it does seem to me that this amendment imposes an unacceptable burden on art.

For the most part, the NEA selection process created by the Congress has worked remarkably well. Of the more than 85,000 NEA grants awarded over the years, only a handful have been seriously questioned. Moreover, most public funds spent on the arts do not follow the latest fancy to hit the art world but advance the great traditions of art.

It would be a mistake to junk the entire system because of a few mistakes, serious as they might be. The peer-review process can, of course, be improved and strengthened. But overall the process has proven a good means of maintaining objectivity, balance, and professional standards in the awarding of grants to artists. The NEA performs the important function of elevating art in our society and should continue to receive support as long as adequate steps are taken to insure proper accountability.

TRIBUTE TO GENERAL HONEYWILL

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Honeywill in his retirement after many years of service in the U.S. Air Force. General Honeywill is retiring as commander in chief of the Space and Missile Test Organization, Vandenberg Air Force Base, CA.

General Honeywill earned a bachelor of science degree in business administration from the University of Akron in 1959 and a master of business administration degree from Auburn University in 1973.

He was commissioned as a second lieutenant through the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps Program in June 1959. After completing pilot training the general was assigned as a C-118 pilot and aircraft commander at McGuire Air Force Base, NJ. He was subsequently transferred to Hickam Air Force Base, HI, and then to Dover Air Force Base, DE, where he served as an instructor pilot, flight examiner, and wing aircrew standardization and evaluation officer.

From July 1971 to July 1972, General Honeywill served as a training advisor to various air force bases in Vietnam, and later as adviser to three Vietnamese air force C-7A squadron commanders at Phu Cat Air Base.

General Honeywill completed the program management course in June 1976, and then served as executive officer to the chief of staff of Air Force Logistics Command at Wright-

Patterson Air Force Base. In April 1978 he became the deputy program commander manager of logistics in the EF-111A Tactical Jamming System Program Office, and eventually became director of the EF-111A System Program Office. In December 1982, he was assigned responsibility for all stealth programs, including the B-2 and F-117A.

General Honeywill became chief of staff, Air Force Systems Command, Andrews Air Force Base, MD, in July 1984, and was later assigned to the strategic defense initiative project. He was also responsible for the Air Force's science and technology program at Air Force headquarters.

In March 1987 he became director of program management and technology, Office of the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Acquisition, Washinton, DC. He assumed his present duties in June 1988.

The general is a command pilot with nearly 9,000 flying hours and has been honored with numerous military decorations and awards. He was promoted to brigadier general October 1, 1986.

General Honeywill has done an outstanding service to our country and deserves recognition at this time of his retirement.

NATIONAL EMPLOYEE-OWNERSHIP WEEK

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, in a time when we are witness to a seemingly endless struggle between industry owners and employees, I rise to recognize the third annual National Employee Ownership Week, October 1-7, 1989. The week is to recognize employee-owned companies across the Nation for the contribution they make to American's economy. Throughout the country and in the 18th District of Ohio, employee stock ownership plans [ESOP's] have been preserving jobs and helping to avoid the rash of closings that have been sweeping through America's industries.

In 1974 when Congress enacted its first ESOP legislation, there were few employee-owned companies. Today there are over 200 employee-owned businesses in Ohio alone and more than 10,000 such enterprises across the United States.

In 1986, the E.W. Bliss Co. of Salem, OH in my congressional district, was on the verge of a shutdown. Citing general decline in the steel industry, the heavy equipment manufacturer laid off 300 employees and demanded wage concessions from the 100 that remained. Instead, Steelworkers local 3372 rejected concessions and suggested an employee buyout. Since the institution of the ESOP in 1986, Bliss-Salem Inc. has seen profits improve steadily. Over 150 new employees have been hired, sales have tripled, and employees received their first bonus this September.

Management attributes the recovery of Bliss-Salem to its ESOP. By expanding the workers' role and encouraging employees to participate in the decisionmaking process, the owner employees find they have an interest in the results of problem resolution.

Employee-owned businesses tend to outperform their non-ESOP competitors. When you work for yourself, you find more efficient and more productive ways of getting the job done. Management attributes the recovery of Bliss-Salem to its ESOP. By expanding the workers' role and encouraging employees to participate in the decisionmaking process, the owner employees find they have an interest in the results of problem resolution. Bliss-Salem works.

AMERICANS FRUSTRATED WITH THREAT OF TERRORISM

HON. ALAN B. MOLLOHAN

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, not long ago, Lee Guy, editor of the Panhandle Press in my home district, wrote an editorial expressing the frustration that many Americans feel regarding the threat of terrorism. Mr. Guy's editorial follows:

I do not remember the exact details of the story because I read it many years ago, but the following incident actually happened during the administration of President Theodore "Teddy" Roosevelt in the very early years of this century.

It seems that a Middle Eastern sheik, actually more of a desert maurauder or what we might call a terrorist today, had kidnapped a wealthy Amerian heiress and was holding her for a huge ransom which the kidnappers demanded from the United States Government.

For want of remembering the lady's actual name, we'll call her Mrs. Smith for this re-created account. The kidnappers sent their ransom demand to the U.S. Government. President Roosevelt sent the following 12-word reply in a telegram to the sheik: "24 hour stop Mrs. Smith stop Or your head on a stick." Within 24 hours, the U.S. Government received notification of where Mrs. Smith would be waiting to be picked up.

During the war with the Japanese, 50,000 U.S. Marines stormed the beaches of Okinawa, which was fortified to the hilt with several hundred thousand Japanese soldiers and enough supplies to last for months. Enormously outnumbered, the Marines relentlessly drove the numerically superior hordes of Japanese back across the island until the last 3,000 of them jumped over a cliff and into the ocean. From several hundred thousand Japanese, the U.S. Marines took approximately 1,300 prisoners.

On the cruel, barren Pacific volcano island of Iwo Jima, outnumbered U.S. Marines doggedly slugged it out with the enemy until five bloodied and battle-weary Americans firmly planted Old Glory on top of Mount Suribachi. And that, thank you very much, was all she wrote for the Japanese. You all remember the picture—the world-famous photograph was the model for the U.S. Marine Corps Memorial at Arlington National Cemetery.

On June 6, 1944, Allied forces—American, British and French—stormed the beaches at Normandy and Omaha in the face of unbelievable, deadly, withering gunfire from the firmly-entrenched and fortified German army. Today, such a scenario might cause modern soldiers to "fall back and re-group." But, our men relentlessly drove forward through the lethal onslaught, overran the enemy, and that was the beginning of the end of the world-conquest dreams of Adolph Hitler.

Where have all our soldiers gone? Where is the guts and backbone of the American fighting man and his leaders? Throughout the history of the United States of America, from Valley Forge and Bunker Hill to Baltimore Harbor; from the Marne to Belleau Wood; from Pearl Harbor to Okinawa to Iwo Jima; and from the Thirty-Eighth Parallel to Pork Chop Hill and Heartbreak Ridge, the American fighting man has faced insurmountable odds and has always prevailed against the most aggressive and determined enemies. During this century, the accomplishments of the American fighting man have become legend, as well as fact, in our history books.

Now, America lowers her eyes and stares at the ground like a subservient slave when an unspeakable act is performed against one of her citizens in a foreign land. Witness the alleged brutal murder of Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, USMC, in Beirut. Col. Higgins was an American fighting man who faced hostility and aggression in the service of his country, and he did so without backing down or compromising with the enemy. Now that this brave soldier has been taken from the service of our nation by a cowardly act of terrorists, the United States must not back down from exacting the last ounce of justice from his kidnappers.

When is the United States of America going to stand up to these cowardly acts of terrorism and punish them severely, instead of holding hysterical talk sessions on television in which our national leaders mumble inane phrases like "delicate situation", . . . "can't upset the balance" . . ., "negotiations are going on" . . ., etc.?

How long is it going to be before United States military forces see to it that terrorists in the Middle East are afraid to so much as snatch an American woman's purse?

How long do we have to tolerate the mosquitoes without being allowed to use the simple solution of insecticide? How long?

TRIBUTE TO DOROTHA FREDERICK

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding woman, Dorotha Frederick, on the occasion of her retirement from over a half-century of practice as a licensed cosmetologist in Mount Clemens.

Even more than this distinguished professional accomplishment. Dorotha's humanitarian spirit and commitment to the disadvantaged in our community have made her a touchstone in the hearts of family, friends, and countless others.

Known as a "whirlwind of activity and action," Dorotha's volunteer and fundraising work with the Salvation Army has set new standards of energy and devotion to the Army's charitable mission.

Her leadership as president of the women's auxiliary and active participation on the advisory board only underscore Dorotha's willingness to meet new challenges and assume new responsibilities. In 1987, her efforts were recognized when she received the prestigious Army of Stars Award for "faithful and outstanding service" to the Army and the needy in the community.

At St. Hubert's Church, she has served as president of both the ladies council and ladies parish. Her charisma made her a natural for the new position of greeter coordinator and added to the success of the receptions and social functions at St. Hubert's.

She has worked closely with the Mount Clemens Art Association and volunteered for Turning Point—the shelter for battered spouses in Mount Clemens. As a businesswoman, Dorotha helped the community and her colleagues through ther involvement in the Business and Professional Womens Club of Mount Clemens. And for her professional achievements, she was recognized as "Woman of the Year" for 1984.

Mr. Speaker, it doesn't look like retirement is going to slow Dorotha down. Though she is closing her shop and moving to Florida, I understand she has already contacted the local Salvation Army looking for ways to help.

Dorotha Frederick's impact on our community has been inspiring and she will long be remembered as a true friend of Mount Clemens.

L. MENDEL RIVERS AWARD FOR LEGISLATIVE ACTION

HON. W.G. (BILL) HEFNER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that our colleague, GERRY SOLOMON, has been selected to receive this year's L. Mendel Rivers award for Legislative Action from the Non Commissioned Officers Association. Let me be among the first to congratulate him. GERRY is well deserving of this recognition for his work on behalf of veterans and military personnel.

As a past recipient of this award I find myself in very distinguished company. Some past recipients include SAM NUNN, JOHN WARNER, BOB DOLE, SONNY MONTGOMERY, CHARLIE BENNETT, the late Mel Price, and the late Bill Nichols. It is a group with which I am proud to be associated and one to which I welcome GERRY. The Non Commissioned Officers Association's 160,000 members can be proud of their selection of this outstanding patriot to receive this award.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO THE CLEVELAND JOB CORPS ACADEMIC OLYMPIC TEAM

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, it is a special honor for me to rise today to salute Lisa Alexander, Deanna Diehl, Christopher Schmittle, and LeShawn Scott. These four talented young people from my congressional district were recently selected to represent our region in the Job Corps "Academic Olympics" held in St. Paul, MN.

As many of my colleagues know, Job Corps recently celebrated the 25th anniversary of its founding. In conjunction with the celebration, the organization sponsored the "Academic Olympics" on a regional level, with the winning teams going on to compete in the finals in Washington, DC. I am proud to report that the Cleveland Job Corps team finished first in the regional competition. The team received the "Traveling Trophy" and went on to compete in the final competition in Washington, DC.

Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to meet with the Cleveland Job Corp "Academic Olympic" Team and their coach while they were in our Nation's Capitol for the final competition. I was impressed with the incredible amount of team spirit the group exhibited. More importantly, however, they had the determination and pride to do their very best in representing our city throughout the competition. While visiting with the group, I learned that they had set goals, not just for the competition, but for their future as well.

Lisa Alexander plans to enter Cuyahoga Community College and major in emergency medical technology. Her long range goal is to become a politician or psychologist. Lisa believes that "you have to stay positive and show a sense of responsibility" to accomplish your goals.

Deanna Diehl is studying building and apartment maintenance with the Homebuilders Institute. She plans a career in communications. Deanna stressed the importance of "having friends, but in the long run, being your own person and making your own decisions."

Christopher Schmittle would like to one day attend the U.S. Air Force Academy. He is credited with boosting the team spirit and being their emotional support throughout the grueling competition. He, too, maintained the importance of ignoring peer pressure.

LeShawn Scott is studying data entry and has career plans of becoming a sociologist. LeShawn believes strongly in "setting goals and doing your very best to be the best."

When I spoke with the coach of the team, Mr. Paul Weber, he explained that these individuals were selected for the Job Corps Olympic Team not just on test scores, but on their attitude and willingness to work together as a team. He stated, "I've seen a lot of young people for whom Job Corps was a last chance. These four young people have taken that opportunity and done wonders for themselves."

Mr. Speaker, I share our community's pride in Lisa, Deanna, Chris, and LeShawn. They not only did an outstanding job of representing our city, but they showed us what it takes to be the best. They showed us what winners are made of.

Again, I congratulate and take great pride in saluting the Cleveland Job Corp "Academic Olympic" Team.

THE NEW DENVER AIRPORT

HON. DAVID E. SKAGGS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. SKAGGS. Mr. Speaker, today is an important day for our Nation's aviation system. This morning, after giving his final OK to the environmental impact statement, Secretary of Transportation Samuel Skinner presented the city and county of Denver with a check for $60 million for construction of the new Denver International Airport.

This money is a vital downpayment. But there's a long road ahead of us and it'll take a long-term commitment from both the Congress and the administration to complete this critical project. And that's what I'm asking for today.

I'm asking my colleagues for your help in leading our aviation system into the 21st century—your help in getting the system up to speed. And the new Denver airport sets the course.

Yes, this new airport will be located in Colorado, but it will be used by citizens throughout the Nation and the world. Where the constituency is the Nation, there is no room for parochialism, and it is the Nation that cries out for improved air service.

Since deregulation airline travel has skyrocketed from 275 million to somewhere around 418 million passengers a year. If national airway capacity is going to keep pace with demand we'll need several more new airports like Denver's around the country in the first part of the next century.

Denver is just the first. Other places will look to the Denver experience to see how seriously they can take the pledges of the Federal Government to help them meet their responsibilities to the national air transportation system. Secretary Skinner has made good on the administration's end—let's do our part. Let's work together to assure success in Denver.

FREEDOM ARTS FESTIVAL

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, while the city of San Diego is hosting a Soviet Art Festival this fall, some of us have helped organize a Freedom Arts Festival, to showcase the arts and cultures of some of the new citizens of this area. These are the people who, at great risk to themselves, fled from the oppression of the Communist systems of the Soviets and their clients throughout the world.

Prominent among these people who are seeking a new life in the United States are many from Southeast Asia, and they are achieving recognition as people of great talent, industry, and culture. The Freedom Arts Festival has on display in the library at San Diego State University an outstanding collection of photographs, courtesy of Le Van Khoa, president of the Vietnamese Artistic Photography Association. Le Van Khoa is a man of many talents, a noted composer, arranger and conductor of Vietnamese music as well as being head of the Photography Association.

The Vietnamese Artistic Photography Association was founded in 1968 in Vietnam, with headquarters in Saigon and chapters scattered about the country from Hue to Saigon, down through the Mekong River Delta, up to Long Xuyen, Chau Doc, and then to Da Lat in the highland. The association organized national and international photography contests until April, 1975, when it went into exile. In 1978, some of the old members and new friends, meeting in southern California, formed the new association, with a name that evolved into the present one. There are now chapters in several States in America.

Members living in Vietnam are still active also, although they have to submit pictures to censorship and requirements of the Communist Government there. As Le Van Khoa wrote in the introduction to a recent photo exhibition, Though far apart and in different environments, we share one thought: to portray the feelings of humanity and work together deliberately on the endless road of art.

The Freedom Arts Festival is indebted to Le Van Khoa for providing this outstanding collection of pictures, the focal point of its exhibit at San Diego State University. There is also a sample of pictures and photographs from other countries such as Afghanistan, Czechoslovakia, Laos, Cambodia, Poland, and other countries oppressed by communism, a prelude to the larger exhibit that will open in San Diego in October.

The current Freedom Arts Festival exhibit occupies the second, third, forth, and fifth floors of San Diego State's Malcolm A. Love Library. Sincere appreciation is due Don L. Bosseau, the university librarian, and to Ruth Leerhoff and Lyn Olsson, of the library's special collections section. It is through their cooperation that this outstanding display is available, without charge, to the people of our community, as well as the students of San Diego State University.

PRESERVATION OF WETLANDS

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 27, 1989

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, given our efforts to promote the preservation of wetlands, I want to share with my colleagues our efforts in Rhode Island to preserve wetlands through water efficiency improvements.

Demand for water services within the jurisdiction of the Providence Water Supply Board [PWSB] has been growing at 2.2 percent per year. This implies a need to double water supplies over thee next 35 years. The Big River Reservoir project is being promoted by the U.S. Corps of Engineers as the answer to the greater Providence area's growing water needs. Big River would provide a maximum of 26 million gallons of water per day. PWSB is projected to need 10 million gallons per day of this water by 1996, to supplement its 72 million gallons per day supply now obtained from the Scituate Reservoir.

Two important concerns, however, have been raised about this approach. First, there are irreversible environment damages that will inevitably result from the project. Second, consumers will incur excessive costs from this water project, compared to less expensive options.

The first concern has been raised by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and a number of Rhode Island citizens and civic organizations. These individuals and groups have detailed the destruction to 570 acres of irreplaceable wetlands if the project proceeds. The Corps of Engineers readily acknowledges the importance of wetlands, noting in their 1987 report on Rhode Island projects that:

Wetlands provide a food chain resource and habitat for an abundance and diversity of life not rivaled by most other types of environments. They are breeding, spawning, feeding, cover, and nursery areas for fish. They are important nesting, migrating, and wintering areas for ducks and geese.

In addition to being an abundant wildlife habitat, wetlands store flood waters, preventing millions of dollars' worth of damage to downstream citizens and companies. They also recharge and discharge ground water, remove pollutants from surface and ground water, and maintain water quality and drinking water supplies.

Already, an estimated half of all wetlands in the United States have been destroyed in the wake of development. This permanent loss has led to national concerns, expressed most recently by President Bush, who announced as a top priority "no net-loss" of the Nation's remaining wetlands. Legislation, of which I am cosponsor, is now pending in Congress (H.R. 1746 /S. 804) designed to slow wetlands destruction.

What are we at risk of losing if the Big River Reservoir goes forward? Not only would we eliminate 570 acres of productive wetlands, but destroy 20 miles of cold water streams, and some 2,000 acres of upland forest. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service estimates that it would require the acquisition and management of nearly 6,000 acres of wetlands elsewhere in Rhode Island to offset the wetland losses caused by the Big River project. Some experts question whether an ecosystem replacement would ever achieve the richness of this natural site. Others more pointedly wonder where the upwards of $70 million of replacement wetlands is going to be secured. As EPA so accurately noted:

Big River, Mishnock Swamp, and the south branch of the Pawtuxet comprise the largest, most diverse wetland complex in the 230 square mile Pawtuxet River Basin.

The diversity of wildlife attests to the biological richness of this site. Some three-fourths of the more than 200 species of mammals, birds, amphibians and reptiles depend upon the wetlands for some portion of their life cycle. These include native brook trout, the great horned owl, blue heron, red tailed hawk and songbirds, and an abundance of mink, fox, otter, weasel, deer and beaver. This biodiversity would sharply decline if the wetlands were to become a 25-feet-deep shallow lake. An area of exceptionally high scenic and recreational value would be lost for such pasttimes as fishing, canoing, bird watching, and waterfowl hunting. The State's citizens would lose what Rhode Island Wild Plant Society trustee, Lisa Gould, so eloquently called, a "living museum of organisms."

In addition to the loss of this wildlife habitat, cold water fisheries, freshwater ponds, vernal pools and lakes, and groundwater drawdown, Rhode Island's other waterways would be further stressed as a result of reduced downstream water flow. Flow on the Flat River Reservoir would be nearly halved, the flow on the south branch of the Pawtuxet would drop by one-third, and the mainstream of the Pawtuxet River would decline by one-eight. This raises serious questions of whether there will be adequate flows to dilute effluents to the safe levels required by the Safe Water Drinking Act and the Clean Water Act for achieving fishable and swimmable water conditions.

Given these facts it is not at all surprising to learn from EPA that:

The loss of—Big River/Mishnock—wetlands alone would be unprecedented in New England, greater than any project in the region since the inception of the Clean Water Act 17 years ago.

The importance of wetlands notwithstanding, and in spite of repeated EPA alerts to the Army Corps of Engineers since 1982 that the project could not comply with Federal wetland protection regulations, the corps insists the wetlands must go if Rhode Island homes and businesses are to satisfy rising demand for more water. The corps persists in largely ignoring section 404(b)(1) of the EPA guidelines under the Clean Water Act, which "prohibit discharges which are avoidable or which could cause or contribute to significant degradation of the aquatic environment."

The corps cavalier dismissal of so much evidence to the contrary smacks of the very same arguments put forward by engineers intent on flooding upward of 200,000 square kilometers of tropical rainforests in the Amazon River Basin for 50 giant hydroelectric dams. Many organizations, from the World Bank to the U.S. Congress, have challenged the need for these dams, detailing a broad range of lower cost options for deriving electricity without destroying the rainforests. It is hypocritical, however, for us to oppose such actions abroad, while supporting similar actions in our own backyards.

The corp's position, however, has been forcefully challenged before Rhode Island's Public Utility Commission in proceedings regarding a tariff increase requested by the Providence Water Supply Board to begin the Big River project. The $384 million project will increase water costs at least 270 percent, and probably higher than that if several hundred million dollars in tax-exempt bond financing is not forthcoming to subsidize the project.

The cost of the water also depends on the final level of demand. If all 26 million gallons per day of Big River water is consumed, the water would cost roughly 74 cents per gallon per day. If water demand for the greater Providence area only increases 10 million gallons per day—which could easily happen in the wake of a 270-percent cost increase—then the cost of water would be 540 percent higher. The water would cost nearly $4 per gallon, in order for this smaller volume of water sales to pay off the Big River's construction costs.

However, as the testimony made quite clear, if one takes a fiscally prudent position, then the Big River Reservoir project ranks relatively low on the scale of cost-effective options even at the seemingly low cost of 74 cents per gallon of water per day.

This becomes evident when the whole spectrum of water service options are assessed and compared with one another. Analysts refer to this process as "least-cost utility water planning." The least-cost utility planning approach has more than a decade's rigorous experience in the electricity sector, and in recent years has been applied to the water sector. In practice, it ranks all available supply and demand side options in order of their cost effectiveness. As a growing number of communities and States around the Nation are discovering after performing such analyses, demand-side efficiency improvements require a fraction of the investment cost compared to constructing new water projects.

A few examples sharply illustrate this point. Instead of flooding the wetlands so that the Big River Reservoir can supply inefficient water devices, we can also replace inefficient showerheads, faucets aerators, and toilets with high quality, efficient ones. The improved devices would deliver the same water services while consuming upwards of 75 percent less water. This freed-up water can then be used to satisfy demand by new or expanding homes and businesses in the State. The cost of the water-saving upgrades works out to between 7 and 53 cents per gallon per day. This is 72 to 98 percent less cost than Big River.

There are at least half a dozen additional benefits that accrue beyond these capital investment savings. For example, as the amount of water that must be supplied decreases, so do the pumping requirements, as well as the cost of water treatment. More efficient water use also reduces distribution costs. Much of the $13 million projected to be spent on expanding distribution lines through 1994 could be avoided.

More efficient water use would also reduce sewage flows, cutting the operating costs of the Narragansett Bay Commission's [NBC] sewage treatment facilities. Reducing wastewater flows into treatment plants have been found to enhance the treatment process and, as a result of this improved performance, extend the useful life of the facility. Reduced sewage flows also would enable NBC to defer construction of additional costly capacity.

One of the most impressive benefits results from substantial energy savings. High-efficiency showerheads and faucet aerators save oil, gas, and electricity by reducing hot water usage. According to estimates presented to the Public Utility Commission by least-cost utility planning expert Paul Chernick, the low-flow devices more than pay for themselves in energy savings, in addition to more than paying for themselves in water savings.

Installation of water-efficient devices also help to avert a planning nightmare of water shortages, followed by excess capacity. Big River Reservoir will take years to complete, whereas installation of efficient devices can be done within a matter of months. Big River's long lead-time raises the risk of water shortages, which short lead-time efficiency measures can entirely avoid. Similarly, once Big River is completed, it will provide expensive excess capacity that will not be needed for years to come. Efficiency investments, on the other hand, closely match the growth demand, eliminating this costly problem of overbuilt capacity.

Given this wealth of low-cost, low-risk efficiency options for satisfying water needs, the bottom line question then presents itself: can we ensure their timely installation? The answer is an unequivocal yes, given the evidence gathered from water retrofits around the Nation.

Take the case of the city of San Jose, CA. Faced with expensive capacity expansion, the city government, with the support of the chamber of commerce whose member businesses would suffer soaring water—and energy—bills, implemented a residential water conservation retrofit program. The program delivered and installed, at no cost to residences, low-flow shower heads, toilet dams, and toilet leak detection tablets. Between 1986 and 1988, retrofit kits were installed in 170,00 single family homes and 47,000 multfamily homes built before 1981. The retrofits achieved impressive savings of between 6 and 9 million gallons per day, and will eventually save residents $46 million on their water and energy bills. For comparison, Providence Water Supply board services roughly 135,000 single-family residences and 31,000 multifamily dwellings.

Other cities and States have tried other approaches. A common approach is to establish high-efficiency standards for water devices installed in new construction, renovation, or installed as replacements. For example, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, and other States, have upgraded the State building codes to require high-efficiency toilets in new buildings that consume a maximum of 1.6 gallons per flush—nearly 70 percent more efficient than average models.

The city of Los Angeles has adopted a more far reaching ordinance that requires all existing buildings to install toilets that use no more than 3.5 gallons per flush—30 percent more efficient than the average toilet—5 gallons per flush. Showerheads must use no more than 3 gallons per minute—30 percent more efficient than the average showerhead—5 gallons per minute. New construction must install toilets that use 1.5 gallons per flush or less. To enforce the ordinance, a surchage is assessed on the water bills of buildings not in compliance. The surcharge increases with time so that within 2 years the surcharge is equal to the water bill.

A novel approach in Morrow Bay, CA, requires any builder constructing a home to first save more water than the new home will use. This can be done by refitting existing homes with water efficient hardware, or paying to replace a specific length of the city's leaky water main. Builders installed efficient hardware in more than 4,000 Morrow Bay homes, a third of the city's total, within the first 2 years of the program.

The Conservation Law Foundation of New England has proposed another method of installation: have Rhode Island's gas and electric utilities underwrite part or all of the cost of installation. The basis for this recommendation is the cheap energy savings that can accrue from the use of highly efficient water devices. For example, the yearly electricity savings from a highly efficient toilet, showerhead, bathroom faucet aerator, and kitchen faucet aerator are, respectively, $67, $62, $8.55 and $5.65. The annualized investment necessary to capture this $143 of yearly savings through these four water devices amounts to $28, $1.30, $1.40, and $1.25. As is quite evident, the electricity savings far exceed the cost of each device.

This situation presents a very valuable win-win opportunity for the utilities, the ratepayers, and the environment. For the utility, this is equivalent to purchasing oil at a fraction of the current world price. For the ratepayer it means lower energy and water bills. For the environment it means indefinitely deferring the destruction of 570 acres of wetlands.

More modest, although still robust, savings of $50 per year are available from devices installed in homes that heat water with gas or oil.

These energy savings are above and beyond the substantial water savings, which range between 40 and 86 percent, depending on the device. The energy savings are also considered an underestimate, since the new devices would eliminate costly leaks. According to the American Water Works Association [AWWA], leaks in toilets alone waste over 4 gallons per day per person. That represents over 2 million gallons per day in potential savings from the 166,000 dwellings within the jurisdiction of the Providence Water Supply Board.

The AWWA estimates that toilet leaks in multifamily housing of 24 gallons per day per person is not unusual. Leakage in rental housing is particularly a problem, since the occupant does not typically pay the water bill, hence lacks the incentive to fix the leak. Rental units comprise over 40 percent of Rhode Island housing stock.

The energy and water saving devices noted above do not exhaust the range of opportunities by a long shot. Even more efficient showerheads are available which use only half a gallon per minute, 80 percent less than the 2.5 gallons per minute efficient ones notes above. Likewise, some toilet designs use half a gallon per flush, two-thirds less than the 1.5 gallons per flush considered above. Dishwashers and clothes washers present additional savings. Major brand dishwashers of comparable cost and quality use 20 percent less water than their inefficient counterparts. Thirty percent savings are available in dishwashers and clothes washers at a cost no more than $30, with the energy savings quickly recouping the extra costs.

Similarly attractive savings are available in the toilets and lavatories, clothes washers and dishwashers, located throughout the commercial and institutional sectors—offices, stores, hotels, motels, hospitals, schools, health clubs and gyms, dormitories, laundries, restaurants, cafeterias, and numerous public and private workplaces. Commercial high-efficiency faucets use 60 to 85 percent less water than inefficient models. Many designs also minimize waste by automatically shutting off the flow after a preset amount of time, preventing water loss when faucets are typically left running long after the user leaves.

Industrial facilities also harbor large water saving opportunities. Advances in water recycling enable car wash businesses, which typically use 25 gallons of water per car washed, to recycle 60 percent of washwater and 95 percent of rinse water. In some industrial facilities the American Water Works Association found water savings as high as 95 percent, with a 45-percent average for 45 firms in Los Angeles, principally through recycling.

Rhone Island's jewelry industry has developed considerable experience in using water-conserving techniques, largely as a result of discharge standards applied to the electroplating and surface finishing processes set by the Federal Clean Water Act. Numerous case studies have been complied, verifying water savings of 80 to 90 percent. Many of these practices are cost-effective options for many other Rhode Island industries simply looking for ways to cut costs. Not untypical was one of Providence's top 25 water users, which reduced its flow by 82 percent, from 70,000 gallons per day to roughly 13,000 gallons per day. The investment cost $10,000, but saved $4,000 per year on water and sewer charges, providing a 30-month payback. It also cut the cost for pretreatment equipment from $186,000 to under $50,000.

The question naturally arises, given the ready availability of water-saving technologies, and the rapid payback period for these investments, why aren't more businesses taking advantage of these opportunties? Eric Salomon, project manager for Armbrust Chain, and one of Rhode Island's leading industrial water efficiency experts, pinpointed several reasons. In his testimony before the Public Utility Commission, Salomon cited as a critical factor the lack of information on available technologies. He estimates this is a problem for two-thirds of businesses in the Greater Providence area. Quality information is indispensable for a company to identify what product are commercially available, who are reliable suppliers, and how the technologies perform. In many cases, there is also a need for additional technical assistance to help resolve the special needs of individuals companies.

Lack of quality information is also a pervasive problem for homeowners, building managers, and building developers. Access to good information is essential, but may not be enough in many situations. In the case of renters of residential and commercial buildings, they may pay the water bills but lack adequate incentive to make hardware improvements in a building they don't own. Lack of money is another problem that may prevent low-income households, elderly on fixed incomes, and businesses with tight cash flows from purchasing water-efficient hardware.

However, as was noted above, these problems can be oversome by having either or both the water and energy utilities, perhaps in conjunction with the State or community governments, finance part or all of the installation costs. This least-cost approach is being repeated in cities and States across the Nation. There are a diverse set of ways to finance installations. These range from San Jose's free home installations, to rebates that pay part or all of the cost of the upgrade. Nor are the opportunities and rebates limited to inside buildings. A number of cities, like Glendale, AZ, are giving cash incentives to anyone who remakes a landscape into a low-water-use one or installs a timer on an existing underground sprinkler.

Clearly the level of participation by water consumers will depend on how hassle-free the process is. Experience has shown, for example, that direct consumer contact, installation assistance, and partial to total financing are essential for high levels of participation. In sharp contrast, programs that require people to request information on receiving water-saving kits to be self-installed have incredibly low participation rates.

While not exhaustive by any stretch of the imagination, I think my comments nonetheless indicate an enormous opportunity for Rhode Island to secure water services in a highly efficient manner, that simultaneously guarantees economic growth and the preservation of our rich natural endowment.

In this light, I strongly support EPA's consistent and persistent efforts to prohibit the use of Big River, Mishnock River, their tributaries and adjacent wetlands as disposal sites in connection with construction of the Big River Reservior. The good stewardship efforts of this agency, as well as of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, in opposing the Big River Reservoir project provide an exemplary model by which the State of Rhode Island can greatly advance the art of water stewardship through comprehensive water efficiency improvements.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, September 28, 1989, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

MEETINGS SCHEDULED

SEPTEMBER 29

9:00 a.m.
Governmental Affairs
Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations
To resume hearings to examine U.S. Government anti-narcotic activities in the Andean region of South America.
SD-342

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Science, Technology, and Space Subcommittee
To continue hearings on the national science and technology policy, focusing on emerging national priorities in science and technology and the institutions which both make policy and perform research.
SR-253

10:00 a.m.
Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To continue oversight hearings to review the implementation of HUD's Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation Program, to provide affordable housing for low-income families and to rehabilitate deteriorating properties and revitalize neighborhoods, and to consider S. 1091, the United States Coast Guard Bicentennial Medal Act, and pending nominations.
SD-538

Environment and Public Works
Environmental Protection Subcommittee
To hold hearings to review the Department of Interior report to Congress concerning the Coastal Barrier Resources System.
SD-406

Finance
To hold hearings on proposed legislation to expand and restore the Individual Retirement Account by making deductible IRAs available to all Americans.
SD-215

Foreign Relations
Business meeting, to consider the United Nations Convention Against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances (Treaty Doc. 101-4).
SD-419

Labor and Human Resources
To hold hearings on the homeless situation in America.
SD-430

2:30 p.m.
Foreign Relations
To hold hearings on the nomination of Evelyn Irene Hoopes Teegen, of Minnesota, to be Ambassador to Fiji, and to serve concurrently as Ambassador to the Kingdom of Tonga, Ambassador to Tuvalu, and Ambassador to the Republic of Kiribati.
SD-419

OCTOBER 2

2:00 p.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
Public Lands, National Parks and Forests Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 11, to provide for the protection of public lands in the California desert.
SD-366

Foreign Relations
To hold hearings on the nominations of Marion V. Creekmore, Jr., of Virginia, to be Ambassador to the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka, and to serve concurrently as Ambassador to the Republic of Maldives, Chas. W. Freeman, Jr., of Rhode Island, to be Ambassador to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, Charles W. Hostler, of California, to be Ambassador to the State of Bahrain, and Michael Ussery, of Virginia, to be Ambassador to the Kingdom of Morocco.

SD-419

2:30 p.m.
Judiciary
To resume hearings on the imposition of the sentence of death.

SD-226

OCTOBER 3

9:30 a.m.
Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry
To resume hearings on the nomination of James E. Cason, of Virginia, to be Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Natural Resources and the Environment.

SR-332

Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
Securities Subcommittee
To hold hearings on the impact of institutional investors on corporate governance, takeovers, and the capital markets.

SD-538

Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Aviation Subcommittee
To hold hearings on international investment in the U.S. airline industry.

SR-253

Environment and Public Works
Environmental Protection Subcommittee
To hold hearings on proposed legislation to strengthen air quality standards, focusing on acid rain.

SH-216

10:00 a.m.
Foreign Relations
To hold hearings on U.S. policy options toward South Africa.

SD-419

Judiciary
To hold hearings on the international supply of drugs.

SD-226

Special on Aging
To hold hearings to examine proposals to make the Social Security Administration an independent agency and other administrative issues.

SD-628

2:00 p.m.
Foreign Relations
To hold hearings on the nominations of Charles E. Cobb, Jr., of Florida, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Iceland, Alan Green, Jr., of Oregon, to be Ambassador to the Socialist Republic of Romania, Sally J. Novetzke, of Iowa, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Malta, and John G. Weinmann, of Louisiana, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Finland.

SD-419

Judiciary
To hold hearings on the nomination of Gene McNary, of Missouri, to be Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, Department of Justice.

SD-226

OCTOBER 4

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Consumer Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 583, to establish national water efficiency standards for the manufacture and labeling of plumbing products sold in interstate commerce.

SR-253

Energy and Natural Resources
Business meeting, to resume consideration of S. 371, to designate certain National Forest System lands in the State of Idaho for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System, to prescribe certain management formulae for certain National Forest System lands, and to release other forest lands for multiple-use management, and other pending calendar business.

SD-366

Environment and Public Works
Environmental Protection Subcommittee
To continue hearings on proposed legislation to strengthen air quality standards, focusing on acid rain.

SH-216

10:00 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Foreign Commerce and Tourism Subcommittee
To hold hearings on the Japanese space industry.

SD-562

Finance
To hold hearings on changes in economic relationships between the U.S. and U.S.S.R.

SD-215

Foreign Relations
To continue hearings on U.S. policy options toward South Africa.

SD-419

Judiciary
To hold hearings on the impact of drugs on children and their families.

SD-226

Veterans' Affairs
To hold hearings on the nominations of Edward G. Lewis, of Virginia, to be Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs for Information Resources Management, and Joanne K. Webb, of Virginia, to be Director of the National Cemetery Service, Department of Veterans Affairs.

SR-418

10:15 a.m.
Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To hold oversight hearings on the activities of the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC).

SD-538

OCTOBER 5

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
To hold hearings on the Department of Energy's efforts to improve the operations and management of its atomic energy defense activities and its efforts to restore public credibility in the Department's ability to operate its facilities in a safe and environmentally sound manner, and on S. 972, S. 1304, and other related measures with respect to the environment, safety, and health aspects of operation of the Department of Energy's nuclear facilities.

SD-366

10:00 a.m.
Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs
To hold oversight hearings on the condition of the banking system.

SD-538

Environment and Public Works
Environmental Protection Subcommittee
To hold hearings to review the National Acid Precipitation Assessment Program and the scientific understanding of acid precipitation.

SD-406

OCTOBER 17

9:00 a.m.
Environment and Public Works
Water Resources, Transportation, and Infrastructure Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 1007, to examine the reduction in apportionment of Federal-aid highway funds to certain States, relating to highway fatality and injury reduction.

SD-406

9:30 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Surface Transportation Subcommittee
To hold hearings on advanced transportation systems, focusing on magnetic levitation and high-speed rail.

SD-253

Energy and Natural Resources
To hold oversight hearings on the appropriate role of methanol as a potential alternative fuel in our future energy policy.

SD-366

OCTOBER 18

9:00 a.m.
Commerce, Science, and Transportation
Communications Subcommittee
To hold hearings on S. 952, to stimulate the design, development, and manufacture of high definition television technology.

SR-253

9:30 a.m.
Budget
To hold joint hearings with the Committee on Governmental Affairs on budget reform issues.

SH-216

Governmental Affairs
To hold joint hearings with the Committee on the Budget on budget reform issues.

SH-216

10:00 a.m.
Foreign Relations
To hold hearings on the Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman, or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (Treat Doc. 100-20).

SD-419

2:15 p.m.
Environment and Public Works
To hold hearings on the nominations of Forrest J. Remick, of Pennsylvania, to be a Member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and David C. Williams, of Illinois, to be Inspector General, Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

SD-406

OCTOBER 19

9:30 a.m.
Energy and Natural Resources
To resume hearings on the Department of Energy's efforts to improve the operations and management of its atomic energy defense activities and its efforts to restore public credibility in the Department's ability to operate its facilities in a safe and environmentally sound manner, and on S. 972, S. 1304, and other related measures with respect to the environment, safety, and health aspects of operation of the Department of Energy's nuclear facilities.

SD-366

Small Business

To hold hearings on the nomination of Kyo R. Jhin, of Maryland, to be Chief Counsel for Advocacy, Small Business Administration.

SR-428A

2:00 p.m.

Select on Indian Affairs

To hold hearings on S. 1289, to improve the management of forests and woodlands and the production of forest resources on Indian land.

SR-485

OCTOBER 24

9:00 a.m.

Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry

Conservation and Forestry Subcommittee

To hold hearings on the protection of water quality.

SR-332

OCTOBER 25

9:00 a.m.

Commerce, Science, and Transportation

Communications Subcommittee

To hold hearings on cable carriage of local broadcast signals.

SR-253

OCTOBER 26

10:00 a.m.

Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry

Agricultural Production and Stabilization of Prices Subcommittee

To hold hearings on proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs, focusing on cotton.

SR-332

2:00 p.m.

Commerce, Science, and Transportation

Foreign Commerce and Tourism Subcommittee

To hold hearings on proposed legislation to promote and encourage travel in the U.S., and to review the National Tourism Policy Act (P.L. 97-63).

SR-253

NOVEMBER 1

10:00 a.m.

Commerce, Science, and Transportation

Foreign Commerce and Tourism Subcommittee

To hold oversight hearings on programs administered by the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service.

SR-253

NOVEMBER 2

2:00 p.m.

Select on Indian Affairs

To hold oversight hearings on Indian health facilities.

SR-485

POSTPONEMENTS

OCTOBER 17

10:00 a.m.

Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry

Agricultural Production and Stabilization of Prices Subcommittee

To hold hearings on proposed legislation to strengthen and improve U.S. agricultural programs, focusing on wheat.

SR-332

OCTOBER 18

9:30 a.m.

Commerce, Science, and Transportation

Science, Technology, and Space Subcommittee

To hold hearings on the international decade of natural disaster reduction.

SR-253

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, September 28, 1989

The House met at 9 a.m.

Rev. Anthony L. Evans, pastor, First Baptist Church, Olean, NY, offered the following prayer:

Unless the Lord builds the house, those who build it labor in vain. * * *—Psalm 127:1.

God of our fathers and mothers, their stay in trouble, their strength in conflict, their guide and resource, we honor You. Be to us what our forebears said You were to them. Like the faithful and brave who have gone before, we are pilgrims of a modern era and thus we seek Your face.

Call our Nation once again to the task of great moral responsibility which is commensurate with the great freedom that we enjoy. This land which we love is the envy of the nations and we would ask that she be kept strong and free.

Lead this honorable body. Lead them and our Nation in the paths of righteousness, truth, and justice, for Your name's sake we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 283, nays 91, not voting 58, as follows:

Mr. GILMAN changed his vote from "present" to "yea."

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNARD] please come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. BARNARD led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3281. An act to extend the expiration date of the Defense Production Act of 1950.

H.R. 3282. An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to authorize the continuation of the performance management and recognition system through March 31, 1991, and for other purposes.

THE REVEREND ANTHONY L. EVANS

(Mr. HOUGHTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, and friends, I would like to introduce to you Pastor Tony Evans and his son, Sean, from Olean, NY. Pastor Evans just gave the prayer here. He and Jim Ford are members of a profession of which we are all very proud. In this day and age in this exciting country of ours, and this not so exciting development in church membership, there are a handful of men and women who stand out as leaders in our church. Tony Evans is one of these. He is a strong believer. He is a strong force in our country and we are very proud to have him and his son here with us today.

REAPPOINTMENT AS MEMBER TO ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON STUDENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 491 of the Higher Education Act, as amended by section 407, Public Law 99-498, the Chair reappoints on the part of the House the following member to the Advisory Committee on Student Financial Assistance:

Mr. Stephen C. Biklen, Pittsford, NY.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBER OF COMMISSION ON INTERSTATE CHILD SUPPORT

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of section 126(b) of Public Law 100-485, the Speaker and minority leader jointly appoint to the Commission on Interstate Child Support on the part of the House the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA] to fill the existing vacancy thereon.

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 245 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3299.

□ 0931

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3299) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1990, with Mr. MAVROULES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Wednesday, September 27, 1989, the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] had been disposed of.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 4 printed in section 2 of House Report 101-261.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ROSTENKOWSKI

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard to make a unanimous-consent request, the minority and I have agreed to allocate a certain amount of time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS] to participate in the debate.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I control 52 minutes of the time, allocating 8 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS], and that the minority be allowed to give the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS] 20 minutes, which would mean that I would control 52 minutes of the time, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS] would control 28 minutes of the time, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] the remaining time.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, that is acceptable to me, and I would also join in the unanimous-consent request that 20 minutes of the time that would ordinarily come to me be allotted at the beginning to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS], so that he may yield time at his discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI: Strike so much of subtitle J of title XI as precedes part III thereof and insert the following:

Subtitle J—Expansion of IRA Deduction; Elimination of Provision Reducing Marginal Rate for High-Income Individuals

PART I—EXPANSION OF IRA DEDUCTION

SEC. 11951. ACTIVE PARTICIPANTS ALLOWED DEDUCTION FOR 50 PERCENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Paragraph (1) of section 219(g) (relating to limitation on deduction of active participants in certain pension plans) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If (for any part of any plan year ending with or within a taxable year) an individual or the individual's spouse is an active participant, the amount allowed as a deduction under subsection (a) for such taxable year shall be the sum of—

"(A) 100 percent of the amount which would have been allowable for such taxable year if each of the dollar limitations contained in subsections (b)(1)(A) and (c)(2) were reduced (but not below zero) by the amount determined under paragraph (2), plus

"(B) 50 percent of the excess of—

"(i) the amount which would have been allowable for such taxable year without regard to this subsection, over

"(ii) the amount determined under subparagraph (A)."

(b) DISALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTION FOR INTEREST ON LOAN INCURRED TO MAKE IRA CONTRIBUTION.—Subsection (h) of section 163 (relating to disallowance of deduction for personal interest) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) INTEREST ON LOAN INCURRED TO MAKE IRA CONTRIBUTION.—In the case of any interest which is paid or accrued on indebtedness incurred for purposes of making a contribution to an individual retirement plan—

"(A) for purposes of this subsection, such interest shall be treated as personal interest (and the provisions of paragraph (5) shall not apply), and

"(B) such interest shall not be treated as investment interest for purposes of subsection (d)."

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subsection (o) of section 408 is amended by striking paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) and inserting the following:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Qualified nondeductible contributions may be made on behalf of an individual to an individual retirement plan.

"(2) QUALIFIED NONDEDUCTIBLE CONTRIBUTIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified nondeductible contribution' means the portion of any contribution for a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1989, to an individual retirement plan which is not allowable as a deduction under section 219 solely by reason of subsection (g)(1) thereof.

"(B) YEARS BEFORE 1990.—The term 'qualified nondeductible contribution' includes any contribution to an individual retirement plan for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1990, which was a designated nondeductible contribution (as defined in this subsection as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1989).

"(C) TAXPAYER MAY ELECT TO TREAT DEDUCTIBLE CONTRIBUTIONS AS NONDEDUCTIBLE.—If a taxpayer elects not to deduct any contribution which (without regard to this subparagraph) is allowable as a deduction under section 219, such contribution shall be treated as a qualified nondeductible contribution.

"(3) TIME WHEN CONTRIBUTION MADE.—In determining for which taxable year a contribution is made, the rules of section 219(f)(3) shall apply."

(2) Paragraph (7) of section 219(f) is amended by striking "408(o)(2)(B)(ii)" and inserting "408(o)(2)(C)".

(3) Sections 408(o)(4) and 6693(b) are each amended by striking "designted nondeductible" each place it appears (including in any heading) and inserting "qualified nondeductible".

(4)(A) The section heading for section 6693 is amended by striking "DESIGNATED" and inserting "QUALIFIED".

(B) The item relating to section 6693 in the table of sections for part I of subchapter B of chapter 68 is amended by striking "designated" and inserting "qualified".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to contributions for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 11952. DISTRIBUTIONS FROM INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT PLANS MAY BE USED WITHOUT PENALTY TO PURCHASE FIRST HOME OR TO PAY HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 72(t) (relating to exceptions to 10-percent additional tax on early distributions from qualified retirement plans) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) DISTRIBUTIONS FROM INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT PLANS FOR FIRST HOME PURCHASERS OR EDUCATIONAL EXPENSES.—The following distributions to an individual from an individual retirement plan:

"(i) FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYERS.—Qualified first-time homebuyer distributions (as defined in paragraph (6)).

"(ii) HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.—Distributions (other than distributions described in subparagraph (A) or in clause (i)) to the extent such distributions do not exceed the qualified higher education expenses (as defined in paragraph (7)) of the taxpayer for the taxable year."

(b) DEFINITIONS.—Section 72(t) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) QUALIFIED FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER DISTRIBUTIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(E)(i)—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified first-time homebuyer distribution' means any payment or distribution received by a first-time homebuyer from an individual retirement plan to the extent such payment or distribution is used by the individual before the close of the 60th day after the day on which such payment or distribution is received to pay qualified acquisition costs with respect to a principal residence for such individual.

"(B) QUALIFIED ACQUISITION COSTS.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified acquisition costs' means the costs of acquiring, construction, or reconstructing the residence. Such term includes any usual or reasonable settlement, financing, or other closing costs.

"(C) FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER; OTHER DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER.—The term 'first-time homebuyer' means any individual if such individual (and, if married, such individual's spouse) had no present ownership interest in a principal residence during the 3-year period ending on the date of acquisition of the principal residence to which this paragraph applies.

"(ii) PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE.—The term 'principal residence' has the same meaning as when used in section 1034.

"(iii) DATE OF ACQUISITION.—The term 'date of acquisition' means the date on which a binding contract to acquire, construct, or reconstruct the principal residence to which subparagraph (A) applies is entered into.

"(D) SPECIAL RULE WHERE DELAY IN ACQUISITION.—If—

"(i) any amount is paid or distributed from an individual retirement plan to an individual for purposes of being used as provided in subparagraph (A), and

"(ii) by reason of a delay in the acquisition of the residence, the requirements of subparagraph (A) cannot be met,

the amount so paid or distributed may be paid into another individual retirement plan as provided in section 408(d)(3)(A)(i) without regard to section 408(d)(3)(B), and, if so paid into such other plan, such amount shall not be taken into account in determining whether section 408(d)(3)(A)(i) applies to any other amount.

"(7) QUALIFIED HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.—For purposes of paragraph (2)(E)(ii), the term 'qualified higher education expenses' has the meaning given such term by section 135(c)(2), reduced—

"(A) as provided in section 135(d)(1), and

"(B) by any amount excludable from gross income for the taxable year under section 135 (relating to income from United States savings bonds used to pay higher education expenses)."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to payments and distributions after December 31, 1989, in taxable years ending after such date.

PART II—ELIMINATION OF PROVISION REDUCING MARGINAL TAX RATE FOR HIGH-INCOME INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 11961. ELIMINATION OF PROVISION REDUCING MARGINAL TAX RATE FOR HIGH-INCOME INDIVIDUALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1 (relating to tax imposed) is amended—

(1) by striking the item beginning "Over $29,750" and all that follows in subsection (a) (relating to married individuals filing joint returns and surviving spouses) and inserting the following new items:

"Over $29,750 but not over $71,900.	$4,462.50, plus 28% of the excess over $29,750.
Over $71,900	$16,264.50, plus 33% of the excess over $71,900.",

(2) by striking the item beginning "Over $23,900" and all that follows in subsection (b) (relating to heads of households) and inserting the following new items:

"Over $23,900 but not over $61,650.	$3,585, plus 28% of the excess over $23,900.
Over $61,650	$14,155, plus 33% of the excess over $61,650.",

(3) by striking the item beginning "Over $17,850" and all that follows in subsection (c) (relating to unmarried individuals, other than surviving spouses and heads of households) and inserting the following new items:

"Over $17,850 but not over $43,150.	$2,677.50, plus 28% of the excess over $17,850.
Over $43,150	$9,761.50, plus 33% of the excess over $43,150.",

(4) by striking the item beginning "Over $14,875" and all that follows in subsection (d) (relating to married individuals filing separate returns) and inserting the following new items:

"Over $14,875 but not over $35,950.	$2,231.25, plus 28% of the excess over $14,875.
Over $35,950	$8,132.25, plus 33% of the excess over $35,950.",

and

(5) by striking the item beginning "Over $5,000" and all that follows in subsection (e) (relating to estates and trusts) and inserting the following new items:

"Over $5,000 but not over $13,000.	$750, plus 28% of the excess over $5,000.
Over $13,000	$2,990, plus 33% of the excess over $13,000."

(b) REPEAL OF PHASEOUT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1 is amended by striking subsection (g) (relating to phaseout of 15-percent rate and personal exemptions).

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (a) of section 1(f)(6) (relating to adjustments for inflation) is amended by striking "subsection (g)(4),".

(c) PERCENT MAXIMUM CAPITAL GAINS RATE.—Subsection (j) of section 1 (relating to maximum capital gains rate) is amended to read as follows:

"(j) MAXIMUM CAPITAL GAINS RATE.—If a taxpayer has a net capital gain for any taxable year, then the tax imposed by this section shall not exceed the sum of—

(1) a tax computed at the rates and in the same manner as if this subsection had not been enacted on the greater of—

"(A) taxable income reduced by the amount of the net capital gain, or

"(B) the amount of taxable income taxed at a rate below 28 percent, plus

"(2) a tax of 28 percent of the amount of taxable income in excess of the amount determined under paragraph (1).

For purposes of the preceding sentence, the amount taken into account as the net capital gain for any taxable year shall not exceed the amount which would be the net capital gain for such year if gains and losses from sales and exchanges of collectibles (as defined in section 408(m) without regard to paragraph (3) thereof) were not taken into account."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 11962. ACCELERATION OF DEPOSIT REQUIREMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6302 (relating to mode or time for collection), as amended by section 11504, is amended by redesignating subsection (f) as subsection (g) and by inserting after subsection (e) the following new subsection:

"(f) DEPOSITS OF SOCIAL SECURITY TAXES AND WITHHELD INCOME TAXES.—If, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, a person is required to make deposits of taxes imposed by chapters 21 and 24 on the basis of eighth-month periods, such person shall make deposits of such taxes on the 1st banking day after any day on which such person has $500,000 or more of such taxes for deposit. Rules similar to the rules of section 5061(e)(3) shall apply to the dollar amount applicable under the preceding sentence."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on January 1, 1990.

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—In the case of any amount which (but for this paragraph) would be required to be deposited during calendar year 1990 under the amendment made by subsection (a), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply only to 60 percent of such amount.

(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1991.—In the case of any amount which (but for this paragraph) would be required to be deposited during calendar year 1991 under the amendment made by subsection (a), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply only to 70 percent of such amount.

PART III—DEFICIT REDUCTION TRUST FUND

SEC. 11971. DEFICIT REDUCTION TRUST FUND.

(a) CREATION OF TRUST FUND.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the "Deficit Reduction Trust Fund".

(b) TRANSFER TO ACCOUNT OF NET ADDITIONAL REVENUES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall, from time to time, transfer to the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund the amount of the qualified net additional revenues received in the Treasury.

(2) QUALIFIED NET ADDITIONAL REVENUES.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term "qualified net additional revenues" means the net amount by which the amendments made by parts I and II of this subtitle increase the amount of revenue received in the Treasury.

(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR FISCAL YEARS BEFORE 1995.—In the case of any fiscal year before fiscal year 1995, the amount of the qualified net additional revenue for such year shall be determined under the following table:

In the case of fiscal year:	The qualified net additional revenues are:
1990	$1,021,000,000
1991	1,140,000,000
1992	3,997,000,000
1993	8,641,000,000
1994	10,460,000,000.

(3) ESTIMATES.—For fiscal years after 1994, the amounts transferred to the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund shall be made on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the qualified net additional revenues. Proper adjustments shall be made in the amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of or less than the amounts required to be transferred.

(c) USE OF AMOUNTS IN TRUST FUND.—The Secretary shall use the amounts in the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund to redeem, or buy before maturity, obligations of the Government which are included in the public debt. Any obligation of the Government which is paid, redeemed, or bought with money from the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund shall be cancelled and retired and may not be reissued.

Redesignate part III of subtitle J of title XI of the bill as part IV.

Strike section 11632 of the bill.

Amend the table of contents accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule and the unanimous-consent request just agreed to, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 52 minutes, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] will be recognized for 40 minutes, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS] will be recognized for 28 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY].

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States in his inaugural address said that "we are more than the sum of our possessions, a very noble and startling theme coming from a man who had spent 8 yeas in an administration that celebrated wealth as one of the major social ethos of our Republic. It was a wonderful concept, and it is now turned upside down by his urgent desire to have capital gains cut.

This particular tax holiday for the rich will not result in any new growth. Face it, my friends, a fire sale on old assets is not going to make this economy grow. It will only cost the Treasury a great deal of money.

Read the headlines in the Washington Post today: The FHA, $4.2 billion in the hole; an S&L crisis that will cost us $150 billion to $180 billion; nuclear powerplants that have to be cleaned up, cost unknown.

In the face of these painful realities, what does the President suggest we do? That we cut the taxes on the rich only to be made up in the future by the middle class. How completely preposterous can we be? How can we ignore the essential reality that the pressing problem of this country is not that the rich are taxed too high but that there is not enough revenue to run the Government of the United States? If we are to be lowering taxes it should be for working men and women.

For the last 10 years, the bottom 20 percent of the people in this country have seen their real incomes decline. The top 5 percent of income earners have seen almost a 20-percent increase in their incomes just in the incremental increase in the last 10 years is larger than the bottom 20 percent possess. We should be about correcting that injustice. Sadly, we do not do that.

Mr. Chairman, what we do offer is an alternative that is useful and important. It will stimulate savings. It will be paid for by the rich, and it will help the middle class, to realize the American dream a new home or a college education. It is the prudent and responsible thing to do.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps the first words that I will say in my comments today will be the most important of the few minutes that I will undertake, and I hope the Members of this body will listen well, and I hope the people of this country will listen.

The present tax treatment of capital gains and losses is both inequitable and a barrier to economic growth. The tax on capital gains directly affects investment decisions, the mobility and the flow of risk capital from static to more dynamic situations, the ease or difficulty experienced by new ventures in obtaining capital and thereby strength and potential for growth of the economy.

Those could be my words, ladies and gentlemen. They are not my words. They are the words that were spoken by President John F. Kennedy in 1963 in his message to the Congress of the United States. He certainly did not view capital gains as a partisan issue nor do the 19 members of the Committee on Ways and Means who formed the strong bipartisan majority which adopted the Jenkins-Archer-Flippo capital gains rate reduction and indexing provision in the committee.

Our amendment had nothing to do with party affiliation. It had nothing to do with pitting one group of taxpayers against another. It is simply the right thing to do for our economy, as Jack Kennedy said, to improve on the longest peacetime economic expansion in our Nation's history.

But the Democratic leadership has chosen to adopt the tired, wornout, failed rhetoric of another candidate for the Presidency, Michael Dukakis, and that argument lost last year. I would hope today that the majority of this House, if they had to choose, would choose Jack Kennedy over Michael Dukakis.

The Rostenkowski amendment, an expansion of IRA's, which just 3 years ago the Democrat leadership denounced as a tax giveaway and all but ran out of the Tax Code on a rail, now finds itself resurrected. They have to hide from their old rhetoric, so they are trying to paint the proposal to be something that it is not.

Mr. Chairman, let us face it, it is really difficult to sell something as a blow for the little guy when 84 percent of the people who would get the benefit from the Rostenkowski IRA proposal earn over $50,000 a year.

□ 0940

And besides, you cannot have an IRA if you do not have a job. And if you do not have a good-paying job, which is brought about by greater capital investment, then you are going to have difficulty finding the money to invest in your own IRA.

But his amendment, which is a combination of a huge tax increase and a partial restoration of the IRA deductions, really is not an alternative to the bipartisan committee capital gains provision. As desirable as IRA's may be, this is no more than classic tax and spend politics designed to attract votes to beat captial gains.

The committee plan, on the other hand, was designed to help improve on the Nation's record of peacetime economic expansion, and it does so in a way that is fairer to taxpayers at all income levels.

Much of what we currently tax as capital gains really represents nothing but inflation itself. To reduce that penalty and stimulate investment, there should be a rate differential now. We need the indexing of the cost basis of capital assets to eliminate the taxation of pure inflation. That is a provision I have worked on for 15 years, and the time is right for its adoption.

The Archer-Jenkins rate differential raises $9.4 billion in new revenue over the next 3 years. And no one should give any credence to the inflated out-year guesstimates that the proponents of the Rostenkowski amendment and the opponents of the capital gains rate reduction have been waving around as if they are fact. The history of capital gains tax estimating simply does not bear that out.

The in-house Government estimators on which the opponents to the capital gains rate reduction in 1978 based their argument cited that in each year after the rate reduction we would lose revenue, so that over a 4-year period there would be a $4.6 billion revenue loss. We hear that same rhetoric today. We see the same in-house, so-called official estimators, providing information that is relied upon by the opponents of capital gains rate reductions.

But what really happened after the 1978 rate reduction? The facts are that we got increased revenues of $7.4 billion over that 4-year period, not a reduction or a loss of $4.6 billion as the opponents said would occur. The next 3 years saw continued increases in revenues.

For 7 solid years after 1978 we had revenue increases as a result of capital gains rate reductions until they unwisely were increased in 1986. We have every reason to believe that will happen again with a lower rate on capital gains these increased revenues will not cause a need to raise taxes on middle-income taxpayers but rather provide an opportunity to lower their taxes.

The opponents will tell you in their rhetoric that only the wealthy benefit from a rate reduction, but in the most recent IRS data, 75 percent of the taxpayers who had capital gains on their tax returns had under $50,000 of other income. Those people are middle-income Americans, and middle-income Americans do not want their nest egg taxed at a higher rate.

Do not be misled by the outrageous charts and tables that you have seen from capital gains opponents which classify many low- and middle-income individuals who happen to realize that one-time gain in their life by the sale of their home, or the sale of their farm, or the sale of their small business, or the sale of a stock accumulation as being somehow rich for the rest of their lives. The choice before the House today is a clear one. We can tax away America's future. We can encourage investment to preserve and enhance the Nation's core of capital. That is our greatest hope for a secure economic future, as President Kennedy said. That is the choice, and it is a very important one to all of the workers of this country.

Among industrialized nations, we stand virtually alone in taxing the nest eggs of our middle-income citizens. Our major international competitors have either no capital gains tax whatsoever, or a very nominal one. The cost of capital in the United States is three times higher than Japan, to a major extent because of the high capital gains tax in this country.

It is important to the competitiveness of America, if we want jobs financed by domestic capital and not dependent upon foreign sources of capital to reduce the capital gains rate. Every time we have to depend on foreign investment for our business or our farms, we create an obligation to future generations to pay service charges which takes money out of the productive sector of our economy and sends it overseas.

Let us make America competitive. Let us build a thriving economy. Let us create better jobs and more jobs for American workers. Let us follow what Jack Kennedy said in 1963.

Vote against the Rostenkowski amendment and for the committee bipartisan capital gains rate reduction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has consumed 9 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FLIPPO].

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to review for just 1 moment my view of why we are at this point here today in regard to the capital gains area. Our Committee on Ways and Means was asked to produce $5.3 billion for this year's budget purposes, and we completed that activity in committee, and when we completed that activity we found that we had many other programs that were set to expire at the end of this year.

We had the industrial development bonds set to expire, and those bonds are used by cities and countries throughout the Nation to build small manufacturing plants and create jobs for our people. They are set to expire at the end of this year.

Mortgage revenue bonds that are used by first-time home buyers in my State and in many States throughout this Nation, and are important to people, were set to expire at the end of this year.

Research and development costs that are very important to the new firms that are starting up in this country, and by the way, that is where all of the new jobs are being created in this country, are in the small firms where they have less than 20 employees, that research and development cost is set to expire at the end of this year, and that is very important to those programs.

Also we had very important new programs that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] and others, all of us are interested in such as the child care provisions. We had to find some way to fund those programs without increasing taxes and without increasing the deficit, and the capital gains is a good way to do that.

We found that we could have a temporary reduction in the capital gains rate, that it would produce some revenues over the period of time that we needed the revenues, and we could fund the extenders, and some child care provisions.

There will be those who say it is not connected. They can say any portion of the revenues raised are not connected to any particular type of expenditure, but I can say to Members that if we did not have the funds provided by the capital gains we would not be able to meet our targets.

I think those programs are important. Child care is important. This is a progrowth, projobs proposition, and I think it is worthy of passing.

I hope Members of this body will consider the fact that if someone made a $100 purchase in 1968, it would have to multiply more than 400 percent in order to maintain the purchasing power today.

□ 0950

So this is not a bill that goes only to the wealthy. Seventy-four percent of the tax returns that are filed that contain capital gains, 74 percent of those returns have income less than $50,000. I urge support.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, it has not been that long ago that our leadership got together and decided at some kind of a summit that we were not going to deal with the deficit, we were not going to talk about taxes, and that somehow next year all these problems would be decided.

Now people have broken from the ranks, they believe that we should have a tax giveaway to the rich at the expense of the poor and at the expense of the social needs of our Nation. I think it is disgraceful that this issue would have to be on the floor at this time. And I think that the alternative is one that the Democrats have really broken that contract intended to raise the taxes and instead of dealing with the problem of drugs and fighting for affordable housing, education, prevention, and health care we are now going to give that money to the individual retirement funds.

It is a heck of a choice that has to be made, but it seems to me that the Rostenkowski substitute makes one heck of a lot more sense than to hemorrhage the entire economy to make certain that profits become more important than people and that timber becomes the issue rather than the social needs of our country.

I do hope that the President is sincere in saying that he is going to veto this. I hope it passes. I hope that this Nation never has to really look to the Congress and say that we were supposed to wait until next year to do something, but this time we found out that the capital gains tax reduction for the richest people we have in the United States was far more important than keeping our pledge of the economic summit and say that next year would be a year for all people.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANGEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman is aware of President Kennedy's proposal. I think one of the first political axioms must be that when conservative Republicans invoke President Kennedy's name that we had all better beware.

President Kennedy suggested a tax cut on capital gains and to pay for it he suggested that we tax capital gains to death.

I would like to know from the gentleman from Texas whether he is in favor of the whole Kennedy plan.

MR. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS], a valued member of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Chairman, it is interesting the name of JFK is being invoked. We heard what he said when he was alive in terms of his position on capital gains. From our colleague from Texas, Mr. ARCHER.

To try to defend the jerry-rigged operation the Democrats are presenting, I understand a Member of the other body, the brother of the late President, is circulating a letter saying that as a matter of fact, if JFK were alive, he would not support capital gains as embodied in the Ways and Means' proposal.

My father-in-law is named Meredith Hamilton. We believe he is a distant relative of Alexander Hamilton. And my father-in-law believes that Alexander Hamilton, if he were alive, would be supporting the capital gains change.

My neighbor is named John Lincoln. He believes he is a direct descendant of Abraham Lincoln. He sent a letter to me stating that he believed that if Abe Lincoln were alive today, he would be supporting the capital gains position before us.

I also have a letter from Jimmy Roosevelt. Now I will admit it is not about capital gains. He is berating me about Social Security. But if you read between the lines, I think you can reasonably infer that Franklin Delano Roosevelt would have supported the capital gains proposal before us.

I think these kinds of approaches, rather than arguing the merits, exactly show the jerry-rig nature of the Democratic proposal. But in case you're interested—the vote from the cemetery precinct is in, and it's 3 to 1 for capital gains.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUCKABY].

Mr. HUCKABY. I thank the gentleman from Georgia for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, this is supposed to be the easy year budget reconciliation. We are talking about some $16 billion in the bill before us.

Next year was supposed to be the tough year, some $40 billion to $60 billion of cuts.

Yet here we are today, we have evolved into a confrontation of probably the greatest political power struggle in this House since the early days of Gramm-Rudman.

The choices before us, capital gains reductions, reinstating to some degree IRA's; I like both choices. Most Members in this House like both choices. But we must choose.

I come down on the side of capital gains. I come down on this side because I think it gives us the opportunity to keep this economy expanding for as far in the future, in the 1990's, as far as the eye can see.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CHAIRMAN

The CHAIRMAN. Just let me try to clarify the Chair's position here.

There are two Members in opposition, and then there is the proponent of the amendment. The Chair will do his very best to allocate the time so that the three can come together at the end. Presently the time remains: The gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has 30 minutes, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS] has 24 minutes, which makes 54, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 48 minutes.

Therefore at this point the Chair is going to call upon the gentleman from Texas to yield time.

Mr. ARCHER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly accept that procedural goal.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of lowering the tax rate on capital gains. The Budget Reconciliation Act is a deficit reduction bill, and the proposal to cut the capital gains tax is a deficit reducer. We all agree that a lower tax rate will induce more transactions and bring in more revenue to the U.S. Treasury. In fact, almost $9 billion in revenue will be the result of the Jenkins-Archer proposal in just 2 years. That's $9 billion extra in tax revenue, coming from American investors rather than American paychecks.

Nevertheless, some are painting a cut in the captial gains tax rate as a partisan political issue. We cannot let the Jenkins-Archer proposal fall victim to political bickering. A lower capital gains tax is a necessity, not only for the Federal budget but for the American economy.

Products and equipment from America's foreign competitors are winning more and more space on store shelves, on highways, and in American homes. Part of the reason is our foreign competitors know that a lower capital gains tax means higher rates of savings and investment. Higher savings and investment rates means more available capital, and more capital means more economic growth and job creation. For example, Japans savings rate is twice that of the United States. While capital in Japan costs only half as much as it does in the United States. I am certain that we all agree on the dangers that these figures reveal, and I am also certain that lowering the capital gains tax rate is an important step in eliminating those dangers.

I am disgusted with the rhetoric that is being used to turn Americans against each other on this issue. I support President Bush's pledge against raising taxes, and this plan to lower the tax on capital gains sticks to that pledge 100 percent, while increasing revenue by almost $9 billion. Why should Americans be set against each other over a proposal that leaves everone's normal income free from the hands of the Internal Revenue Service?

In fact, most of the beneficiaries of a lower tax on capital gains are middle-income Americans. The Department of the Treasury reports that over 70 percent of the taxpayers who report capital gains on their tax forms earn other income of less than $50,000. One-third of the taxpayers who report capital gains have other income of less than $20,000 per year. Many of these taxpayers are elderly. The elderly, who represent only 11 percent of all tax returns, represent 26 percent of all tax returns reporting capital gains. As these figures clearly demonstrate, many, many Americans from all walks of life realize capital gains every year, and they will all benefit from this tax cut.

On the other hand, according to the Joint Committee on Taxation's analysis of the Democratic IRA proposal, the vast bulk of the beneficiaries of this proposal would be those Americans with incomes over $50,000. The simple reason for that is that most taxpayers with incomes under $50,000 already qualify for IRA's under current law.

It is also important to remember that the revenues resulting from this proposal will go to pay for valuable programs that might otherwise go unfunded, including child care, low-income housing, educational assistance, targeted job credits, and tax relief for the working poor. Americans participating in and supporting these programs will directly reap the benefits of increased investment transactions.

I urge my colleagues to support this sound and sensible policy that will spur both investment in America and revenue for the U.S. Treasury without raising taxes.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment to lower the capital gains tax rate.

Mr. Chairman, the Democrats have been furiously backpedalling to come up with an idea to offset President Bush's desire to cut capital gains tax rates and encourage investment. Their idea, to stimulate greater savings through encouraging Individual Retirement Accounts isn't a bad one if considered in a vacuum. The problem is, the reconciliation bill is not a vacuum, rather it's part of the budgetary process, the part that is mandated to raise revenue.

Now, encouraging investment in IRA's does not raise revenue. Even the Democrats understand this. So they propose also to simply raise the income tax rate at the far end of the scale to 33 percent. Since they love to tax, this fits exactly with their philosophy and the populists among them—almost all of them—are having a field day representing their proposal as one to protect middle-income Americans and make the wealthy pay.

I suggest that whenever you raise the tax rates, we all pay. If you want to encourage savings and investment you lower the tax rate, not raise it. But more than this, the Democrats represent that their tax rate increase is merely carrying out the original intent of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 and correcting an anomoly in the reform provisions that caused the top tax rate of 33 percent to reduce for the far end of the scale to 28 percent after a certain level of income was reached ($200,000).

No, Democrats, this is wrong. There was no anomoly. There was an agreement to provide equity to those at the far end who, under the reform provisions, were losing almost all deductions in order to achieve the lower rate.

I believe that the proposal to lower capital gains taxes is an economically sound one. In honesty, however, I don't feel very comfortable finding it in the reconciliation package, either. Obviously, the members of the Ways and Means Committee fished around for a way to find revenue in the President's proposal in order to make the budget numbers come out right. They found sufficient revenue if they limited the lower capital gains rate to a short 2-year period, but after that the economists predicted a net revenue loss. So Ways and Means limited the lower rate to the first 2 years to gain the revenue and make the numbers look good. Can't Congress ever do anything because it's the right policy rather than because it makes the numbers look artificially good?

Still, the remainder of the proposal to index capital gains to inflation after the 2-year period is so equitable, so compelling as tax policy, that this provision, even though supported by some Members for the wrong reason, deserves the support of the House.

I'm completely amazed at how weak the Democrats are as an opposition party. I used to believe that they were simply cowed by the great communicator, President Reagan. But it's clear that they're no better under George Bush and that the problem isn't so much the Republican leader as it is a bankruptcy of ideas and political philosophy on the other side of the aisle. Most of the Democrats have their hearts and minds locked in the Great Depression and sound economic thinking has totally passed them by. I wonder when someone in their party will figure this out. Until then, listening to them on the House floor is a case of deja vu, a dream from days past, with ideas which didn't work then and never will work, locked in time.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, competition: That's what this issue is about. This debate should not be snarled in partisan politics—Democrats and Republicans have championed capital gains treatment for over a quarter of a century. President John F. Kennedy said:

> The tax on capital gains directly affects investment decisions, the mobility and flow of risk capital from static to more dynamic situations, the ease of difficulty experienced by new ventures in obtaining capital, and thereby the strength and potential for growth in the economy.

How well America competes today in an international marketplace will determine our standard of living for the next generation. Lower capital gains rates will make America more competitive in the very industries and technologies where we must win.

The cost of investing in new equipment is higher in the United States than anywhere else in the industrial world. There is a penalty for investment in the United States. In Japan, the cost of business invesment is twice as low as in the United States. Or in the United Kingdom, where the cost of new investment is 3.56 percent, or West Germany where the cost of investment is 4.39 percent. Many of our competitors—Belgium, Italy, The Netherlands, Hong Kong, Taiwan, South Korea, and Singapore—do not tax capital gains at all. And our other competitors—such as Japan, Canada, France, and Sweden—tax capital gains at a much lower rate than in the United States. The link between cost of new investment and capital gains taxes is clear: A recent study shows that a permanent reduction of the capital gains rate to 15 percent would lower the cost of capital by 14 percent.

Let's look at our savings rate. Our national savings rate is much lower than those of our competitors. United States savings averaged only 5.3 percent, compared to 10.3 percent in West Germany, 18.6 percent in Japan, 9.4 percent in Canada, and 9 percent in France. IRA's can facilitate savings, but lower capital gains will reduce the tax on savings, thus raising our national savings rate. IRA's do not have a direct impact on the cost of new business equipment. A capital gains tax rate will have a greater positive effect on investment and the economy.

Some have suggested that a capital gains rate is unfair because a disproportionate share of the benefit would go to the rich. Yet the opponents fail to mention that their statistics are not based upon earned income, but rather their numbers include the capital gains income itself. So that a farmer who earns $40,000 a year and who sells his farm at a profit of $60,000 is considered to have earned $100,000 for that year. The opponents also ignore the fact that a greater number of taxpayers benefiting from the capital gains reduction are not rich—but middle class. Three-fourths of all tax returns with capital gains were reported by taxpayers whose incomes are under $50,000.

The elderly especially benefit from capital gains. While the elderly represent only 11 percent of all tax returns, they represent 26 percent of all tax returns reporting capital gains.

The family who owns some stock or real estate and who sells this asset when their children go to college, or for their retirement, want to make the most of their investment. This issue is clearly not a Republican or Democratic idea. It is an idea that makes sense for all Americans.

□ 1000

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUNDQUIST].

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished colleague from Texas for yielding time to me on this important issue.

My friends, today we have a choice to make. I do not think it is a very difficult choice. I deplore those on the other side of the aisle who are trying to make a class war out of it, pitching one group against the other. Today we have a choice that is very simple. We can extend IRA's for individuals. Eighty-four percent who make more than $50,000 benefit. Reduce the capital gains tax, 75 percent making less than $50,000 benefit. It is that simple.

High capital gains are a penalty on middle-class savings and investments.

For most people, a home, a farm, a small business. That is the biggest investment we will make in our lifetime. The Government does not take any risks when we buy that home, farm, or small business. However, the Government currently is taking properly a third of the sale on that piece of property. That is not fair.

The liberals say capital gains benefit only the rich. That is just not true. This tax cut will benefit middle-class American families, farmers, homeowners, and small businesses. If we want to encourage productive jobs creating investment in this country, the best way to do it is to lower the tax rate on capital gains.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OLIN].

Mr. OLIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I rise in strong support of the Rostenkowski amendment.

Mr. Chairman, The President's proposal to provide a temporary, 2-year cut in the capital gains tax is not only wrong, it's dangerous. If passed, it will create enormous instability in our economy. Rather than produce investment, it will encourage investors to cash in their assets to take advantage of a short-term tax benefit. A large sell-off could depress the stock market, which could depress the economy, at large. We would risk a recession that would end economic growth and make the deficit dramatically worse. The capital gains cut proposal takes our focus off what should be our primary economic goal, reduction of the deficit. It is the wrong proposal, at the wrong time, for the wrong reasons. It should be defeated.

While I would prefer to simply delete the capital gains cut from the bill, I do endorse the Democratic alternative. It is a responsible plan that appropriately focuses tax relief on the middle class. But most importantly, it will reduce the deficit, not increase it as the President's plan does. I support restoring individual retirement accounts for average Americans. I support allowing funds in IRA's to be used for home ownership and education. And I support removing the regressive provision that allows those earning more than $150,000 a year to pay a lower marginal tax rate than those making less than that. But most of all, I support reducing the deficit, which the Democratic plan does. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Rostenkowski-Gephardt-Stenholm measure.

Mr. Speaker, although we are the lowest taxed country in the industrialized world, it is supposed to give a $25,000 tax windfall to the wealthiest among Americans. The grounds have been that this will increase the health of our economy, our competitiveness, our productivity.

Well, this is a case of feeding the horse to feed sparrows.

Mr. Speaker, there are far more direct ways to improve American competitiveness. We can invest $6 or $7 or $8 billion in the Head Start Program, to help most educationally deprived young kids in America, 2- and 3-year-olds, to give them the enriched preschool experience, and to help them make it in school, and not become dropouts.

We could reverse the trends of the Reagan years to convert education grants and scholarships into loans, thus discouraging participation of bright young minority members, for example, and add to scholarships for secondary education.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Jenkins proposal.

Mr. Chairman, it was quite a coincidence that just a few minutes ago I received the first phone call that I have gotten from a broker in my district. I was a former stockbroker myself before coming here to the Congress, and being a farmer as well. The people I have heard from have not been people in investments, or wealthy people, but the landowners who worked the forest land in my district. These are independent people.

We have watched very closely, and we documented for this committee since 1986, when I worked against that provision of the Tax Code becuase it simply took away capital gains. I knew the damage it would bring into the reforestation effort in this country. We documented this clearly to the committee, the shortfall in reproduction of timber that this country is now faced with.

I want to call it to mind again here today because we are dealing with a renewable resource that is essential to this country and this country's economy. It is an environmental asset to Americas, a tool in the global warming problems, and we all recognize this. The forests are well-managed, and they are habitat to wildlife. With a loss of capital gains, we deal a direct blow to the reforestation of our lands.

Simply stated, if Members are faced with one person with $10,000 and a couple hundred acres of land, and he is talking abut whether or not to put it in the bank and let it compound interest where it is secure and protected by the Federal Savings and Loan Deposit Insurance Corporation, versus putting it back on the land where he would put it into the future production of timber, there is no insurance against forest fire or weather, or Hurricane Hugo, which destroyed over $1 billion worth of timber in South Carolina. It is a long-term proposition of 25 to 30 years, and most landowners cut a crop of timber only once in their life.

These are the people that I speak for. They are a component in the need for a capital gains provision, but surely there is no more clear indication of the need and importance of returning this capital gains provision to those who own and work our land.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, this has traditionally been a nonpartisan issue. Capital gains has been a part of our Tax Code since 1922 and was a part of the 1986 House tax reform proposal. It has enjoyed broad bipartisan support because everyone recognized that we needed to reward risk investors differently than people who invested in a sure thing.

As I have watched the factories of my district reduce inventory costs, work smarter and harder, improve productivity and quality, diversity of product, I see them bumping hard against the cost of capital, a cost of production that they cannot control, and a burden that their counterpart workers in other nations do not carry. Adopting a capital gains tax cut will not alone reduce the cost of capital but it is an important step in the right direction.

I urge support of the Archer-Jenkins capital gains proposal so that our Tax Code will support the hard work of America's people to assume strong, competitive industry.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, there are days when I especially understand why the people of America elected a Democratic House and Senate, despite the Ronald Reagans and the Lee Atwaters. There are days when I clearly understand the difference between Republicans and Democrats. Today is such a day.

Today is the day we make a choice between helping the average American family or helping those who earn millions of dollars a year. It is not difficult for me to make that choice, even though I represent one of the richest districts in this country. However, my people understand that selfishness does not help the economy. They understand that a good capital gains proposal would have attached the deficit, would not have added to it. I would have supported such a capital gains proposal.

□ 1010

But this Republican proposal will add to the deficit. We cannot afford to do that. We borrow and spend and pass the bills on to our kids. There they go again.

Our Democratic proposal attacks the major problems of the day. They are a lack of savings, but we can encourage IRA's. We can address the high cost of housing by allowing IRA's to be used for housing; we can address the high cost of education by allowing IRA's to be used for that purpose. And the deficit can be reduced by closing a terrible loophole in the Tax Code.

Today millionaires and billionaires pay a rate of 28 percent on the majority of their income while those earning between $70,000 and $150,000 pay the marginal rate of 33 percent. Our Republican friends do not view that as an injustice, that Leona Helmsley and Donald Trump can now come forth and get away with tax murder at the expense of our average constituents.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to be a Democrat in the tradition of John Kennedy who called for a tax differential at a time when the top rate, I say to my friends, was over 90 percent.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CALLAHAN].

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, for over a year now, some of us who have been interested in the timber provisions that currently are in the Jenkins-Archer bill have fought long and hard to bring us to this point today. But the reason those of us who are interested in timber are where we are today is because the Jenkins-Archer provisions brought us to this point.

Now, on the eve of the passage of this historical legislation, we see a carrot dangled in front of us by those who just a few weeks ago were in opposition to the timber provisions that are included in the Jenkins-Archer bill.

Let me say to the Members that in the South we have an old saying, that if you go to a dance with a lady, you dance with her, and my message to those who are interested in the timber provisions is that I encourage you to "dance with the one who brung you," and Jenkins-Archer has brought us to this point. The Jenkins-Archer provisions will accomplish those things that the people in the timber industry have fought so hard to get.

So, Mr. Chairman, let me encourage the Members to vote down the Rostenkowski substitute and vote for the Jenkins-Archer provisions that are in this historical piece of legislation.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Jenkins-Flippo-Archer proposal.

When we start talking about capital gains versus IRA's, we really ought to be for both of them. For people who invest, people who save their money and put it in some type of property, that would give them a capital gains break, and those are people who care about their futures. They want to make their futures more secure. They would like to sell that asset, and once they sell that asset they would like to put more of the money in their bank account rather than in the Treasury's bank account. Under the Jenkins-Archer proposal, that is exactly what would happen.

The homeowner, the farmer, the person who had bought stocks and bonds or a multitude of other assets, once held and once sold, under that proposal would be able to keep more money, put it in a savings account, earn interest on it, and know that he was building toward a safer, more secure retirement income. That is what we ought to be doing. We ought to be encouraging people to do that.

We cannot live on Social Security alone. Unfortunately, a lot of people have to do that. But we would all like to do better, and I think that is what the Tax Code should be used for, to encourage that type of activity.

IRA's do the same thing. IRA's encourage us to invest. If we can invest in a bank account and save that money, when we retire, we are going to have a more comfortable lifestyle. I applaud both of those concepts, and I know that many of my constituents would like to be able to do both. Unfortunately, today we are forced to choose between one or the other.

The problem I have with the alternative is that in order to get the break on the IRA, I have to say that I am willing to raise taxes. Let me tell the Members what disturbs me about raising taxes. No. 1, all year long we have been told that we would not be asked to vote on taxes until we get the President to come forward in a grand budget accord so that we could all step out together, hold hands, and show America that we are working toward reducing the budget deficit together.

Those who are in the lower income category say, "That is not going to bother me because you are only going to tax 600,000 wealthy Americans." I can only say to those people that once that is accomplished, if it is accomplished, "How far back will it be before the hand reaches down to get you because all you will have out of the way then is one stumbling block."

That is one reason we should look with some chagrin at this if a tax increase is added. What really bothers me, though, is that when we really get all of the covering off all the arguments and we look at the difference, we are down here arguing heart and soul, dividing friends, over 8 percentage points on the argument over capital gains. The substitute locks it in at 28, and Jenkins-Archer locks it in at 28. For a 2-year period, Archer-Jenkins goes down to 19.8, 20 percent. That is 20 percent versus 8 percent. So we are going to pour in a lot of capital for a 2-year period over an 8-percent tax break.

We do one other thing, though, that is not picked up in the other package, and that is that we go into inflation. My position is simply this: I know that a lot of people in high-growth areas, New York, Boston, even Washington, DC, Chicago, Los Angeles, and San Francisco, are living in places where homes just escalate in value so much that it really runs the average cost up so high that a young family cannot afford a home today.

Mr. Chairman, people are forced to pay tax on the inflated value, not the real value, and that is just not the American way.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the Members that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 45 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS] has 14 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has 25 minutes remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, as I was sitting here listening to this debate, it reminded me of something that was said by the grandson of Sigmund Freud. His name was Clement Freud. He said:

> When you hit someone over the head with a book and get a hollow sound, it doesn't necessarily mean the book was empty.

The book on this issue is that it is, purely and simply, nuts. We are $3 trillion in debt, we have a $200 billion annual deficit, and when we strip away all the music and bunting, we are on the floor of this House today prepared to vote on a proposal that will give a tax cut of $25,000 a year to those Americans earning over $200,000 a year. To those in this Chamber who think that the economic health of the rest is dependent on the benevolence of the rich, I say, "Why don't you go all the way? Just go ahead and take the rich off the tax rolls."

That is what some would like to do. The good old wage earners will pay the taxes. They are going to pay for what we lose today. You bet your life they are going to pay—not with my vote, but they will pay.

I say, open the book, and that is what we have got—$25,000 a year in tax cuts to those with over $200,000 in income. We can cloak it any way we want, we can wrap it and we can sing it any way we like, that is what we are doing here today, and I frankly think it is crazy.

Mr. Chairman, that is why I am going to vote against the Jenkins proposal and I am going to vote for the alternative.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VALENTINE].

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the substitute to the capital gains cut.

Many Members, myself among them, have viewed this as a tough issue and a tough vote. This is especially true for those of us who have specific industries, such as timber, in our districts that could benefit from the capital gains cut.

But we should also look at it as a historic opportunity. We face the clearest philosophical choice before the House since I came to the Congress nearly 7 years ago.

We can either give additional tax relief primarily to the wealthiest Americans or restore a program that benefits mainly middle-class citizens.

We can either add to the long-term budget deficit or make a real start on permanent deficit reduction.

We can either rehabilitate the theory of trickle-down economics or directly expand the ability of millions of average Americans to purchase homes and educate their children.

This should not be a partisan issue. I have never hesitated to oppose the leadership of my party when I believed the circumstances or the interests of my constituents require such opposition.

In this case, the Democratic leadership is right. Restoring and expanding the use of individual retirement accounts for middle-class taxpayers and reducing the long-term deficit is far superior to providing a tax break for rich citizens, making the Tax Code less equitable, and increasing the crushing burden of the deficit.

We have heard much rhetoric about a tax hike because the substitute eliminates the so-called bubble in the income tax rate structure. The fact that individuals with incomes over $104,000 and families of four with incomes over $200,000 will no longer enjoy the bubble benefit seems to be a cause for a great deal of finger-pointing and name-calling. No one wants to raise taxes—or even be accused of doing so by those who would substitute slogans for substance.

We should be able to go beyond the "read my lips" level of debate and look at the relative merits of the two proposals. What do we get in return for eliminating the bubble?

First, we will reinstate individual retirement account deductions for middle-class taxpayers who lost full access to this popular program in the 1986 tax reform.

Second, we will expand the use of IRA's to allow penalty-free withdrawals for the purchase of first homes or for college expenses.

Third, we will generate additional savings and capital formation, a development that is essential to economic growth.

Fourth, we will get guaranteed deficit reduction. The revenues generated by this legislation, after paying for the IRA program, would be placed in a new deficit reduction trust fund dedicated to that single purpose. Compared with the bill as presently written, including the capital gains cut, the alternative would produce an additional $25 billion in deficit reduction over the next 5 years.

What is the alternative? What can we accomplish through the capital gains cut?

Cutting capital gains would produce a major windfall for the wealthiest Americans while transferring more of the burden to the rest of us.

Cutting capital gains temporarily would unleash a frenzy of economic activity, much of it unproductive, that is bound to have unintended consequences. Who can predict the effect of the inevitable headlong rush to sell assets on the financial markets or the industries most involved?

Cutting capital gains is a gimmick that promises momentary relief in exchange for yet larger deficits in the future.

The capital gains cut is a mirage that looks good from a distance but will turn out to be budgetary quicksand a year or two from now. We would be making our own jobs tougher, and we would be making the lives of most Americans, who must pay for the deficit, much tougher.

The choice is clear to me. At a time when we are mired in a budgetary quagmire, it seems particularly irresponsible to add to the deficit, especially when we can reduce it, make the Tax Code more equitable, encourage savings and capital formation, and assist the middle class—all at the same time.

Mr. Chairman, if we reject this reasonable substitute, we will be condemning middle and lower income Americans to pay a higher percentage of the revenues collected by the Federal Government. That will be the real tax increase—and it will be borne by those less able to afford it. The vast majority of Americans will ask—with justification—whether they are being represented in this House.

I urge my colleagues to support the Democratic substitute.

□ 1020

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I just cannot let this go, that a capital gains rate reduction is going to cost revenue. Overwhelming consensus of the economists in this country has regularly said that the optimum rate for maximizing the revenue into the Federal Treasury is between 15 and 22 percent on capital gains.

Mr. Chairman, all of these comments are purely demagoguery that tries to create the impression that we are going to lose money by lowering the capital gains rate. It just is not so. History does not support that, and the American people understand the empirical data, experience data, and not the rhetoric.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I am absolutely appalled at the direction this debate has gone.

First of all, there was an attempt in this House to make this a partisan issue. That did not work because there are many of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle that recognize the benefit that this Nation will receive from reduced capital gains rate.

Then they start a class warfare saying that this is only going to benefit the wealthy, as if by bringing down the wealthy that it will help the middle class.

Mr. Chairman, I say to my colleagues, "You cannot do that. The Soviet Union has tried it. Many of the Communist countries have tried it. Their capital structure is in shambles."

My colleagues, we are still a capitalistic nation, and, as a capitalistic nation we depend upon the formation of capital to produce jobs. There is nothing wrong with that. There is nothing sleazy about that. That does not happen in the backroom. That happens on Main Street. That happens all across this country.

Mr. Chairman, if we are going to produce jobs for the next century, if we are going to be competitive, if we are not going to wake up day, after day, after day finding that our resources are being sucked up by the Japanese and other foreign investors, as we did today with Sony taking over Columbia Pictures, we are going to have to protect capital formation in this country. That is what produces jobs, and let us get over this demagoguery and this class warfare of people trying to show this is something for just the wealthy. This is not. This is good for all of America.

To take something like the IRA's and try to put that into this debate, we would be leaving the elderly out of the Democratic alternative. What benefit is that going to be to them?

So, I think we ought to look very carefully at what is before us and what the Jenkins-Archer proposal is trying to do. The Jenkins-Archer proposal is good for America. The Jenkins-Archer proposal is good for working America.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCURDY].

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment, which not only is a step in the right direction toward deficit reduction. But it prevents a step in the wrong direction—an increase in the deficit.

The capital gains tax cut in this bill would increase the deficit over the next 5 years by $21 billion. This amendment would cut the deficit during that time by $24.5 billion. The deficit is the single most important and difficult problem this Congress and this country faces. Everything we need to do, in both domestic and foreign affairs, is hostage to it. And we have this opportunity to address the problem in real terms. This is not a smoke and mirrors solution. It is real money that will be set aside specifically to lower the deficit.

In addition, this amendment, which restores the individual retirement account for middle income Americans, will encourage savings, which is essential for the economic health of the Nation.

Under this amendment, every worker could set up an individual retirement account and could deduct 50 percent of the $2,000 contribution allowed. The money could be withdrawn without penalty for education expenses or for the purchase of a first home.

Mr. Chairman, I support this amendment with enthusiasm. I believe that it will make a real contribution toward saving our children from the crushing debt that now threatens their futures and will help wage earning, tax paying Americans build better lives. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE].

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Chairman, let's take a moment to consider how it is even possible that we are seriously debating a capital gains tax cut. We assumed an obligation to raise $5.3 billion in new revenues for fiscal 1990 by agreeing to the budget resolution. Proponents of a capital gains cut have argued that the idea would raise some revenue over the short term.

Many of us think this approach to raising revenue is simply unfair. Common sense tells you that a capital gains cut will accrue disproportionately to the highest income taxpayers.

Proponents of the cut tell you, "No! This proposal will help everybody. It's not targeted on upper income taxpayers." The rate cut is nondiscriminatory on its face, but de facto it is squarely aimed at those at the topmost reaches of the income scale.

The proof is in the revenue projections. If this ill-advised and unnecessary tax cut is going to produce the kind of revenues promised by its proponents, it absolutely depends on the wealthy selling their assets at a feverish pace.

Finally, I think it's worthwhile to say a brief word about progressivity. I think what "progressive" has traditionally meant to most people is that those with higher incomes pay at a higher rate. What proponents of the cut are arguing is that the system will be progressive because those with higher incomes will pay a larger share of the total income tax paid by all individuals. This may be true, but it is not progressive.

When a wage earner realizes that he is paying 28 percent on his next dollar while a millionaire is cashing in investments like crazy—as he will surely do if taxes are more important to him than the economic performance of his assets—and paying just 19.6 percent tops on the proceeds, that wage earner is going to think the situation is unfair. And he will be absolutely right.

If you are confused by conflicting claims of who benefits from the Bush-Archer-Jenkins capital gains proposal, the following may help clear the air.

President Bush claims that "over 70 percent of the taxpayers, who report capital gains, have other income of less than $50,000."

What that carefully crafted statement means is that of the 8 million tax returns annually which show any capital gains activity, roughly 70 percent—about 5.5 million—are filed by those with incomes below $50,000.

Bear in mind that about 110 million tax returns are filed each year. Since only 8 million do have some capital gains, that means that 100 million returns have no capital gains at all and thus do not benefit at all from a lower capital gains rate.

President Bush's statistics count each tax return with capital gains—8 million—equally—whether a return has $10 of capital gains "little old widow" or $250 million of capital gains "little old Donald Trump types".

You get an entirely different picture if you consider how much each return has in capital gains and thus how much taxpayers in various income tax categories save from a lower capital gains rate.

Using Joint Tax Committee figures—Bush uses Treasury figures—there were 4.5 million returns containing capital gains filed by those earning under $50,000 per year. Under Bush-Archer-Jenkins, they would save $1.2 billion in taxes for an average of $280 each.

That's 8 percent of the tax break under Bush-Archer-Jenkins.

In contrast, there are 376,000 tax returns with capital gains filed by those earning over $200,000 per year. Under Bush-Archer-Jenkins, they would save $9.4 billion in taxes for an average of $25,000 each.

Listen carefully, Mr. and Mrs. Average American. If you earn under $50,000 a year, you get an average cut of $280. But you get a $25,000 tax cut if your income is over $200,000.

To me, at least, that seems patently unfair. We ought not go down the ill-advised path of a low rate on capital gains.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS].

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I join others in lamenting the character of this debate in some instances. I think we all ought to be more mature than to engage in this "good guys" and "bad guys" business.

Mr. Chairman, I heard one Member saying that the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS] is madness. That means insane. That means that he is not competent to serve in the Congress. I want to see the hands of those who believe that about the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS], including the man who said it. On the other hand Mr. Chairman, I heard someone say that the people who oppose this Ways and Means proposal are like the Communists. I want the see the hands of all the people in this Chamber who believe that any Member of this body is in any way near the Communist doctrine. We are talking about honest differences of opinion here—opinion about what is fair in the Tax Code.

My mother says "there is so much good in the worst of us and so much bad in the best of us that it hardly becomes any of us to say anything about the rest of us," and it seems to me that we ought to talk more in precise facts and stop name calling.

I have heard suggestions that people, Democrats who support the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS], a fellow Democrat, are somehow disloyal to their party. Last time I head that it was over the Vietnam war.

Mr. Chairman, I ran in 1964 with Mr. Johnson. We all ran and said that we were going to get out of Vietnam, the Democrats are going to do that. Mr. Goldwater indicated otherwise. Somebody said, "They told me if I voted for Goldwater, the war in Vietnam would escalate. I voted for Goldwater, and, sure enough, the war in Vietnam escalated." Next thing I knew, I come to Congress, I stayed right with Lyndon Johnson's platform, I stayed right with my platform. I am against the Vietnam war, and Mr. Johnson changes his mind. Suddenly I am a traitor to my party.

A former Governor of Indiana once told a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, "I just took an oath to uphold whatever you have in your head." Now my leadership in this body 3 years ago had in their head in the 1986 act there would be a capital gains differential. The leaders who were for it then, are against it now. I am in about the same position that they were in then, but suddenly I am a traitor to my party.

□ 1030

Now, the only thing I proposed last June in the committee was that we index for capital gains. It just plain is not fair for someone to own a house or a farm or whatever or a business for 30 years and then sell it and be told he or she had a gain when in fact the difference in price is nominal—only inflation. Not real. Such a person—rich or middle income—has no gain. In fact, he or she loses because taxes are paid on the inflation. Correction of that is all I ever wanted.

Well, no, some of the people on the committee were not interested in it, so I made a deal with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS], 2 years of the 20 percent in lieu of indexing—a little catch-up ball because you cannot index during those 2 years—and then I have my way; indexing at 28 percent into perpetuity, into eternity; a pretty good deal, I thought.

The next thing I hear some of my fellow party members say, "Well, we could have got it for you wholesale. We're for indexing now."

I said, "Well, it's a little bit late." Mr. PICKLE said the same thing—more colorfully—a little bit late. We already made our commitment.

Suddenly, indexing was fair and that is what it ought to be.

Now today I look at the alternative. Where is the indexing? Suddenly it is not moral anymore. It is gone.

So I just say in closing for those who are moralizing, there is no sin being fair with people who are rich as well as with the average person who has built up lifetime savings and does not want to have it taken away from him just because the Government could not prevent inflation.

It ill behooves those who voted in 1986 to give Lee Iacocca a $4 million ordinary tax cut to complain about a capital gains tax rate today that at least requires people to invest in order to get the differential.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE].

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the President's position on capital gains and applaud the good work of my colleagues, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER].

Mr. Chairman, I am in opposition to the Gephardt amendment and I want the record to reflect my support for the President's position on capital gains.

Setting aside the partisan rhetoric, I ask my colleagues to get the facts straight. We, the Congress, have historically used the Tax Code to encourage certain kinds of economic and social conduct. The conduct we are encouraging through a reduction in the capital gains tax is to the benefit of the overall economic growth of this country. We need to encourage this Nation's entrepreneurs, its risk takers, its small businessmen—the leaders who are creating good jobs, expanding our markets and improving our technologies.

History clearly tells us that when we have reduced the rate of tax on capital gains that growth has occurred and jobs are created. Revenue to the Federal Government does not remain static. Instead, revenue is increased to all levels of Government. After the capital gains cut to 28 percent in 1978, revenues to the Government increased by 42 percent over revenues at the 49 percent capital rate in 1976. From 1982 to 1985, capital gains revenues at the new lower 20 percent top rate almost doubled in constant dollars before tax reform nearly doubled capital gains taxes again in 1986.

The facts also show us that our major competitors in the international marketplace, the Germans, others in the European Economic Community, and the Japanese have little or no capital gains tax—they encourage investment in their country's future. In 1985, a study done by Paul Craig Roberts, of the Center for Strategic and International Studies, showed the United States' cost of capital was already 55 percent higher than that of Japan. The United States cannot and will not compete effectively at such a disadvantage—a disadvantage perpetrated by shortsighted Government policy.

Setting aside even more of this partisan rhetoric, it is an established fact that more people with moderate incomes realize capital gains than those in higher income levels. Three-fourths of all tax returns reporting capital gains were filed by taxpayers with wage and salary income of less than $50,000. Just as importantly, include among the high-bracket taxpayers in IRS reports, are many low- and middle-income families and individuals who realize a one-time gain from the sale of a once-in-a-lifetime asset. So, we should dismiss the seductive notion that a capital gains cut is just a handout to the rich.

Little discussion has been given in the last few weeks to one important part of this capital gains reduction package. I refer to the importance of indexing the capital gains tax to inflation. This is essential to preventing taxpayers from being taxed on gains due solely to inflation. In fact, some taxpayers must pay capital gains tax on what is really a loss. If a family in northwestern Pennsylvania purchased a house for $40,000 in 1978, and now they want to or need to sell this house 11 years later for $47,000—they will pay a capital gains tax on the $7,000. But, that ignores the fact that their investment failed to keep pace with inflation. Considering inflation, they had a negative return on their investment. Yet this modest family, who may be selling their house to pay the bills or cannot afford to defer the gain, will pay a 33-percent capital gains tax because of inflation. Small business, homeowners, farmers, should not be taxed on inflationary gains and the Government should not make a profit based on inflation.

The amendment before the House this morning, offered by my colleagues from Missouri and Illinois, have some equally attractive features. I support using IRA deductions to encourage savings as does President Bush. I support the use of IRA savings for college educations, health care, and home ownership. I support reducing the marginal tax rate "bubble" which taxes many middle-income and upper middle-income taxpayers at a rate higher than upper income taxpayers. But, I do not support an increase in the income tax rates we just reduced in 1986. Make no doubt about it, the Gephardt-Rostenkowski amendment would be the final undoing of the lower rates provided in tax reform just as they become important to millions of Americans. Some of the deductions in the 1986 tax reform package are still being phased out and, yet, we're already increasing rates.

I might be more inclined to consider such a proposal if I believed that we might realize a considerable reduction in our budget deficit. This amendment offers no such reductions.

I am equally concerned that the capital gains reduction offers nothing in terms of deficit reduction—America's most urgent economic problem. But, a capital gains reduction is good economic growth policy and simple politics. I urge my colleagues to vote for good policy instead of good politics by defeating the Gephardt-Rostenkowski amendment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL], a gentleman who fully understands the need of venture capital, the gentleman from the Silicon Valley in California.

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. Mr. Chairman, I just want to begin by aligning myself with the Hoosier wisdom of our colleague. I think that was one of the finest speeches I have heard in my short time in the House.

Mr. Chairman, we have today an unfair choice. There is no logic why we have to choose capital gains or IRA's. Indeed, I think the American public and taxpayer finds it offensive that this issue is put to us as either/or.

I stand firmly in favor of restoration of IRA's. I think it is excellent to improve the savings rate of the United States, but that does not mean you must therefore be against capital gains tax reduction. Capital gains tax reduction is the way we have of forming capital in this country.

Let me speak for just a moment about northern California, because northern California was mentioned by one of my colleagues this morning, the gentlewoman from northern California. She spoke about that region about which I know a fair degree. Northern California and the Silicon Valley is composed of entrepreneurs, risk-takers who are willing to put their effort and their money on the line.

Now, there used to be a day when there was only one place where risk would be rewarded in the world, and that was the United States. That is no longer true. If you have a good idea and you would like to see it developed, you could take it to West Germany. You could take it to Japan, or you could keep it in America. Take it to West Germany and your capital gains will be taxed as zero percent. Take it to Japan, and your capital gains will be taxed at 5 percent, or keep it in America and if you are successful you will be rewarded with a 33-percent marginal tax rate.

Competitiveness means keeping American risk-taking in America. Now, I recognize capital gains is only the start. We need to do more. We need to restore fully R&D tax credits and make them permanent, but capital gains reduction is an important start and one which we should take today, whatever our position on IRA's.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

WHOSE TAXES RAISED, WHOSE LOWERED?

Mr. MOODY. Before making my points, Mr. Chairman, I want to remind the previous speaker that in those countries where they have zero capital gains, they have huge payroll taxes, up to 40 percent, and they have huge value-added taxes or sales taxes, up to 20 percent. Is that the kind of tax system we want to lead to by cutting capital gains here? Let us move to the tax system of Japan or Belgium? I would hope not.

Let us talk for a minute about whose taxes would be cut and whose would be raised under the Jenkins-Bush plan. Mr. Darman and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] said on TV last night that the Democrats want to raise taxes. Well, the proposal is not a general tax raise, of course. It is only for those people who make $150,000 or more a year—only 2 or 3 percent of the taxpayers. Nor does the proposal create a new, higher rate. Those with incomes between $75,000 and $150,000 are already paying at 33 percent. It simply says those people who are richer than that should pay at that same level. Mr. Darman and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] characterize that as a general tax increase, but it is not. No one else's taxes would be raised, and those super-income people should be paying at least at the same level as those who make less than they.

And whose taxes would be lowered under the Gephardt plan? Well, everyone who needs an IRA, that's who. And bear in mind that this IRA that we are proposing is far better than the old IRA, because it would allow you to unlock your IRA for three purposes, the big ticket items that the middle class faces: College tuition, medical costs, and home buying. The Gephardt plan, in effect, lowers taxes for the middle class.

And whose taxes would be raised by the Bush-Jenkins plan? Everybody's taxes would be raised, that's who. For the deficit is a tax. The Jenkins-Bush plan consciously, and I might say almost cynically, raises the deficit, at least $5 billion in the third year and then it explodes thereafter. The deficit is a tax on everybody who has a mortgage, everybody who finances a car, everybody who has a credit care. We have an interest rate structure in America that is two or three points higher than any other industrialized country because of the deficit. If you have a $50,000 mortgage, and that is not a lot, the 2- to 3-percent extra on interest rates means that you are paying a thousand dollars a year extra in interest costs on your home mortgage. That is a tax. If you are financing a $10,000 car, you pay $200 extra. That's a tax. But it's a tax that doesn't make you mad at the politicians because we did not explicitly raise your tax. We implicitly raised your tax by voting to enlarge the deficit, as the Bush-Jenkins plan does. The deficit is a tax, and this capital gains cut is a tax just as sure as I am standing here, because it enlarges the deficit and therefore interest costs.

So let us be very clear on whose taxes are actually raised, and whose lowered by the two plans before us. The super-income people have their taxes cut by the Jenkins-Bush capital gains plan. The middle-income people have their taxes cut by the Gephardt IRA plan. Everybody with a mortgage has their taxes raised by the deficit-enlarging Bush-Jenkins plan.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, we are here today fighting a fight that should not have been. We should not be debating whether to read somebody's lips or conjuring up an image of the Rockefellers against the Little Fellers. The issue before us now is more serious than that and deserves more than clever sound bites. This debate should be about investment, sound economic policy, and the long-term implications of the vote we are taking today, because the issue at stake is the economic future of America.

Some folks have asked me why I have changed on the capital gains issue. I have not changed, this proposal has changed.

The capital gains tax cut before us is not the kind of permanent well-thought-out proposal that would encourage long-term investment in productive assets.

In fact this is the wrong proposal, at the wrong time, and there is a better alternative—a long-term investment.

I know supporters of the 2-year, temporary capital gains cut have characterized this approach as the capital gains camel's way of getting its nose under the legislative tent.

We have all heard about the camel that was really a horse designed by a committee. This camel is really a race horse designed by a political compromise. The only problem is, this horse—or camel—does not run.

Instead, it limps its way along under the baggage of $21 billion in additional Federal deficits over 10 years.

Sometimes we seem to forget what the purpose of a reconciliation bill is supposed to be every year—deficit reduction.

This is the sixth year in a row that we have been told: Next year will be the year we really tackle deficit reduction. And for almost that long, we have been playing one version or another of "no new taxes."

Once again this year, we have a reconciliation bill full of nothing tougher than some "cats and dogs" user fees, moving the Postal Service and the Farm Credit Agency off budget, shifting funds from one fiscal year to another, new spending programs—and a $21 billion capital gains tax cut.

I have always believed, and I still believe, that deficits do matter.

And I become gravely concerned when I look at the testimony the Director of the Congressional Budget Office recently gave to the Budget Committee. When you look at the operating budget of the Government—when you take away the growing Social Security surpluses—the remaining, on-budget deficit for the next few years, in billions is: 206, 219, 227, 242, in fiscal year 1993 and on up to 268 in the year 2000. We see large—and still growing—deficits.

Those of us who believe there will be dire consequences from sustained, massive, deficit spending have been accused time and again of crying wolf by those who do not.

Of course, we all know what happened to the boy who cried wolf. It was only his timing that was off and, as soon as folks stopped listening, the wolf ate him.

We do not know how many years of deficits in the $140-billion range the economy can take—and we will not know until it is too late.

We may not hear the wolf scratching at the door—yet—but when I look at these numbers—206, 219, 227, 242, and on up to 260 and 268—I am pretty sure I see someone coming up the driveway with a fuzzy nose and a hungry look.

It is time we stop calling each other the tax and spend party on my side of the aisle, or the borrow and spend party on the other side. It's time we come together in a bipartisan spirit to initiate a sound, long-term policy of save and invest.

That is precisely what the IRA/deficit reduction alternative to the capital gains provision does: Increases national savings by reducing the deficit by $24.5 billion over 5 years and encourages personal savings by restoring expanded individual retirement accounts for much of the middle class.

Why do I, as a longtime supporter of a capital gains tax rate differential, oppose the capital gains cut now before Congress? Three reasons: First, This is the wrong proposal; second, this is the wrong time; and third, there is a better alternative.

First, a capital gains tax cut should be permanent, not temporary. It should be carefully drafted to promote capital formation, ensure market stability, and take a long-range perspective.

The argument for a capital gains differential is that it would spur long-term investment in productive assets and move resources away from current consumption and short-term, short-sighted alternatives. However, this capital gains proposal would only be in effect for 2 years, sending a clear signal that those owning capital assets should try to churn twice in the next 2 years to take a quick tax break.

I am aware that supporters say the 2-year window was intended, as a compromise, to get some capital gains change passed. The irony is that a 2-year, temporary tax cut undermines the very principles that underlie such a differential, in the first place. The very substance of the language, plus the uncertainty introduced by the fact that supporters and opponents will try to reopen this same debate next year, removes the very incentives and Tax Code stability needed to encourage long-term investment.

A 2-year window will cause a rush to sell; for many assets in many parts of the country, this glut will cause a buyer's market. The buyer, with the promise of law that he or she will face a steeper capital gains rate again after 1991, will further bid down prices. It won't do much good to sell the farm for an 8-percent tax break if these factors combine to force the selling price down 8 percent.

Second, this is the wrong time. This proposal at this time undermines budget negotiations for fiscal year 1991.

The current capital gains proposal gains about $9 billion in revenue for the Federal Treasury over the next 3 years, but loses a net $21 billion over 10 years. When we cut capital gains taxes, we should do so as part of a long-term, sustainable, deficit-reduction package that takes care of the revenue loss in those out-years.

The administration and the Congress—and I accept my ⅛₈th share of the blame—decided early on that this was the year of the "fudge-it," not the budget. But there is a lot of optimistic whispering that next year will produce the "Everybody-Bites-the-Bullet Budget." If that is the case—and it's long overdue—the administration's No. 1 tax priority should be saved for those negotiations, so that all sides bring their strongest deficit-reduction hand to the bargaining table.

Third, the proposed IRA/deficit reduction alternative is not only equitable tax policy, it is also responsible budget planning.

Passage of the IRA/deficit reduction alternative reduces the Federal deficit by $24.5 billion over 5 years, while the capital gains tax cut increases the deficit by $21 billion over 10 years.

If we must open up the Tax Code this year, then we should couple sustainable deficit reduction—equitably, through repeal of the 33 percent bubble—with a proinvestment tax benefit targeted with precision to the middle class—expanded individual retirement accounts.

America's ability to compete internationally and maintain our standard of living for ourselves, our children, and our grandchildren at home, are directly related to our national savings. Yet America's savings levels have hit historic lows in the late 1980's. There are two ways to increase savings: The Federal Government can reduce its deficit spending and individuals and businesses can defer consumption and save more. The IRA/deficit reduction alternative promotes both.

One study cited by LLOYD BENTSEN, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, has estimated that 80 percent of IRA contributions represent new savings. Another estimate is that IRA's added $138 billion to private liquid savings in the 1982 to 1986 period. The prosavings impetus of IRA's is further bolstered by the penalties that would attach to withdrawals for purposes other than retirement, home buying, or financing college.

In every introductory economics course, students are taught the equation "S=I," meaning savings equals investment. The IRA/deficit reduction alternative promotes both. By increasing the available pool of capital and reducing the deficit, it would reduce interest rates. The 2-year, temporary capital gains cut would do none of these things.

About 60 percent of the revenues raised through the IRA proposal would be put into a deficit reduction trust fund—in other words, read my lips: No new spending.

The main engine driving the deficit reduction in the IRA proposal is repealing the so-called 33 percent tax rate bubble. This would not raise the top marginal tax rate now in current law—which is 33 percent. What it would do is simply apply to single taxpayers earning more than $93,000 and joint filers earning more than $155,000, that same 33 percent marginal tax rate currently applied to taxpayers earning $45,000 and $75,000, respectively.

If we pass a proinvestment tax incentive this year, it makes sense that it be as broadly based as possible. About 7.4 million taxpayers, virtually all middle class, will become eligible for expanded IRA's. From 1982 to 1986, when IRA's were fully deductible to all taxpayers, about 20 percent of all IRA dollar contributions came from taxpayers with adjusted gross incomes [AGI's] of less than $25,000 and 83 percent came from taxpayers with AGI's of less than $75,000.

I do look forward to Congress passing a capital gains tax cut—a permanent and stable cut, next year, as part of a long-term economic strategy and comprehensive, bipartisan, budget.

□ 1040

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON].

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Jenkins-Archer position.

Mr. Chairman, I raise today in strong opposition to this amendment. Like many who oppose this package, I believe that the IRA provisions in this substitute are laudable. However, I also believe that if the accompanying tax increase is passed and a capital gains cut is defeated, it will hurt the very people that the supporters of this amendment would lead us to believe it helps.

Make no mistake about it, if a capital gains cut is not included in this reconciliation bill, not only will it be a missed opportunity to achieve a desperately needed boost in investment in small businesses and job creation, but also, it will be a blow to the little guy; the homeowner, the pension plan participant—the average American that we are all trying to help.

There is no argument that we all wish to help the low- to middle-income American, who so very often gets squeezed by Federal spending and taxes. No, the debate is over the best way—and the most realistic way—to look after the concerns of this part of America, while improving the climate for a strong national economy that is middle America's best ally.

Some of my friends on the other side of the aisle keep talking about how this new capital gains differential is nothing more than a tax break for the rich, that their alternative, this amendment, is a blow to justice for the little guy against the wealthy. They claim that by raising taxes, new money will come in to cut the deficit. Well, anybody who thinks that this new money—some $35 billion in new taxes—will actually be used toward deficit reduction, is not familiar with the history of what Congress does with new money—it spends it like a kid with a shinny new quarter.

Should this amendment pass, Congress would continue to spend—and, at the same time—investment in this country, small business startups, and job creation would smother under the burden of heavy taxes and disincentives to invest and take a chance at the American dream. Last, and most unfortunate, as the economy slows down, so will Federal revenues from a dwindling gross national product to tax. The result; the best tool against the budget deficit—a strong economy—is weakened and our budget woes continued.

But something else happens. Something much closer to home—to your constituents and mine. If we do not keep the capital gains tax cut, approved by the Ways and Means Committee, it will be the factory worker, the senior citizen on a fixed income—the little guy—that opponents of the cut spend so much time talking about, who gets the raw end of the deal. Here is how:

Most experts agree that the underlying cause of the stock market crash in 1987, was an unfavorable reaction to parts of the Tax Reform Act of 1986—which pushed the tax on capital gains as high as 33 percent. Some would say so what, who cares if all those rich guys investing in the stock market lose money?

Well, the "so what" is that the aggregate wealth of the stock market is not owned by the wealthiest part of the population that has been bashed around out here today. No, the vast majority of the wealth in the market—some 65 percent is institutionally owned—not by individuals. Of this 65 percent, nearly 40 percent is owned by pension plans all across America. Pension plans which are the safety net for millions of Americans when they retire.

In the last 2 years since the stock market crash, the market has reached new record heights. It is worth over $1 trillion. This raise has largely been the result of speculation that a preferential treatment of capital gains will be returned to the Tax Code in the near future. Accordingly, as the market has grown, so has the strength of these pension plans whose health directly effects the standard of living those reliant upon them can expect to enjoy in their retirement.

If we fail to adopt this cut, it is very possible that the market will slump badly; again, a slump which directly affects the viability of these plans. Consider this; if the market were to react negatively to a failure of this House to adopt this capital gains cut, and the market fell off just half of the 1987 crash, it would cost pension plans billions of dollars in funds to support their promises to elderly Americans. I do not have to tell you what happens next. You got it; many pensioners would receive scaled back benefits because of the losses.

So, it is very simple. Let us do the right thing here today:

If you want to vote to stifle investment and impair the health of the Nation's pension plans, among other evils, then vote for this amendment. If you want to do the responsible thing, the realistic thing, then vote to defeat this counterproductive tax increase disguised as a populist measure against the rich. The reality here is that a capital gains cut is as good for the economy as a whole as it is for the average American.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues, earlier my friend, the gentlewoman from California, stood up and said that she was proud to be a Democrat. I want the Members to know that I am proud to be a Republican today, but that has nothing to do with this debate. Let me set the record straight: The Republican Party did not take away the IRA deduction. The Republican Party did not take away income averaging. The Republican Party did not take away interest deductions. The Republican Party did not take away some of those middle-class benefits that we all enjoyed. Your policy on this is what I call yo-yo economics.

Mr. Chairman, here is what the real issue is today: The issue is whether or not we want to see this country's economic ills cured.

My colleagues on my right over here have one basic misunderstanding about economics. The Government does not create wealth in this country. Private enterprise creates wealth. The Government takes wealth away from people. Each time we try to create wealth in this body through tax increases, we lose in the economy.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman was saying before that the Republican Party did not do a lot of things. As I recall, the 1986 Tax Act was passed by a Democratic House, a Republican Senate, and signed by a Republican President.

Mr. ROBINSON. Reclaiming my time, I was a Democrat at that time, and I voted no on that tax bill, because it was wrong. If we would give our President the line-item-veto authority, he would not have to sign some of these miserable tax-and-spend bills into law.

I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on the capital gains tax reduction.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, this Congress has approved a favorable capital gains tax rate session after session after session. It is not something new.

Nearly every speaker here today who decried this capital gains proposal or the Jenkins plan has voted for capital gains at one time or another. The only difference now is they are asked to choose between it and the change in income tax rates.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is a bit ironic that the issue of capital gains will not even be given to us, the Members, to vote on. We will not even have a vote on capital gains, because the leadership is fashioning an alternative that says we can have IRA's instead of capital gains.

If we could have a straight vote on capital gains, I think it would pass by a very favorable margin. But as it is, they have offered the IRA as a substitute and I say to the Members that this alternative has been trotted out here by the leadership just as a means of derailing capital gains.

The IRA's are commendable. I was one of those who was an original sponsor of IRA's. They appropriately should be considered in another context. Although, I must say to the Members that the facts within the last 10 years have developed to show that in some respects there are as many questions about IRA's that ought to be raised. But I do support them as a good savings incentive.

Right now though, if we vote for IRA's, then we are going to be voting against capital gains.

I simply say to those Members who favor capital gains who think it is a very appropriate, legitimate, honorable way to go about raising capital to recognize that we have to vote against IRA's. Just measure up, vote against IRA's, not because you are against IRA's or even that you would not want to erase the bubble, but because you are for capital gains.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Members who are listening and not on the floor that when the time comes for them to vote that they vote no on that alternative, or else they will be voting against capital gains.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, let me at the outset suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that he does not keep his records very well. The items that he addressed in his colloquy were items that were in a bill that was passed by this House, sent over to the Senate, and the items he addressed were knocked out by the Senate, and by the way, if I remember correctly, there was a Republican President in the White House.

Mr. Chairman, the Bush-Jenkins-Archer proposal to temporarily cut the capital gains rate is bad tax policy and bad budget policy. First, it savages tax reform. It will create confusion and reinstate tax shelters for the wealthy. Second, it undermines the quest for stability in our tax system—stability that all Americans and all business leaders are pleading for. Finally, it showcases the administration's bankrupt budget policies.

The administration and its supporters know the validity of these objections—and yet, they persist in blind pursuit of a shallow political victory.

The President and his economic advisors have simply abandoned all their principles. The OMB Director and the Secretary of Treasury give speeches against "now-nowism" and the need for encouraging long-term investment, but they're actively supporting—pulling out all stops—for a proposal that epitomizes short-term, instant gratification—a proposal that rewards past investments. It may pick up a few dollars in the short run, but loses a bundle in the longer term.

By 1993, the capital gains cut will lose more than $5 billion a year. It will reduce revenues by more than $20 billion in the next decade. Yet, it is endorsed by Presidential advisors who criticize the voters for demanding instant gratification—how ludicrous, how hypocritical.

Unfortunately, this decision is part of a larger, sadder pattern. This administration's budget policies are nothing but blue smoke and mirrors and slide-by budgets. They insist on off-budget financing to elude the discipline of deficit reduction. And, now we have a temporary feel good revenue gimmick—a temporary revenue surge—at the expense of massive deficit increasese in 3 years. All of this in the face of a $130 billion deficit. Where is their sense of responsibility as stewards of the Government's finances?

The administration claims that it wants long-term economic growth. But it is really promoting a national fire sale. For the next 2 years, sellers will be rushing to market stocks, bonds, timber, and real estate so they can take the money and run before the tax cut window slams shut. Rather than stimulate the economy, this fire sale will depress prices and values in the stock market and in the real estate market, and will create enormous pressures to clear cut American timber during the next 2 years.

The administration claims this dynamic will create new jobs. Jobs for whom? The only job creation benefit from this capital gains cut will be for the tax shelter peddlers on Wall Street who were put out of work by the 1986 Tax Reform Act. I challenge advocates of this plan to show me where the other new jobs are to be found.

The administration's theory is faulty, but this isn't just a debate about theories. It is a discussion about people and who in our society will benefit from our choice today. Who will benefit from an IRA? Who will benefit from a preferential capital gains rate?

The choice we make today is about our priorities. It is a question of whether we want to reward the rich who need it the least, or help those who are trying to make it from paycheck to paycheck.

Do we really want to reward the west coast financial wizard who made an unsuccessful bid for United Airlines? If we pass the capital gains cut today, he will win by losing. His latest failed takeover attempt will yield a $90 million profit.

Now this investor is asked to pay tax on his windfall, but the Bush capital gains plan will give him a $7 million tax reduction on this one transaction alone. Let me repeat that, a $7 million tax reduction for this one individual. But of course, he is not alone. Several others involved in this same transaction will also get a capital gains tax cut that exceed $1 million each.

Contrast this multimillionaire and his $7 million tax cut with the young constituents in your districts who are straining to buy their first home. They're frustrated because mortgage interest rates are so high. Their problem is caused by our collective unwillingness—and particularly the unwillingness of the President—to responsibly confront the deficit. Allowing an IRA to help finance that first home is one way for us to address their needs and concerns.

Compare that multimillionaire with our middle-aged constituents who are desperately struggling with soaring college costs to educate their kids. They believe in the American dream and they know that higher education can be the key that opens the door to success. We can help them by allowing them to use an individual retirement account for college expenses.

And, finally, think of the thousands of middle-income wage earners who want to save for retirement and could use an IRA. They don't have $90 million to sock away. They are concerned about the future and want to prepare for it. They know that retirement won't be a golden age unless they act now to make it one. We should encourage their prudence by expanding IRAs.

Ultimately, we must decide who needs our help the most. I find the choice an easy one. The rich don't need our help. They've had 8 great years. They don't need any more tax relief.

But the people in our districts who want to buy a house—the people who are stretching to pay college costs—and the people throughout our Nation who want to prepare for a comfortable retirement could use some help and deserve a break.

These are the people I represent. And my colleagues, they are people who sent all of us to serve in this Congress. I am proud to fight for the interests of these middle-income taxpayers, and will proudly vote for the leadership amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] yields back 30 seconds.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I implore the House to stop this class warfare. I rise in strong support of the Jenkins-Archer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as one who has sponsored legislation to index gains to take into account the effects of inflation, I am particularly gratified that the Jenkins proposal provides for such indexation after 2 years, making this a permanent reduction in the capital gains tax, not a temporary one as many are suggesting.

As I have tried to make clear in recent months, without inflation protection investors end up paying a tax on gains that are illusory because of the effects of inflation. This amounts to an inflation tax. So despite what we have heard, the current system does not treat capital gains the same as ordinary income, it taxes capital gains punitively. The fact is that though all types of income are taxed at the same nominal rate, capital gains are now taxed at a higher real rate. Investors are thus being punished for risking their money on long-term investments.

Further, the current capital gains treatment actually promotes the leveraged buyouts and megamergers that have rocked Wall Street and upset so many of my colleagues. The rise in the capital gains rate in the Tax Reform Act has hurt equity values and has helped put an unhealthy emphasis on immediate income. Investors thus have less of an incentive to invest for the long term, and are more apt to load up on income-producing assets. I don't think a bias toward income was supposed to be built into a tax bill whose main goal was to level the playing field.

The report accompanying that Tax Reform Act states:

> The Congress believed that as a result of the Act's reduction of individual tax rates on such forms of capital income as business profits, interest, dividends, and short-term capital gains, the need to provide a reduced rate for net capital gains is eliminated. This will result in a tremendous amount of simplification for many taxpayers since their tax will no longer depend upon the characterization of income as ordinary or capital gain.

As we have seen, this last statement is untrue. Investors care a great deal how their income is characterized. And that is why we need to correct this bias against capital gains by supporting Jenkins-Archer. After 2 years, Jenkins-Archer would merely bring capital gains into line with other forms of income. In that respect, it is in keeping with the spirit of tax reform.

Mr. Chairman, I am also bothered by the quality of today's debate. Instead of debating a capital gains tax reduction on its economic merits, my colleagues on the other side of the aisle insist on making this an issue of class warfare, of rich versus poor. It appears that socialism is in retreat everywhere in the world but the House Chamber.

Reducing capital gains is not a one-way street. The benefits accrue also to those who may never realize a capital gain. For some it might mean a new job. For others it might mean a better job. Still for others it might mean better equipment and increased productivity, leading to higher wages. In short, the working man has just as much, maybe more, to gain from a reduction in the capital gains tax as the wealthy.

It is also especially galling to hear my colleague, Mr. GEPHARDT, who professes concern about U.S. competitiveness, oppose a proposal with such obvious benefits for our competitive position. For it is a simple economic proposition that if you lower the price of something people will buy more of it. Therefore, if you lower the price of investment, that is, the capital gains tax, people will buy more of it. And increasing investment will lead to higher productivity, the key to improving U.S. competitiveness. So while Mr. GEPHARDT will no doubt continue bashing Japan with his rhetoric, he will be bashing United States business with his vote.

Currently, of the 10 countries comprising the industrialized group—the United States, Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Sweden, and the United Kingdom—only Australia and the United Kingdom have a higher maximum long-term capital gains rate. However, both those countries have special provisions which mitigate the maximum rate, such as inflation protection. Of the six countries comprising the Pacific Basin group—Hong Kong, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, South Korea, and Taiwan—only Indonesia has a higher long-term rate, and that only by 2 percentage points. In fact, the other five Pacific Basin countries do not tax long-term gains at all. Indeed, once we reduce our rate to a maximum of 19.6 percent, we will still have a higher rate than all but the three countries I just mentioned.

The fact is that if those opposing the reduction in the capital gains tax were willing to give up their special interest and corporate welfare programs—such as Amtrak, the REA, the EDA, the LSC, and others—we could afford to finance both IRA deductions and a reduction in the capital gains tax.

Mr. Chairman, we have an opportunity today to raise some much-needed revenue and, more importantly, promote long-term investment. We must not be dissuaded from our task by the socialist, class warfare rhetoric of the other side. Reducing the capital gains tax is good for everybody. Please, let's do the right thing and support Jenkins-Archer.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Jenkins-Archer proposal.

Mr. Chairman, by our vote today to adopt President Bush's capital gains tax-cut package, we have a tremendous opportunity to help America's small businesses and family farms. Perhaps more than any other in our economy, these two sectors represent the financial backbone of America's heartland. It is fitting then, that we act quickly to ease the financial burdens facing the average small business and the family farm.

In general terms, a cut in the capital gains tax will help businesses overcome the toughest hurdle in starting up or expanding—that is, raising capital. Capital investment in startups, or to help small companies expand, is risky. These investments become more attractive, however, when Uncle Sam agrees to siphon off less of any profit margin. The fact is, small business represents the most productive sector in the American economy and is responsible for 70 percent of the new jobs started in America over the last 10 years. It's also a fact that the majority of capital for small businesses—72 percent in one study—comes from individual investors. We should keep this in mind as we act today.

Small businesses are hurt by a higher capital tax rate in even more immediate terms. Consider the business owner who, after years of successfully building up a business, wants to retire and enjoy the fruits of his or her labor. This used to be called an American success story. But can that person afford to sell the business since capital gains rates were raised a couple of years ago? How about the small businessman who wants to sell his plant and move to another State. He feels his health will improve in a better climate, but he risks losing too much at the higher capital tax rate to start up a new business in another part of the country.

How about a firm aggressive enough to export goods on the world market? What chance does that firm have against Japanese, West German, or British firms which sell the same product but operate under much lower capital gains rates? Under the present tax law, capital costs for American businesses are twice that of Japanese firms. No wonder Americans are investing so heavily in foreign businesses while the small business owners of America find it difficult to raise capital at all.

Does lowering the current rate mean only the rich will benefit? Not at all. In fact, that's the fallacy in this whole debate. When a business owner, after 20 or 30 years of nurturing the business and scraping by to stay afloat, decides to retire, should he be considered rich because he profits from the sale? When you remove the 30 years of inflationary gains from that sale, and when you consider that whatever is left must pay for years of retirement, is it fair for the Government to take one-third away? In 1985, nearly three-fourths of all tax returns with reported capital gains were from individuals with wage and salary income below $50,000.

Our family farmers would also benefit a great deal from a reduction in the capital gains tax rate. Take, for example, a Wisconsin livestock producer who sells 20 breeding cows this year at $600 per head. On the $12,000 taxable gain from this farmer's sale, he would owe $3,360 at the present 28-percent capital rate.

By cutting the rate to the proposed 19.6 percent, this same farmer would save over $1,000 in taxes. Thirty percent of the farmer's $12,000 taxable income would be excluded from taxes, leaving only $8,400 of income open for tax. At the new tax rate, this farmer would now have to pay only $2,352 in taxes, a savings of $1,008.

This same benefit holds true for a family farmer who started 30 years ago with the intent of farming until retirement, then selling the farm to pay for retirement. Not only will the rate cut reduce the amount of taxes he will pay on the sale of the farm, it will also make it easier to pass this farm from one generation of the family to the next, allowing new farmers a better opportunity to get started.

Mr. Chairman, please don't tell us this is a rich man's tax break when these examples clearly show that the greatest beneficiaries of this rate cut will be America's working class.

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, DC, September 26, 1989.

Hon. STEVE GUNDERSON,
Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN GUNDERSON: Since becoming the Administrator of the Small Business Administration four months ago, one of my top priorities has been the reinstatement of the capital gains differential. After last week's vote in the Ways and Means Committee, existing and potential small business owners across the country have good reason to be encouraged.

As you know, businesses in the United States appear to be faced with a higher cost of capital than our foreign competitors. A recent study by economists with the New York Federal Reserve Bank shows that American industry pays from 55 percent to as much as 90 percent more for their capital equipment, factories and research than either Japan or West Germany.

Most of our major trading partners provide some form of capital gains relief. Given America's high cost of capital, the real issue in this debate is not tax cuts for the wealthy, but ensuring that investors are willing to invest in small businesses—businesses which have created nearly two of every three new jobs over the past decade.

I believe it is important to emphasize that capital gains reduction affects not just stockholders, but also family farmers and senior citizens with retirement savings that are affected by a strong stock market.

Moreover, research commissioned by the SBA demonstrates that informal equity investors are a much larger financing factor for small businesses than are institutional venture capital firms. Most of these informal investors who would benefit from a lower capital gains rate are entrepreneurs themselves—individuals who recognize the potential for a new business and new jobs.

I have participated in White House working groups on this issue and have joined President Bush in making this a number one priority for small business.

As the debate moves to the House floor, I know that your strong leadership presents small businesses with their best chance for success. I hope that the SBA will be able to assist you on achieving this important objective.

The Office of Management and Budget informs me that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

SUSAN ENGELEITER,
Administrator.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], a respected member of our committee and the ranking member on the Budget Committee.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the recent debate over capital gains has tended to obscure the issue of economic benefits in favor of an argument over whether this is a fair tax. Fairness is always important in tax policy, but most taxpayers never paid a fair tax.

The central issue is the need for a capital gains differential. Our economy faces serious long-term problems—a low savings rate, inadequate investment and productivity—which need to be addressed in the near term. Capital gains can't do it all, but it can give us a leg up on solving these problems.

First, we need to look at savings. A majority of economists agree that raising the after tax return on personal savings—that is, lowering the capital gains rate—will induce more total savings. In contrast, the available evidence on IRA's indicates that these accounts lead to substantial shifting of savings to avoid taxes, but generate little new savings.

Since by all accounts, an IRA Program would cost much more than a capital gains differential, capital gains seems to be a much more efficient way to encourage more private savings.

Furthermore, the current capital gains tax now fully taxes gains which are attributable only to inflation. Under this regime tax liability can occur in cases where the actual value of a person's savings has declined. This confiscatory tax on savings is eliminated if capital gains are taxed at a lower rate or the basis is indexed as is provided in the Jenkins-Archer language.

Second, we need to consider investment. The current capital gains rate can add up to 33 percent to the cost of a business' investment capital. At a time when U.S. companies are faced with high interest rates and stiff international competition, it is inexcusable that the Federal Government is saddling them with the added burden of a high capital gains rate.

Lower capital costs caused by a reduced capital gains rate will have their most pronounced effect on the sectors which are on the forefront of technology development and job creation. Small, high risk startup companies rely exclusively on equity financing to provide seed investment capital. Studies show that the majority of this risk capital comes from individual investors whose investment decisions are most affected by capital gains rates. A lower capital gains rate will make more and cheaper risk capital available for these companies who are at the cutting edge of our economic and employment growth.

On the other hand, raising the tax rate to 33 percent to finance more IRA's will force investors to seek higher pretax rates of return. That means, in simple terms, that interest rates will rise. As far as I know, nobody here really wants to be responsible for higher interest rates.

Third, we must consider competitiveness. For our high-wage economy to compete against low-wage foreign competitors, it is imperative that we invest in the technology which will make our workers more productive. Currently however, the United States rates of investment per worker and productivity growth lag well behind most of our foreign competitors, including Germany and Japan.

It should come as no surprise that the competitors who are beating us in investment and productivity growth also have significantly lower capital gains rates than the United States. Germany, Taiwan, and Korea have zero percent capital gains rates. Japan's rate is much lower than ours and will remain so even if the reduction we are considering is adopted.

Lower overseas capital gains rates not only mean that foreigners can afford to invest more in their own economies, it also means that foreigners have an advantage when investing in the United States. Foreign investors who pay no capital gains tax can accept a rate of return which an American investor paying 33 percent capital gains tax finds unacceptable. A lower capital gains rate and a lower domestic cost of capital will reduce our dependence on foreigners to fund our investments.

Fourth, we must look at economic efficiency. A high capital gains rate prevents capital from flowing to where it can be used most efficiently. Investors who would otherwise move their money into higher returning assets, are locked in to their current assets because the higher returns cannot make up for the capital gains tax the investor must pay. With a capital gains differential in place, funds which would otherwise languish in lower returning, less efficient investments will be unlocked for use in more productive sectors.

Finally, we must get back to fairness. In this regard, I think the key questions are: First, who pays capital gains tax and thus will benefit from the creation of a differential and second, who will pay the most capital gains tax once a differential is implemented?

Capital gains are spread throughout income brackets with 74 percent of those claiming capital gains having ordinary incomes $50,000 and below. The Democrat tax increases—IRA amendment—gives its benefit to 84 percent having ordinary income over $50,000 annually. These powerful statistics destroy the class warfare argument of the tax increases. Most statistics which seek to prove the unfairness of a capital gains differential, include large, one time gains in income determinations. These statistics put a person earning $20,000 who realizes a once in a lifetime capital gain in the same category as a person earning hundreds of thousands of dollars. A more careful analysis shows that a differential benefits taxpayers at all income levels.

Higher income groups will, however, end up paying more capital gains tax when rates are lowered. The proposed rate cut will raise $9 billion dollars in increased tax revenues over the next 3 years. The vast majority of this money will come from high-income people.

High-income taxpayers have the most discretion over when and whether to realize capital gains. If rates are high, these individuals will choose either to defer their gains or to avoid paying capital gains altogether by passing on their assets at death. A lower capital gains rate raises revenue by unlocking these otherwise untaxed gains.

A capital gains differential is not a panacea for all of our economic ills. The Government must spend less; individuals still need to save more; companies must invest more, and workers produce more. Capital gains does, however, point us in the right direction and does so, at least in the near term, without raising the deficit. Our economy needs a lower capital gains rate. I urge that all Members support the Ways and Means Committee proposal.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Rostenkowski-Gephardt substitute. I think it is a sad commentary that we are even taking seriously the administration's capital gains tax proposal, and I think we all know what is happening here.

What we are seeing is testimony to the extraordinary influence of some individual contributors and some special interests, nothing more and nothing less.

I do not know of a single Member of this body who would publicly defend increasing the Federal deficit, but that is exactly what the capital gains tax cut will do. I do not know of a single Member who would publicly defend giving 60 percent of the benefits of a tax cut to the 365,000 wealthiest families in America, but that is what this capital gains tax cut will do.

What we should be doing is cutting the Federal deficit. But what we should also be doing is encouraging savings. What we should be doing is helping the middle class and encouraging new investment in education and housing, and that is what the IRA deficit reduction alternative will do.

I urge support for its passage.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I love this institution, this House of Representatives, and I have never been so disappointed in a debate as I am with the one we have had here today. It has degenerated into a debate about which taxpayers some Members like or do not like. Also, I do not remember a time when I voted differently than the chairman of this committee, and I believe in working these matters out in the committee, and again today I am the one who is going to vote with the Ways and Means Committee.

I do not like to hear arguments on the Tax Code based on who is affected. It should be on what is fair rather than who is involved. It should be fair no matter who is affected. Of course people who do not pay taxes are not going to be either benefited or lose by any amendment to the Tax Code. And the more someone pays in taxes, the more they are affected, either losing or gaining. Of course, that is basic.

In Iowa, most of the people who have investments, almost all that I know, farmers, small business people, whoever they may be, people who work in a factory and save a little each month or year, they have 15-year, 20-year, 30-year investments which they sell when they retire or need money for a special purpose. If they sell today, in 1989, something they bought in 1969, they pay a tax on the loss in purchasing power, because they pay the taxes on the inflated dollars they receive even though they may have less in purchasing power than when they bought it. That is simply not fair. We should do what is fair in the Tax Code, and the people I am talking about are at least 75 percent of the people who pay capital gains taxes. I am talking about the number of taxpayers and 75 percent of them are those kind of people, and it is being unfair to tax the inflation in their selling price in order to get at somebody some people do not like. That is the effect of some of the arguments that I have been hearing today.

The language in the bill reaches indexing in 2 years. That is where we should end up. That is where I have always wanted to go. We have had 40 percent exclusions, 50 percent, and 60 percent since I have been here, always on the excuse that it is not fair to tax inflation. That method treats those who hold investments for 20 years the same as if they had held them 1 year. It favors those who churn short-term investments in stocks and penalizes those who have long-term investments. The right way and fair way to keep from taxing inflation is to index the basis. We should do what is fair, do it once, get it over with, and after that, if we would get the Tax Code to where it is fair, then we could have a surtax up or down according to the amount of revenue that is needed.

But we are not going to help ourselves in the long run by arguing the Tax Code on the basis of who is benefited or who is not benefited. We should be arguing on the basis of what is fair, and do what is right, and what is right is to go to indexing on investments as fast as we can. So I am supporting the bill rather than the amendment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make it very clear that I agree with those who say that this issue is not a bipartisan issue. It is a human issue, and therefore I support the revised substitute bill that is before us.

Where is our compassion, our feeling for those people in this great Nation of ours who are in need, the hungry, the homeless, the sick who need health care, including hospitalization and have no insurance, or our children who are suffering today from malnutrition? Do we not think about them? Are they going to be helped through this kind of a tax proposal that is facing us?

I am sick and tired. For the last 8 years we have gone through this trickle down theory of helping the poor by feeding more to the rich.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to join my distinguished colleagues to speak in opposition to the Bush administration's proposal for a 30-percent cut in the capital gains tax. I have heard over and over again about how this tax cut would help stimulate the economy. However, in reality, a temporary capital gains cut might at best produce a one-time revenue gain. Where is our compassion for the needy of this country? Our children who want to go to college cannot because parents do not have the resources to finance their education. There are many in our society who are suffering; the hungry, the homeless and the infirmed. Yet, instead of providing needed assistance for the least among us, this Congress is considering a proposal to provide a further tax break for the rich. It is hypocritical for us to even assume that this reduction in the capital gains tax is going to create jobs for the unemployed or improve the position of the underemployed.

The trickle down theory of the Reagan administration has not worked. The numbers of people out of work in our Nation are played down. Those who have exhausted their unemployment benefits and have stopped looking for nonexisting jobs are no longer counted. Persons who reside in the inner cities, particularly blacks and hispanics, are really hard hit. Many factories have moved out of major cities like Chicago and into the suburbs. Transportation from the city to the suburbs can be very costly for low-income persons.

It has been shown before that changes in capital gains rates do not significantly affect the decisions of investors to cash in stocks and other assets. There is no assurance that such a tax break will ensure greater investments in productive activities. Instead, it is a tax giveaway to those income groups which need it the least. Instead of concentrating on those individuals who already hide their real income from the IRS, we should be trying to assist poor and middle-income Americans, who only a couple of months ago were denied an increase in the minimum wage. How can we justify denying an increase in the minimum wage and in the same breath say yes to giving the rich a tax break?

Remember the savings and loan bailout? How many jobs did this create? The Bush administration should stop trying to kid the American people. In the long run, our children and grandchildren will be paying for this temporary break. We do not need to enhance leveraged buyouts or corporate mergers, by giving more tax breaks to those whose only interest is to increase their own profits. Let us not forget the plight of airline employees who have made concessions under the false promise of job security. Lorenzo and Eastern Airlines are still in bankruptcy, yet he is making money by spinning off parts while workers are suffering.

We are faced with other more important crises such as child care and a shortage of affordable housing. As long as we are faced with these issues there is no way to justify giving the rich a break while sticking it to poor and middle-income Americans. Let's stop this destruction of American families through greed. Let's stop playing Santa Claus for the filthy rich and vote against this capital gains tax reduction. Let's now begin to support the truly needy.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I have always supported sound capital gains cuts, always for the length of time I have been in the Congress.

□ 1100

But I have got to oppose the Jenkins proposal today. I come from timber country. I represent a high-technology area in the State of Oregon, and I do not buy, with all due respect, the populist arguments of some of my Democratic colleagues when it comes to capital gains tax cuts.

Mr. Chairman, I have voted for a reduction of capital gains in 1978 over the opposition of a Ways and Means chairman who was the dean of my delegation. I have had a bill in the hopper to cut capital gains for 2 years.

But I oppose the Jenkins proposal because instead of doing what it should do, to help this Nation's economy, and that is to give an incentive for long-term productive investment in this economy, it proposes instead a 2-year window, a 2-year window within which people can massively sell off assets—and believe me they will—instead of putting bets down and investments down into the long-term future of this country's economy.

To call the Jenkins proposal a capital gains proposal in the truest sense of the word, which means to me long-term productive investment, is in my judgment an abuse of a brand name. It is an invitation to sell off assets.

You want to compete with the Japanese? Promote long-term investments. Do not call for a 2-year period in which you liquidate assets. As for timber, we hear so much about timber. Let me tell you what Jenkins will do on timber.

It will encourage the liquidation of private timber stands. The Jenkins plan will set up a 2-year window in which private timber owners will have an incentive because they have only 2 years to liquidate their private stands and this will come at a time when the national forests are losing supply for the market to produce timber for housing. This is the opposite of what we ought to achieve. We ought to be encouraging the promotion of private timber.

Finally, supporters say, "Listen, if you support capital gains, this is not so great," they have told me this, "this is imperfect, it is not long term, but vote for it because it is your only chance."

I say to them you wrote this proposal, you gave this as a gimmick. I am not voting for a bad bill just because that is the only one you brought before us.

Vote against the Jenkins proposal.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. SLATTERY. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today as a Member who favors a preferential tax rate for capital gains and have during my congressional career. But it must be permanent and it must be paid for. And the Bush-Jenkins proposal before us fails on both counts.

It is ridiculous for us to cut capital gains tax rates for 2 years, which will do nothing but stimulate a lot of churning on Wall Street while at the same time compounding and worsening the deficit problem over the long term.

This proposal will increase the deficit, it is going to increase interest rates in this country, it is going to reduce the national savings rate and, to add insult to injury, the big winners, ladies and gentlemen, are going to be the quick-buck artists on Wall Street who are making millions today through leveraged buyouts and all the merger mania that is going on in New York.

In closing, like all tax cuts, Mr. Chairman, it is easy to vote for the Bush-Jenkins proposal; it is a tax cut. It is bad fiscal policy, bad tax policy, and ladies and gentlemen, it should be defeated.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. JOHNSTON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I have not participated in debate on the floor of the House before but I have chosen this time because of the extreme importance of the Rostenkowski-Gephardt amendment.

I spent the last week agonizing about the choices offered here, and was undecided until last night. But after researching both proposals, I reached some conclusions.

I am philosophically in favor of a differential in rates, but the Bush plan is simply the wrong scheme at the wrong time.

We have got to start looking at the next decade and the next century instead of the next election. The fact is that the Bush capital gains plan will have a devastating effect on the budget deficit in 1993 and 1994. Over a 10-year period, it will have a $21 billion shortfall.

The Rostenkowski-Gephardt amendment will not only help families purchase a first home or send a child through college, but according to the Joint Committee on Taxation, it will also earmark over $25 billion for the deficit reduction trust fund.

Accordingly, I'm casting my vote for this amendment and I have no reservations about the political or fiscal consequences.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER].

Mr. RITTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of Jenkins-Archer and echo the comments of NEAL SMITH of Iowa, who said the indexing provisions in this bill alone are important enough for the Democrats as well as Republicans to support the measure.

Mr. Chairman, make no mistake about it, my colleagues, capital gains tax reduction is a winner for America. It provides seed corn for our jobs and for our future. Right now, the United States has the highest capital gain tax in the industrialized world and we've been beaten to the punch too often by foreign competition.

Senior citizens, small business people, average citizens selling assets—a business, a farm, a property—whose increase in value is packed with inflationary gains will benefit from the capital gains indexing in Jenkins-Archer.

The Democratic leadership just doesn't realize how many middle-class Americans benefit from capital gains and thus would benefit from this reduction.

The Democratic leadership doesn't talk about that.

Instead, they challenge the President and many of their own hardworking, knowledgeable Members with a jerry-rigged, last-minute appeal for class warfare. They don't talk about how capital gains revenue to the Government increased when rates have been reduced in the past.

They talk competitiveness, but won't reduce the cost of capital.

They rail against Japanese R&D intensive industries and the inroads they've made into our markets, but back down when something could be done about it.

On the other hand, I understand some of their other reservations.

I believe we could have crafted a better capital gains tax reduction—more like the President's original idea for a 15-percent rate or more like what Treasury Secretary Brady has been talking about to spur longer term investment.

But the political process is not always so easy and compromise comes into play. We are, in this case, hamstrung by static economic models being used for Gramm-Rudman number crunching where the numbers themselves are often far from real. We are forced not to recognize the growth-creating, revenue-increasing stimuli that all previous capital gains reductions have provided.

Nevertheless, Jenkins-Archer is a step in the right direction. It has the exceedingly important feature of indexing capital gains for inflation and making long-term investment that much more attractive to the American people.

As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], a Democrat, stated, it's fair because it doesn't force people to pay excessive taxes on gains which are the result of inflation. He implored his colleagues to do what's right and support the capital gains measure.

Indexing capital gains for inflation, I say to my colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle, is, in and of itself, solid, substantive rationale for supporting Jenkins-Archer.

Finally, many in this House believe as I do that America needs to look to the long term rather than the next quarterly report. America has too long underinvested in the plant and equipment, research and development, and the technologies of the future which lead to better jobs, higher living standards, and an enhanced quality of life. Jenkins-Archer should be viewed as an initial step in enhancing longer term thinking about our economy. It's a foot in the proverbial door of a rational, longer term savings and investment tax policy.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, the debate over the frills and whistles and bells on this reconciliation bill has lost track of the bill's only point: to reduce the deficit. With the straitjacket of Gramm-Rudman around us and the gun of sequestration at our heads, I want to ask one simple question: If we're trying to raise revenues, why are we handing out tax breaks?

I know tax breaks are popular. But a budget reconciliation bill shouldn't be popular.

Tax breaks are good politics, but they don't raise revenues. Neither a capital gains cut nor a renewed IRA will help us do that job.

Our deficit problem is so big that I don't know whether anyone has a grasp on it. It is making the functions of government close to impossible. The programs we have now—whether health, education, or environmental cleanup—haven't got the money to do what they should.

And that's just routine business. Two of the most expensive problems in our history are on the horizon—the savings and loan bailout and the Department of Energy nuclear waste cleanup.

There are proposals for new spending that we all want—for the drug war, for space exploration, for aid to Poland and Hungary, for acid rain.

There are natural disasters every year that we have to be prepared for—whether it's the drought of 1988, or the hurricane of 1989. That costs money too.

And now, for political advantage, we see proposals that are going to make it harder for us to meet every one of those needs.

The Jenkins-Archer proposal on capital gains is not a good one. It raises money now and helps us meet the Gramm-Rudman targets. But in the long run, it loses tens of billions more than it gains. In fiscal year 1990, 1991, and 1992, it raises $9 billion, as people rush to sell off assets before the rate jumps back up. But in the fiscal years 1993 and 1994, it will cost us almost $11 billion. And $5 billion or more every year after that.

That makes the long-term budget deficit problem even harder to solve. There's no reason to do it. It's a bad idea and I oppose it.

The Democratic leadership alternative doesn't impress me either. It is another tax break at a time when the Treasury can't afford it. We had a $160 billion deficit last year; we have a deficit that's well over $100 billion right now and getting worse; and it's just the wrong time to be making the deficit bigger.

Now, I like IRA's. But now is not the time to hand out another tax break. Now is not the time to drain the last few drops from the federal Treasury. Mr. Speaker, now is not the time.

I cannot accept either of these proposals. We cannot afford an easy political applause line. I will vote against the amendment under consideration, and I will vote against the bill.

A day doesn't go by around here without someone saying how important it is to reduce the budget deficit. Let's put our money where our mouth is. Let's defeat this bill, send it back to committee and do it right.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to the debate with particular interest because before I arrived in the House of Representatives I spent some time teaching at Harvard a course called "Tax Factors in Business Decisions."

One of the fundamental lessons of the course focused on the difference between pretax and aftertax rates of return. The debate in this body today is fundamentally between those who believe that in the real world investment decisions are made on the one hand on the basis of pretax returns and on the other hand on the basis of aftertax returns.

I must say those who chose the latter did a lot better in my course.

The fact is that reducing the rate of tax on capital gains does increase work, savings, and investment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, today we will cast one of the most important votes of the first session of the 101st Congress. It is not a vote to take lightly, and there are strong and respected Members of Congress on both sides—in fact, there are few Members I think more highly of than ED JENKINS.

Nevertheless, I think a reduction in the capital gains tax is wrong at this time. It is bad tax policy and is more likely to lead to increased economic and budget problems than it is to ease them as my friends on the other side of this issue claim. Ever since I came to Congress in 1982 I have learned more and more to accept the overriding need to gradually dispose of the deficit problem facing this Nation in a meaningful way. George Bush's budget this year avoids the problem, the congressional budget agreement avoids the problem, and a cut in the capital gains rate will only make the problem worse.

According to the Joint Tax Committee, and we all work off of Joint Committee numbers, the capital gains proposal will lose $5.7 billion in 1993, and $5.2 billion in 1994, after the effects of the speedup of asset sales are over. This is bad economic policy for the long run, and will give us a greater problem to deal with just as we are supposed to be balancing the budget. For an administration that is into long-term planning and not short-term "now-nowism", they have picked a peculiar example to set for the country. And for the special interest groups next year.

For the short term, the proposal raises revenue. But a danger exists. I suspect the assumption being made around here is that people will sell assets to get the temporary lower tax rate, and turn around and buy those same assets once again. However, if people sell stocks and bonds and no one is buying, you have a clut on the market leading to a market fall. In the same way, if people are selling real estate in a market like New England where sales are already sluggish, you may create a market dislocation leading to a fall in housing prices. So by no means is a vote for capital gains a safe vote in these terms.

Let me just conclude by saying that this is the wrong debate at the wrong time. Let us drop the capital gains proposal by voting for the Gephardt amendment, and keep the deficit from growing in the outyears.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TORRICELLI].

□ 1110

Mr. TORRICELLI. My Republican colleagues have proved their point. They can lower taxes, they can increase spending, they can plunge the Nation into debt, and they can win elections. I do not quarrel with your politics. My colleagues may win again today. However, just ask this question: What kind of people have we become in this institution? The Democratic alternative asks the people, on the one-half of 1 percent of the highest incomes in America pay the same tax rate as middle Americans, and my colleagues rise in indignation at a tax rise.

Our Nation is $3 trillion into debt, our schools are failing, we do not have homes for our children, and Members propose losing $20 billion in new revenue.

Mr. Chairman, we all understand that there is a capital crisis in America, but there are two differences: IRA's open to all Americans, and the Democratic alternative pays for it.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI].

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of a capital gains cut, but in opposition to the Jenkins amendment, and in support of the IRA alternative.

I have joined with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] in a letter stating our position and I submit it for the RECORD at this time.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 27, 1989.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Why do we, as supporters of a cut in the capital gains rate, intend to vote against the Jenkins amendment and for the alternative that will be offered on the floor?

1. Enacting the Jenkins amendment now will dramatically harm budget negotiations for fiscal 1991.

a. We will soon have to write a fiscal 1991 budget that requires up to $40 billion of real deficit reduction. A 1991 budget without revenue or a sequester would involve Draconian cuts in conventional defense and important domestic programs.

b. We support a capital gains cut but we adamantly believe it should be part of a broad, fair, honest deficit reduction package. To pass the Jenkins amendment now would sabotage budget negotiations for 1991, when major deficit cuts will be forced during the legislatively difficult election year session.

2. A capital gains cut should be permanent, not short-term.

a. To meet the competitive challenge from nations such as Japan, our country must have incentives for stable, long-term investment. That's why we support the concept of a permanent, broad-based capital gains cut. But the last thing we need is a capital gains rate that shoots downward and then upward during a 2-3 year cycle. This creates tax code instability and reinforces short-term speculation and short-term investment.

b. By including currently-held assets in a short window for a sharp capital gains cut, there is a danger of sending a dramatic "sell signal" that creates instability and uncertainty in financial markets. We do not predict another Black Monday; we do warn that it would be much wiser and less risky to pass a permanent cut in capital gains.

Finally, we regret the general tone of the debate. This should be a debate about capital formation, about strengthening the American economy, about dealing with the deficit so we don't pass on the cost to America's children. It should not be a debate that re-states the shallow and superficial platitudes of the 1988 campaign.

This is not a debate about "read my lips" or "soak the rich"; it is a debate about the economic future of America. Capital formation will not be achieved by short-term economics or short-term politics—by either party, for any reason.

Therefore, we support a capital gains cut, but it should be permanent, it should be carefully drafted, it should be part of a long-term economic strategy and a bipartisan budget agreement.

Sincerely,

CHARLES W. STENHOLM.
FRANK J. GUARINI.

Mr. Chairman, at one point, before there was a "gang of six" on the Ways and Means Committee, there was a "gang of five." I almost became the sixth. I decided against it. Let me explain why.

To meet the competitive challenge from nations such as Japan and European Community, our country needs incentives for stable, long-term investment policy.

That is why I support a permanent, broad-based cut in the capital gains rate.

What we do not need is speculation.

What we do not need is a short-term mentality.

What we do not need is more instability or more uncertainty in the Tax Code.

What we do not need is a capital gains rate that goes up and down every 2 years.

That's why I strongly oppose the Jenkins amendment.

To meet the competitive challenge, we need a budget that's honest and a fiscal policy that's rational. For fiscal 1991, we will have to cut the deficit by some $40 billion. A time for major tax considerations.

What we do need is a balanced, honest, bipartisan budget agreement.

What we do not need is budget gridlock and we have that today.

What we do not need is partisan politics and there is plenty in this House today.

What we do not need is the usual resort to gimmicks, games, and copouts.

What we do not need is repeat the shallow and superficial rhetoric of the 1988 campaign.

We desperately need a 1991 budget agreement, a key to our future success. Until we get one, there should be no capital gains cut.

We need stable financial markets. Real capital formation. Long-term investment.

What we do not need is a fire sale of assets triggered by a 2-year window.

What we do not need is a super short-term capital gains cut.

What we do not need is a giant sell signal that could drive down the value of assets.

Mr. Chairman, I support a permanent capital gains cut but not this one.

But the Jenkins amendment is harmful budget policy, bad tax policy, and dangerous financial policy.

I oppose the Jenkins amendment, and support the IRA alternative.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO].

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question of productivity. It is not a question of jobs. This is not a question of competition. This is a question of outright greed.

We have people starving in the streets. We have a problem in our school systems. We have the scourge of drugs going through this country. We have an infrastructure that is decaying. We have a national debt that is choking our country. What is our response? What is this administration's response? Give the wealthiest people in this country a $25,000 tax cut.

We cannot help poor people. We cannot help starving people. Why? Because we need the time and the ability to keep the rich richer. They have gotten richer since the 1981 tax cut, the big Kemp-Roth tax cut that would give them money to trickle down to the poorest. It never gets down, folks. History has proven trickle down never works. But we are doing it again, giving it to the rich, making them wealthier. Maybe, just maybe the next generation, or the generation after that will feel the trickle down.

This is outright disgusting greed. Do not maintain that it is any other way.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the proposed capital gains tax reduction. The Jenkins-Archer proposal is not the best possible proposal we could be discussing, but it certainly is an important step toward developing a tax policy that rewards savings and investment and encourages economic growth.

A permanent, deeper reduction would further these goals to an even greater extent—but the step we take today is a good start.

During this debate we have heard considerable rhetoric about tax cuts for the rich. Such appeals to the politics of envy and attempts to provoke some sort of class warfare are terribly unfortunate.

The fact is the capital gains tax reduction will help all Americans. History has shown that lowering the maximum rate of taxation on capital gains stimulates investment and creates new job opportunities for the working poor and the middle class.

Economic growth is an incoming tide that raises all boats.

But the capital gains reduction does more than boost our economy in an aggregate sense. The reduction will directly benefit individuals from all levels of society—

Consider the senior citizen who needs to sell off assets to finance retirement and adjust to life on a fixed income;

Consider the middle aged and older couples who sell their larger homes to move into a smaller house or condominium once their children have grown up;

Consider the young couple just starting a family who needs to sell their home and reinvest in a larger one; and

Consider the middle class couple who needs to sell stocks and bonds to send their children to college.

A capital gains cut is good for all of these people. It is good for the real estate industry; it is good for the construction industry; it is good for the financial community and most of all it is good for the small businessman struggling to get a new business off the ground.

In economics 101 we learned a basic tenet of economic common sense: When you tax something you get less of it. When you pare down the bureaucracy and cut taxes you get more. A capital gains tax cut reduces taxes on productivity, investment and savings. It is sound economic policy.

There is also a larger question we must come to terms with. Throughout this intense discussion I have been puzzled by a major inconsistency in the argument of those who oppose the capital gains tax reduction. We have heard countless eloquent speeches on the issue of fairness—that a capital gains tax reduction is unfair.

Yet many of the same Members who have argued that point have, it seems to me, missed the point on another critical issue facing this Congress—that of repealing the badly flawed Catastrophic Health Care Act—which imposes an incredibly unfair tax increase on our senior citizens.

I have to ask how a capital gains tax reduction that benefits all Americans can be considered unfair, while a catastrophic surtax that singles out one group of citizens is considered to be fair.

I ask my colleagues to consider these issues and take advantage of the opportunities presented to us in the reconciliation bill. I urge my colleagues to join me in casting two very important votes for fairness.

Today we must support the Jenkins-Archer proposal to reduce the capital gains tax—and next week we must support the Donnelly amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Health Care Act.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Jenkins capital gains provision as contained in the Ways and Means bill, and in opposition to the Gephardt-Rostenkowski amendment, which would mean higher taxes for retired people, homeowners, family farmers, and many other average Americans. Close analysis indicated that 74 percent of the taxpayers who show a capital gain on their tax returns have total incomes of under $50,000. When looking at the results of lower capital gains tax rates that came into being at the beginning of the Reagan administration, one can't help but conclude that these lowered rates are one of the reasons we are now enjoying the longest peacetime economic expansion in U.S. history. In my judgment, we should not only be lowering the capital gains rate in the short-term, but also legislating laws that would encourage more long-term investing by making this reduction permanent instead of for just 2 years. A high capital gains tax rate negatively affects our Nation's ability to save. It inhibits capital formation and thereby leaves the private sector with less capital with which to build new plants, and purchase new equipment. Without the ability to pursue such opportunities for expansion the potential for new employment opportunities likewise suffers.

I have heard Members state that this reduction in the capital gains tax rate will flood the market with assets sold by people wanting to take advantage of this short-lived tax break. My response to such comments is why limit this change to 2 years. After all, hasn't it been the erratic and inconsistent behavior of Congress in changing the Tax Code so many times, that has left the American public dangling at the end of an economic yo-yo. We need to approach tax legislation and economic policy on a more consistent and permanent basis, so that the private sector and individual taxpayer can plan their respective financial futures with the assurance that an action they take today won't be overturned by an action that Congress might take tomorrow. Speaking of consistency, the majority leadership has now proposed universally restoring individual retirement accounts [IRAs] to the Tax Code. In 1986 it was that same leadership that called for limitations being placed on their purchase. Now they have resurrected IRAs and made them part of this amendment not because they necessarily feel they made a mistake in 1986 in restricting IRAs, but because they view them as a popular vehicle to gather votes for their alternative proposal. Personally, I support restoring IRAs for all, and feel they shouldn't have been cut back in the first place and I only wish that we could have both the full restoration of IRAs and the lowering of the capital gains tax contained in this bill. But unfortunately, if one was to vote in support of bringing back the universal IRA, he would at the same time have to support the provisions contained in the Gephardt-Rostenkowski amendment calling for an increase in the personal income tax, and I do not believe such a vote would be in the best interests of the American people.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MCCRERY].

Mr. MCCRERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Jenkins/Archer capital gains proposal as contained in the reconciliation bill.

In Louisiana, what we need most is jobs. And the Capital gains proposal before us today will help us in Louisiana to create those jobs. The Jenkins/Archer capital gains proposal is good, smart tax policy for the United States, and will be an important tool for the creation of jobs in Louisiana.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, this has been an interesting debate, but it is unfortunate that we have seen this "us versus them" mentality emanating from my friends on the other side of the aisle.

During the debate we have been running to talk of the Presidents and would-be Presidents. My friend from California, Mr. THOMAS, talked about Alexander Hamilton, President Lincoln. Some talked about President Johnson, Senator Goldwater, who was attempting to be President. Several other people have been talking about, on this historic account, but I cannot help but think of George McGovern in 1972, when he said he wanted a $1,000 tax for everyone who earned more than $30,000, and figured he had a real winner, because 65 percent of the American people earned under $30,000 a year. Therefore, he thought he would have all their support.

What happened? He obviously lost the election, found he did not have their support, because a major percentage of those 65 percent wanted to be making over $30,000.

We found from talking to many constituents, who will not benefit immediately, that they do not want to preempt the opportunity because they want to have this opportunity. I believe it is important that we support this differential, and I urge my colleagues to join in support of the Jenkins amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the Gephardt amendment will undermine the most important economic reform since the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981. If enacted, the Gephardt amendment will result in higher taxes, lower productivity, reduced competitiveness, and a lower standard of living for all Americans.

A reduction in the capital gains tax rate is needed to stimulate long-term capital investment and job creation. The most critical aspect of the capital gains reform package is the indexation of gains to inflation. Inflation results in a significant overtaxation of long-term investments.

Under current law, a taxpayer with an investment held for 10 years, with a nominal gain of 50 percent and an inflation rate of 4 percent, would pay an effective tax rate of 1,049 percent. The Gephardt amendment would do nothing to alleviate long-term investors from this confiscatory taxation. Instead, it would add an additional kick in the stomach—an increase in the top marginal rate from 28 to 33 percent.

Even worse, the Gephardt tax increase will achieve nothing in terms of deficit reduction. Instead, the revenues that would be raised will serve simply as camouflage for the fictitious deficit reduction numbers contained in this budget reconciliation bill. If my colleagues on the other side seriously intended to use the $24 billion that would supposedly be raised by this amendment for deficit reduction, then the amendment would contain provisions to lower, by $24 billion, the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction targets for the next 3 fiscal years.

It is obvious, Mr. Chairman, that by raising taxes, the deficit would not decrease. It would only result in an increase in Federal spending up to the Gramm-Rudman targets. This tax increase could be disasterous to our economy and will make our goal of a balanced Federal budget significantly more difficult to attain.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, as I listen to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle debate the merits of their IRA-tax increase proposal, I am somewhat taken back by the argument that expanding IRA's will somehow provide a private savings incentive. I share this view and, in fact, voted against the Tax Reform Act of 1986 because of its disincentives for savings. But the debate leads me to question the sincerity of the arguments made in defense of the Gephardt amendment.

For example, the following quotes are contained in the report on the Tax Reform Act prepared by the majority staff: "Congress determined that, since 1981, the expanded availability of IRA's had no discernible impact on the level of aggregate personal savings." It went on to say: "Congress believed that those taxpayers for whom IRA utilization was the largest—that is, higher income taxpayers—would generally have saved without regard to the tax incentives."

This leads me to ask: Should the Gephardt amendment be adopted, how long will it be before the Ways and Means Committee discovers that Congress can pick up a quick $7 billion by repealing these IRA provisions. How much longer are we going to treat the savings of working Americans as a yo-yo to satisfy the reckless budgetary whims of Congress.

If proponents of the Gephardt amendment were serious about encouraging private savings and helping middle-income Americans, then they would fashion an amendment that would repeal outright the restrictions on IRA deductions. And the amendment wouldn't discriminate against women who work either in the home or in lower paying jobs. Spouses working in the home should have the same individual retirement rights as those working outside the home. Yet, under this amendment, a nonworking spouse is not permitted a full $2,000 deduction for IRA contributions.

Mr. Chairman, the Gephardt amendment is a reckless and inane proposal that could do irreparable harm to our economy and to our deficit reduction efforts. It is bad fiscal policy, and I strongly urge opposition to this amendment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and I want to compliment him for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. Chairman, in examining the relative merits of the committee bill and the pending amendment, we must brush aside the myths and misconceptions and consider the facts. Let us act today not on the basis of prejudice, but on the basis of principle.

It is easy to assert that restoring a differential for capital gains would benefit the rich. But to do so requires overlooking the plain, simple facts.

It is a fact that in 1985 nearly three-quarters of all tax returns with capital gains were reported by taxpayers with wage and salary income below $50,000.

It is a fact that nearly half of all of those gains went to people with wage and salary income below $50,000.

No, Mr. Chairman, the committee bill does not provide a tax break for the rich.

Most of the revenue derived from this proposal will come from upper income taxpayers. Of the $2.4 billion to be raised in 1990, $2 billion will come from taxpayers with incomes above $100,000. In fact, taxpayers with incomes in excess of $200,000 will pay $1.5 billion.

No, Mr. Chairman, the committee bill does not provide a tax break for the rich. If my colleagues want to support a tax break for the rich, they will have to vote for the Democratic substitute.

The Ways and Means Committee's bill cuts taxes on capital gains for all taxpayers. The pending amendment provides a tax break for capital gains, too, but only for the wealthiest taxpayers. Mr. Chairman, today may very well be remembered as the day when the Democratic Party sold its soul to win a needlessly partisan skirmish.

Those who think this is a tax break for the rich should try explaining that to the fellow who bought a little capital stock when he was 25 and wants to sell it to put his kids through college.

The Ways and Means provisions aren't regressive. They raise revenues from upper income taxpayers and use them to fund progressive programs—for instance, expanding the earned income tax credit to assist child care, the low-income housing credit, employer provided tuition assistance, the targeted jobs tax credit and health insurance for the self-employed.

But, Mr. Chairman, this measure represents more than an opportunity to fund these programs, and it represents more than an opportunity to correct an inequity for middle-income taxpayers who can't afford to pay taxes on inflation. What we are really talking about today, above all else, is jobs.

United States capital costs are the highest in the industrial world and twice as high as in Japan. Does anyone really believe that having the highest level of long-term capital gains tax rates helps us compete with our trading partners, most of whom don't tax the long-term gains of private investors?

We can't compete with the lower labor costs of the developing countries, but we can compete on the basis of innovation and creativity. But developing innovation takes risk capital.

What kind of sense does it make to tell taxpayers that we are going to tax earnings from the safest investments at the same rate as earnings from newer, risky investments? We need to encourage taxpayers to commit their resources to the risky ventures—which may fail—the ventures that, when successful, create the jobs of the future.

We made a mistake in 1986. We decided to cut taxes for short-term speculators and corporate raiders—we nearly cut their taxes in half—and raise taxes for long-term investors. Is it any wonder that hostile takeovers seem to have taken the place of innovation as the most prominent characteristic of American free enterprise?

Each company uses a different mix of equity and debt to finance its assets. Younger companies rely more on investment capital to finance their equity, because they don't have the retained earnings that big businesses do. As a result, according to Coopers & Lybrand, companies formed since 1981 require $51,000 of investment capital for each job created.

At a time when the capital threshold is rising, we have raised taxes on capital investment. That simply doesn't make sense.

Here's what people outside the beltway have to say about taxing capital gains:

"This is extremely important for small companies," says Mitchell E. Kertzman, president of Computer Solutions, Inc., a Burlington, MA, software developer. A cut in capital gains, he adds, would produce "a very direct benefit to the startup of new companies."

Norton Garfinkle, a New York venture capitalist, says the proposed capital gains tax cut would prompt him to increase his investments in startups and small entrepreneurial companies. Under the existing tax structure, Garfinkle says, he maintains a large part of his assets in fixed income investments like bonds and Treasury bills "because the returns are attractive." But if a tax cut made projected returns from capital gains investments more attractive, he would invest more money in small companies, he says.

A tax cut would help small and mid-sized companies lure executives from large companies with promises of stock, says Michael Levinthal, partner in Mayfield Fund, a Menlo Park, CA, venture capital concern. With the current tax structure, executives leaving large firms want more current income to match what they are giving up, Levinthal says. As a result, young companies lately have had to rely on costly salaries to attract experienced managers, says Richard Allen, president of Photonics Corp., a Campbell, CA, maker of data communications equipment. "But if we can pay a significant part of their compensation through stock options, we can use the capital we save elsewhere," he says.

"You might as well go for the safer and more current return because you do have the time value of money," says Steven Gilbert, who heads Chemical Bank's $250 million-plus venture fund. "I am being penalized for being a long-term investor * * * we're hesitant to look at startup under the current tax system."

"There's no marginal incentive for startups," says David Marquist, a general partner at Technology Venture Investors, a Silicon Valley venture-capital firm, which funded Sun Microsystems and Microsoft in their earliest stages.

Mr. Chariman, it is no fund to be forced to choose between reasonable taxes on capital gains and individual retirement accounts. My record on retirement income policy is clear; I don't take a back seat to anyone when it comes to supporting IRA's.

But these proposals aren't mutually exclusive. There is no good reason why we should have to choose between the two. The House Democratic leadership has decided to require Members to choose one over the other. It might be a lot easier to vote for IRA's, but with such a strong level of support for IRA's within the leadership, I have no doubt that we will get a vote on IRA's on another day. I have no reason to believe that we will have another chance to vote for a capital gains tax cut. As much as I would like to vote for IRA's, I am going to vote for jobs, while I have the chance, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOAGLAND].

Mr. HOAGLAND. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the other things that have been said in favor of the Rostenkowski-Gephardt alternative today, we have a chance to especially help the majority of Americans, to help working and middle class Americans. We can help them today by restoring the deduction for IRA's, and to help families save for their retirement, realize a dream of homeownership and of sending their kids to college.

Now, all of this, and we can help reduce the budget deficit at the same time. Now, in reducing the deficit, we are paying for deduction which the Archer proposal does not do. The Archer proposal merely results in every more revenue loss, and only worsening our country's budgetary insanity.

People in Nebraska pride ourselves on common sense. I was elected to reflect that common sense. The Rostenkowski-Gephardt plan makes common sense. So let Members vote for it, and we as a country will realize real capital gains by helping our families realize their dream.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EARLY].

Mr. EARLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN].

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Jenkins legislation for one reason, and one reason alone. I think this is the best opportunity to lower the cost of capital in America.

Who is having problems getting capital right now? It is small business. If you lower the cost of capital for the small business people, then they can put our citizens to work.

If our citizens are not working, if they do not have a good job, they are not going to be in a position to afford an IRA. Jobs have to come first. That is No. 1.

Also I wanted to mention, we heard talk on the floor that if we support the Jenkins legislation, we will have clearcutting of our forests. Environmentalists are not for clearcutting the forests and the environmentalists are not outside today opposing the Jenkins legislation. In fact, the environmental community is supporting what is in the Jenkins legislation that would help woodland owners write off their expenses.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I remind my colleagues that I am new here, but I have been listening to this debate for about an hour and a half, and I really cannot believe what I hear. At a time when our seniors are crying for a catastrophic health care program that really helps them, at a time when we have so much that we need to do in this country, at a time when we have so much in deficit in this country, what are we doing? We are talking about giving a further tax break to the rich.

It is absolutely unbelievable that the American people send us here and we do this. What do we do? We do not take care of the middle class, we do not take care of the poorest who need our help, but again the wealthy, the country club set, the very, very rich are the ones we help again and again.

Today there is a poll in the Wall Street Journal which says that even among Republicans they prefer the IRA proposal over capital gains. Eleven percent of independents prefer IRA over capital gains, and of the American people an 11-percent majority propose it.

Mr. Chairman, the American public is watching us. Are we going to help the wealthy, or are we going to help our constituents?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Rostenkowski-Gephardt proposal.

Mr. Chairman, I am a Southern Democrat who is concerned about our Nation's chronic deficit and our low rate of savings. I feel that the more responsible way to begin solving these twin problems is to strengthen IRA's and to eliminate the bubble problem that was left over from tax reform in 1986.

The Jenkins capital gains plan is certainly popular with a host of Washington special interest groups. But that doesn't mean it's good economic policy.

I have voted with the Bush administration on many issues, but on this one they are against the interests of the average middle-class American. I liked the original Bush administration capital gains proposal and the Rostenkowski compromise, but the Jenkins plan will needlessly increase the deficit, cause a sell-off in the markets, reward short-term traders who are not investing for the future, and offer little chance for the average citizen to gain any benefit.

The better policy is to encourage all Americans to save more money and to restore the progressivity of the marginal rate of the U.S. Tax Code.

In today's Washington Post, the columnist Charles Krauthammer frames the issue very well:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 28, 1989]

STEALING FROM THE FUTURE

(By Charles Krauthammer)

Budget czar Richard Darman has been waxing eloquent lately on the subject of "now-now-ism." Now-now-ism, explains Darman, is a "shorthand label for our collective shortsightedness, our obsession with the here and now, our reluctance adequately to address the future." It afflicts not just business and culture, argues Darman, but government too. The result? We are "engaged in a massive backward Robin Hood transaction—robbing the future to give to the present."

Darman is, as usual, right. But the administration for which he is the chief economic thinker is offering the American people what may be the most egregious now-now budget trick of the decade: the two-year capital gains tax cut. The administration, to be fair, wants a permanent cut, but in its uncompromising pursuit of compromise, is foursquare behind a compromise plan that would cut capital gains taxes to 19.6 percent through 1991, then, in 1992, return them to 28 percent, with gains now indexed to inflation.

A two-year capital gains cut is nothing more than a quick-buck device to raise cash for the Treasury. Everyone agrees that during these two years the Treasury will take in a few billion more dollars in taxes, as people prematurely sell stock and bonds and real estate in order to benefit from the temporarily lower rate. And what happens after those two years? Tax revenues will, of course, decline. Since so many capital gains will have been prematurely cashed in, they won't be around in the 1990s to provide tax revenues. As Robert S. McIntyre wrote in The New Republic, "It is exactly like offering people 30 percent off next year's taxes, provided they pay in advance, then claiming you've found a great new revenue source."

It is hard to imagine a purer example of stealing from the future to pay for the present. The purpose of the quick fix is to reach, artificially, the Gramm-Rudman deficit target for 1990 and 1991 without having to do anything real, such as cutting spending or raising taxes.

Democrats have turned the issue into an us/them, rich/poor class war. The rich do benefit vastly more from a capital gains tax cut than everyone else. But if, as the capital gains fundamentalists claim, this tax cut would increase savings and productivity, it would certainly be worth it. If while lifting all boats a few yachts get lifted too, so what?

The problem with the fundamentalists' claim is that it does not hold up. It is contradicted by a 1985 Congressional Budget Office study of the last round of capital gains cuts. And by Herbert Stein, former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under presidents Nixon and Ford, who says flatly that we don't know whether such a cut will increase savings. The question is simply unanswered.

Moreover, says Stein, the claim that cutting capital gains will stimulate "risk-taking" investment is an odd one. Why, after all, should government substitute for the market in telling investors what kind of risks to run? "What's so great about risk taking, after all?" he asks. "A good tax system would neither prefer nor penalize risk taking." If you believe in the market, let the market decide.

The best tax code is one that is neutral, that best imitates a world in which there were no taxes at all. It allows the investor to make his decision based on market factors, rather than on Washington's political preferences. By artificially lowering the tax on one kind of income, the investors' decision-making is skewed. And, if you believe in a free market, the more skewed are investors' decisions, the more inefficient is the market, the worse off everyone is in the long run.

We all know what will happen with the capital gains loophole. The only industry it is sure to rebuild is the tax-shelter industry. The cut invites economically pointless schemes, like investing in see-through office towers, for turning present income (high tax) into capital gains (low tax).

A preferential tax on one kind of income corrupts the free market. But it is even more corrupting to the political system. It opens the door to the kinds of special interest tax advantages that were largely swept away by the tax reform of 1986. The current capital gains tax proposal, for example, will treat all sales of timber as capital gains. Timber—but not, say, medicines or motor scooters. Why is the sale of timber a capital gain and thus a preferentially treated transaction? Because Congress says so. And why does Congress say so? Because the key congressmen needed to get the capital gains cut passed are timber-state Democrats (mostly from the South).

The capital gains tax cut is but an opening wedge. It invites corruption and inefficiencies in future tax writing that will only get worse. That is because the general good—lower rates for everyone and no loopholes for special interests—is no match for the determined efforts of well-funded special interests to promote their own good.

The principle that underlay the tax reform of 1986 was that the best tax code is that which gets the government off the backs of the people and out of the minds of investors. Once that principle is undermined, there is no stopping the loophole writers. The capital gains plan will kill tax reform. Free marketeers, as Republicans claim to be, should be stopping the crime, not abetting it.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LIPINSKI].

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Rostenkowski-Gephardt amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this morning's headlines were quite revealing. They were revealing not only by what they reported but by what they did not report. On the front page there was no mention of financial aid for education, there was no news about housing the homeless and no news about providing health care for the uninsured. But there was a big story concerning the Sony Corporation of Japan and how it was offering $3 billion in cash to purchase columbia Pictures Entertainment, Inc. The papers reported that because of this possible buy out, the Columbia stock jumped about 25 percent in one day.

I believe it is interesting to analyze this financial news in light of the proposals to cut the capital gains rate. If approved, the sale would be the largest Japanese acquisition ever made in the United States. Future profits from Columbia's entertainment activities would go to Sony Corporation of Japan. And the shareholders of Columbia Pictures would realize a large profit on the sale of their stocks.

I must admit that I do not consider this good news, or in the interest of the United States. But Sony of Japan is allowed to make offers to the directors of Columbia, and the shareholders are allowed to sell their stock. However, I do not understand how the President of the United States and his colleagues in Congress can support a cut in the capital gains rate that would just encourage more buyouts such as this. This buyout will not increase our national savings. It will not provide money for education, at least not education for Americans. And it will not put money into small businesses. Providing a capital gains rate cut will only guarantee large profits for wealthy stockholders. It makes no other guarantees.

The President and congressional supporters of a cut in the capital gains rate say that a cut is necessary to increase savings and reduce the Federal deficit. They argue that cutting the rate will bring more money into the Federal treasury and will encourage investors to provide money for new businesses. But the only guarantee this proposal really makes is to relieve the very wealthy of paying their fair share of taxes. If their goal is to spur investment in new businesses, why wouldn't they give special tax treatment only to transactions involving new stocks and new companies. Under the current proposal the owner of stock in a new innovative business is treated no differently for capital gains purposes from the owner of stock in GM. But investing in the new company does provide funds for new jobs and new opportunities. Investing in circulating shares of GM does not build American capital.

The capital gains cut is just another attempt to reward the wealthy on the middle class' tab. Over the past decade, Federal taxes on the richest 1 percent of the population have been slashed by 25 percent, due in large part to capital gains tax cuts enacted in 1978 and 1981. Meanwhile taxes are up on 95 percent of all families. This shift in the tax burden away from the rich and onto almost everyone else failed miserably to increase savings and created a huge budget deficit. Under Reagan and now Bush we are sending a message to the American people that the way to keep America on the road to economic prosperity is to trust the rich's economic sense, for they will know where to invest their money if we allow them to keep all the profits. Well, that approach has given us the lowest savings rate in the industrial world. Their common sense has turned us into the largest debtor nation in the world.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is high time to avoid the rich's economic sense and pay attention to the middle class' common sense. While one group is easily sending American assets to Japan, the other is struggling to send their children to school. There is a better way than cutting the capital gains tax to achieving what we all say we need to achieve. If our goal is more savings and a smaller deficit today and in the future than we should follow the lead of majority leader GEPHARDT and Senator BENTSEN. Their proposal gives the rewards to those Americans who have been bearing too much of the burden for too long.

The first thing the Democratic tax alternative would do is strike the misdirected and unfair 30 percent cut in capital gains taxes. Second it would expand the availability of Individual Retirement Accounts. I agree with the majority leader that the best way to make savings more attractive is to make them less expensive and more available, the Democratic alternative does this. The other way to increase savings is to reduce the deficit. The Democratic alternative does this considerably more than the committee-reported bill does.

Most Americans cannot comprehend a $3 billion cash buyout of a company. Most Americans are not aware that cutting the rate at which capital gains are taxed will encourage further such buyouts. What they do understand though is that money is too expensive too borrow to send their children to school, to buy a home or to start their own business. Now they are looking to Members of Congress for help. They are not looking for a tax cut that turns assets into gold mines, just a chance to have their hard earned dollars provide for their dreams. The ability to use IRA's for home purchases and college education fosters the middle American dream.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic alternative which promotes fairness should be adopted for it builds on this American dream of home ownership and a college education. Our failure to adopt this proposal and instead to accept the tax cut for the wealthy puts a campaign promise over American's promise.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Rostenkowski amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Rostenkowski-Gephardt amendment. Some Members have attempted to make this a purely partisan debate. So have some editorial boards. I think that is a mistake. There is unquestionably partisanship in a great deal of what we debate, but in this instance, we are talking first and foremost about fairness.

This is not a question of what we can afford. Under Ronald Reagan, we got so used to creative bookkeeping and budgeting that we now can delude ourselves that we can afford anything. Under George Bush, the American people have been told that Government will buy them all manner of things—the B–2 bomber, flights to Mars, the superconducting super collider, and two kinds of intercontinental ballistic missiles. Even more astounding, the American people have been told that we can do all this without new revenues.

This is not a question, as I see it, of whether or not there should be a capital gains differential. The issue today is whether we should restore a capital gains differential at a time when more Americans than ever before are living below the poverty level.

The Rostenkowski-Gephardt substitute does a great many things in the name of fairness. The elimination of those quirks in the Internal Revenue Code which have allowed individuals with higher incomes to pay their taxes at lower marginal rates than those with lower incomes is a fair provision. The restoration of a deduction for individual retirement accounts is clearly a fair provision. The allowance of incentives for the purchase of a first home or for higher education are not only fair, they are desirable.

The desire to buy a home and the desire of parents to send their children to college are two of the most fundamental aspirations that exist in this country. They are a large part of the definition of the American dream. I cannot see what is divisive in this proposal.

Congress passed the 1986 Tax Reform Act in part because David Stockman and Ronald Reagan managed to convince the American people that they were going to get a simplification of the Tax Code. Just ask those small businesses that have struggled with all of the regulations written since the enactment of that bill if what they got was simplification. What the advocates of that bill said at the time was that we wanted to tax capital gains in the same way we treated income from other sources. The capital gains rate cut proposal now says that we no longer believe in that kind of consistency.

The issue here is whether a cut in the capital gains rate at this time is either fair or advisable—and whether we should monkey around with the Tax Code on a short-term basis as a way out of our budgetary mess. The rate cut provision is temporary. It is intended to last just long enough to get us to the 1992 elections. That is cynical and it is wrong.

I hope that the American people understand what a reduction in the capital gains rate really means. Because only a relative small percentage of the American people find themselves in a position to consider taking a capital gain, only a relatively small number will find themselves saving and investing the extra dollars we all want to see them saving and investing.

Make no mistake, the capital gains rate cut would stimulate the sale of capital assets. That is a far different proposition than saying that it would stimulate capital formation. In fact, in this era of leveraged buyouts, I wonder if it will not lead to an even more rapid turnover of profitable capital assets. In my own State of Texas, where we are struggling to rebuild after hard hits in the energy and real estate sectors, why would we want to flood the market with still more assets?

The leadership amendment is a good amendment and as tax policy it is both fair and responsible. It says that the revenue earned from the elimination of the most basic unfairness in the current Tax Code, the so-called bubble, will go directly to reduce the Federal budget deficit. If we really want to reduce that deficit and if we really want to bring down interest rates, this is the way to do it. I urge you to pass this amendment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, everybody in the country is saying that Congress has done nothing this year. I have watched the debate, and what is really funny is that Congress today will repeal everything we have done in the last 2 years.

The truth of the matter is that Gramm-Rudman has everybody hurting. We are robbing Peter to pay Paul. Nothing is working. I ask, "Why don't we listen to the American people? Why don't we cut the fat cats at the Pentagon and get on with our business?"

We should stop paying $120 billion a year to protect Western Europe and Japan's oil and then have them ship us Toyotas.

Think about it. We should stop changing economic policy every 6 months. Even Philadelphia attorneys cannot figure this out. It is bad enough that the American people cannot figure out their tax duplicate.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for the proposal of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], simply for this reason: I think it is the best one, and I think if we had listened to him in the last 5 years, we would be in better shape than we are today.

But Congress deserves this. Our economic policies are so misdirected that if we put them in a pile and threw them at the ground, they would probably miss.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Jenkins-Archer approach to the subject at hand, and I would like to associate myself with the outstanding statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. Chairman, I put before you a common scenario: A young farmer in the Midwest bought a modest acreage 15, 20, or even 30 years ago. Each season since that time, he's spent countless hours, from dawn to dusk, in the fields. He's invested much more than money; he's invested a lifetime in that soil. If he's lucky, he will realize a confortable but modest income. He's not considered wealthy by anyone's standards.

Now, he's getting on in years, and he wants to reap the benefits of those many years of sweat and labor. He wants to sell the farm and settle into retirement. His many years of tending the land should afford him a small measure of comfort; his land was also his investment for this retirement. Imagine his surprise when he discovers that because of inflation, his land has increased tremendously in value. He cannot afford to retire after paying the capital gains taxes from the sale.

Farmers are not alone in this situation. The many small businesses that populate the Main Streets across this country are run by folks who are not rich, but who have worked tirelessly over many, many years to carve out a comfortable living for themselves and their families. Again, their businesses are their retirement investments. When it comes time to sell the business and retire, however, the capital gains tax hits hard.

Mr. Chairman, we're trying to help folks plan for retirement. These folks are not rich. These folks are not wealthy investors who wheel and deal on Wall Street. These folks are solid, middle-class Americans who have worked to build a small nest egg over many years. But we're not helping them if we tax the inflated value of their land and their businesses. We're not helping them if we allow the capital gains tax to chip away at the gain they realize from the fruits of their labor. I urge all of my colleagues to support the Jenkins-Archer capital gains proposal. Support the middle class.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ROTH].

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Texas, for yielding time to me, and I rise in strong support of the Jenkins-Archer approach. This is the approach the American people want and the approach the American people need if we are going to be competitive in the world.

Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that the Democrat leadership in this House is forcing us to choose between cutting taxes and restoring IRA's. For the sake of the American people and our country's future, we should be doing both.

That's what this debate is really about here today. Those of us who believe that the American economy must be able to grow and compete are fighting for a tax cut that will directly benefit millions of American families, farmers, small business people and investors. Our proposal for lower taxes will create new jobs, allow our industry to compete in world markets and help every American prepare for a more comfortable retirement. How can anyone argue against our goals?

The simple fact is, our economic future depends on savings and investment. Personal savings not only proivde for every family's future, but also provide an essential pool of capital for our economy. Similarly, capital investment is essential to economic growth. Without savings and investment, the great engine of the American economy is starved for the financial fuel it needs.

The need for greater savings and investment is painfully clear. Our savings rate is now 5.3 percent of GNP. Look at two of our biggest competitors: Germany and Japan. Germany's savings rate is 10 percent, twice ours. And Japan's is 18.6 percent, more than three times ours. This difference is crucial. A higher savings rate translates into greater financial resources and a lower cost of capital. In Japan, for example, capital costs half of what it costs here. This gives Japanese companies a great advantage in financing their growth and undercutting Americans in world markets. And if you want to find the reason why Japanese are buying up American assets, look directly to the Japanese savings rate which is fueling those purchases.

A capital gains cut would benefit millions of Americans. It would put $9.4 billion back into the economy in 2 years; 10 to 15 percent of all taxpayers would benefit in the first year alone. That's up to 14 million taxpayers. It the cut were made permanent, half of all taxpayers would benefit eventually, when they sell their house, their farm, land or other assets.

A capital gains cut is especially important to senior citizens. One senior in five would get a tax cut in the first year, giving them more for their retirement years. What better step could we take for the 634,000 seniors in my State of Wisconsin and the millions of seniors in other States?

Farmers would be helped as well. In Wisconsin, for example, we have 82,000 farms, mostly owned by families. Their average income is $16,400, but they own $21 billion in assets. What better way to help our farmers than to allow them to keep more of the proceeds from sale of land, livestock or other assets?

We should be restoring the IRA as well. It made no sense to cut them back, and it was done only to raise new revenues to cover the stubborn refusal of the majority in Congress to restrain Federal spending.

Restoring the IRA—even partially, as has been proposed—would put $15 billion back into the savings accounts of American families. They would be better prepared for retirement, and the economy would have a larger pool for capital investment. Those of us who want a better life for our retirees and a stronger economy will keep fighting for IRA's for every American family.

At least let's cut taxes while we have the chance. This is what every American wants and needs. We have a great opportunity here today to do something positive for the American people and our country's future. Let's take that step and help our people.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HASTERT].

Mr. HASTERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Archer-Jenkins proposal.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I have long supported efforts to expand the use of IRA's and restore the full deductibility of contributions to them. It's good to see my colleagues on the other side of the aisle realize that more needs to be done to help older Americans supplement their Social Security checks with outside support.

The Democrat-sponsored amendment before us would help the next generation of Americans dependent on Social Security checks for survival. But many seniors need help right now.

Sadly, on a party-line vote, the Democrat leadership killed an amendment in the Rules Committee that would have allowed working seniors, who may have never been able to afford to contribute to an IRA or a savings plan, to work for a modest income without the Government reducing their Social Security checks.

Incredibly, for every dollar a senior earns over $8,880, the Social Security earnings limit reduces Social Security benefits by 50 cents; it's like a 50-percent marginal tax.

A study prepared by the National Center for Policy Analysis and the Institute for Policy Innovation finds that as the earnings limit is raised, net Federal revenue increases due to the added work effort of seniors. My amendment would have set the earnings test at its revenue-maximizing point at $39,360, which would generate a net Federal revenue of $3.2 billion annually.

If the Democrat leadership truly wanted to help older Americans, they would have allowed the rest of the Congress an opportunity to raise the Social Security earnings limit. We should look at the amendment before us for what it really is: a bait-and-switch tactic to prevent a cut in the capital gains tax.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. COURTER].

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I believe we have a great opportunity today to say yes to the American people. We will not have to read people's lips anymore after this vote; we will be able to watch their vote.

We can vote yes on jobs, yes on moving ahead, yes on the people who need badly to have some capital so they can stay in business. We can vote for the small businessman. We can vote yes for the farmer. I think this is one of the most crucial votes that we will be facing this year.

In our States, hundreds of thousands of people are working now who were not working a few years ago. In the United States tens of millions of peole are working who were not working a few years ago.

Mr. Chairman, let us build on that record. Let us make sure that we have more investments. Let us make sure that we have more plant openings, not closings. Let us make sure that we give real opportunity to New Jersians and to people all over this country. Let us vote yes on this tax proposal that gives real growth for America.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to our beloved Republican leader of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, let me say to my colleagues that we are coming to the end of another classic battle over tax policy. For decades we have been arguing over the merits of capital gains taxes. The battles have been drawn on both political and philosophical lines.

This latest bout is no exception. Each side seeks to achieve both philosophical and political objectives.

We have fought over tax policy and tax politics. We have talked much of fairness, not only as it relates to the tax code, but also as it relates to the rules and procedures under which we are forced to legislate, particularly in this case.

The Jenkins-Archer proposal is indeed a tax reduction and a revenue raiser. It fits well with the economic and tax policies which have guided this country through 82 record months of growth, creating hundreds of thousands of new, productive, and lasting jobs in our Nation.

Ultimately, this is a struggle not between two policies but between two philosophies.

The Democratic leadership believes in redistributing this wealth; the bipartisan coalition believes in creating wealth.

The Democratic leadership subscribes to the rancid rhetoric of class warfare, and we have heard it time and time again today. The bipartisan coalition approach will give us more growth and more jobs and will help us all to be more competitive in an increasingly competitive world economy.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members on my side particularly to support our President's position on this one. His credibility and ours is on the line.

But more important for Members on both sides, including discerning Democrats in good number to reject this effort on the part of the Democratic leadership to sidetrack the proven philosophy of growth that has given us the longest period of sustained growth and prosperity that we have experienced since World War II.

That is the message today, Mr. Chairman.

At this point I will insert a letter from the President urging our support for the Jenkins-Archer proposal and against the majority leadership tax increase alternative:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 26, 1989.

Hon. ROBERT H. MICHEL,
Republican Leader, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB: The House of Representatives will soon have the opportunity to vote on legislation that will ensure continued economic prosperity and provide powerful incentives for investment and jobs.

I firmly believe a capital gains reduction is the right policy for all Americans. This is an opportunity to restore an incentive for saving and investment, to create new jobs and build a better future. All Americans will benefit.

Middle-income Americans who invest wisely, farmers selling off a piece of the family farm, the elderly widow who is living off the assets she and her husband struggled to accumulate, the couple who planned ahead and saved so their children could go to college, the small business entrepreneur who sank his savings in an idea he alone believed would work—these are not wealthy Americans. Over 70 percent of the taxpayers who report capital gains have other income less than $50,000.

In this intensely competitive world, almost all major industrial nations tax capital gains lightly or not at all. This is important to the American factory worker whose job may be on the line unless his company can bring down its capital costs.

Reestablishing a capital gains differential, which was part of our tax laws for over six decades, provides the needed incentives for those willing to take a risk on new products and research that are the result of American ingenuity.

Reducing the capital gains tax means Americans who have capital gains at some time in their lives—about half of our population—will be able to keep more of their savings to invest for the future.

You will be offered an alternative to the Jenkins-Archer capital gains proposal. No matter how you dress it up, that alternative is a tax increase—plain and simple. That's no alternative, and my response will be equally plain and simple—veto.

The timing for this vote is excellent. The Nation is enjoying its 82nd consecutive month of economic expansion—the longest in peacetime history. Support for a capital gains differential is a vote to continue that prosperity, and I ask for your support when the Jenkins-Archer proposal comes to a vote.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind all persons in the gallery that they are here as guests of the House, and that any manifestation of approval or disapproval of our proceedings is in violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I say to my colleagues that we should come to our senses. The Jenkins-Archer amendment is a fraud. Its basic premise that unearned income should be taxed at a lower rate than earned income is an insult to working people.

The notion that the way to help the poor and middle income people is to give a tax break to the rich has no credibility. When the history of this period is written, this idea will be seen as the epitome, the high water mark, of the spend-now-pay-later deficit orgy that characterized the 1980's.

Think about it. In the face of a $2.5 trillion deficit, the Jenkins-Archer amendment reduces the tax burden of those most capable of paying. It rewards land speculators at the expense of wage earners.

This represents the abandonment of any effort to have a fairer, simpler tax structure. The proponents of the amendment would have us believe that those who receive this tax cut are going to take their savings and invest them in business ventures. They will not. It will be given away to land speculators, takeovers, and other unproductive things.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has one remaining speaker. The Chair also understands that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. JENKINS] will speak for himself.

Therefore, at this time the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

□ 1130

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished minority leader is simply wrong. I hate class warfare, and this is not an issue of equity, distribution versus growth. We simply have not been shown that the capital gains differential will stimulate growth. The Treasury study of 1985 refutes it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues: One-quarter of 1 percent over 50 years; is that growth:

A recent study from the CRS says that the capital gains proposal could actually reduce the overall capital stock in investment by half a percent. Is that growth?

I decided to look up the figures on timber, and they are very interesting. Here is what they show. The last 2 years before tax reform, when we had a differential in capital gains, the increase in private forest plantings went up 20 percent, and since we eliminated the differential in capital gains, the private plantings have gone up 80 percent.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think there should be noted that under the farm bill set-aside lands allow farmers to plant, and that is the reason for that.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the reasons, but do not sell the capital gains differential on the basis of stimulating national growth. That is a smokescreen, my colleagues.

Whatever the good intentions of the sponsors, the likely beneficiary of this capital gains proposal is not national economic growth, but personal greed.

I urge that we adopt the proposal of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, there are only three questions that every Member ought to ask today.

The first one is: Who is going to get the most relief? Under the Democratic leadership plan 70 percent of all the benefits go to those making under $100,000. Under the Bush proposal the benefits go 80 percent to those making over $100,000, and listen to this. Sixty percent of the benefits go to those making over $200,000.

I say to my colleagues, "Let me tell you what that means. If you're from Georgia, it means only 13,000 taxpayers are going to get that relief. If you're from Alabama, it means 7,800 taxpayers. When you're making tax policy, decide which one you want to be with."

Second question: Which policy is the best fiscal policy? The Bush proposal will increase the deficit by $21 billion in 5 years. The Democratic proposal will reduce the deficit by $25 billion over the same period of time.

Finally, the third question: Who is going to pay for the relief? Well, listen to Richard Darman, the director of OMB of the President who is quoted in the newspaper this morning. He says that we are engaged in a massive, backward, Robin Hood transaction, robbing the future to give to the present.

I will tell my colleague who pays for Bush. It is going to be middle and working class Americans who will pay over the next 5 years.

Who pays for the Democratic plan? It is tax reform that says to Donald Trump, Malcolm Forbes, "You ought to be paying the same rate as middle income Americans."

Finally, I say to my colleagues, "When you look at those three questions, you know one thing has happened. The real George Bush has finally stood up with the wealthiest Americans with a proposal worthy of his party's heritage, and that is to give to the top," and we say, "Give to the most, not to the top. That insures economic growth."

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the Bush-Jenkins plan to temporarily reduce the capital gains tax and in support of the alternative offered by Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI and Majority Leader GEPHARDT to the fiscal year 1990 budget reconciliation bill (H.R. 3229).

The No. 1 crisis facing our Nation today is the Federal deficit. Yet, the Bush-Jenkins plan will allow the deficit to balloon by over $21 billion during the next decade and that's unacceptable. I am not opposed to a permanent reduction in the capital gains tax; but I am opposed to short-term band-aids that are put in place at the expense of meaningful long-term solutions.

The Bush-Jenkins plan of cutting the capital gains tax for 2½ years will not spur investment, reinvigorate the economy, or increase revenues in the long run. But it will weaken our economy, depress the stock market, and the real estate industry.

By limiting the tax discount period to just 27 months, the bill will encourage an enormous number of properties to be dumped on the market. This will come at precisely the wrong time as $100 billion worth of real property is put on the block by the Resolution Trust Corp. This figure does not include the current dumping of property by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Housing Administration, and the Veterans Administration. Today, a 2-year audit by the General Accounting Office and Price Waterhouse, reported that the FHA suffered losses of $4.2 billion in fiscal year 1988, nearly five times more than the Reagan administration reported at the time. We cannot afford to add an additional $21 billion to the deficit just to reduce the capital gains tax for the weathiest segment of our society.

In addition, the 2-year "cash it all in" window will force a plunge in the stock market as individuals rush to liquidate their stocks instead of holding onto them as long-term investments.

We need to increase the availability of private capital by providing additional incentives for long-term investment and savings in order to reduce the deficit which now stands at over $140 billion. While I support indexing the capital-gains tax to inflation and thus putting an end the taxation of illusory profits, I cannot condone a proposal which further increases our Federal deficit.

The Rostenkowski-Gephardt alternative, on the other hand, will establish a maximum capital tax rate of 28 percent; allow individuals who do not currently qualify for tax-deductible contribution to an individual retirement account [IRA] to contribute $2,000 a year to such a plan with 50 percent of the contribution being tax deductible; waive the current 10-percent tax penalty applied to early withdrawals from an IRA if the funds are used to finance a college education or first-time purchase of a home. The Rostenkowski-Gephardt alternative will raise $37.9 billion over 5 years by correcting the anomaly which permits those earnings more than $155,000 to pay a lower tax rate than middle income taxpayers earning between $45,000 and $94,000. Of the funds raised, about $22.5 billion would be set aside for a deficit-reduction trust fund and the remainder would fund the partial restoration of tax-deductible IRA's.

This proposal will encourage savings, reduce the deficit, and restore tax equity to the middle class. I urge my colleagues to support the Rostenkowski-Gephardt amendment to the fiscal year 1990 budget reconciliation bill.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Chairman, at a news editors' meeting in Minneapolis last week, Speaker FOLEY called the proposed capital gains tax break "ill-advised, ill-timed, inequitable, unfair, undesirable and generally pernicious. Other than that, its a good idea."

The Speaker is right. Like many Democrats, I could support some sort of capital gains tax differential if designed properly. While generally producing a simpler, fairer Tax Code, the 1986 tax reform did not provide enough incentives for saving. A capital gains break could spur investment. Further, a capital gains reduction would benefit many middle class retirees and others who experience a one time gain on the sale of assets like a farm, home or business.

However, the relative merits of a capital gains tax break do not justify voting for just any capital gains proposal that comes along. The current plan is ill advised. It provides an incentive to sell off assets in the next 2 years to benefit from a temporary drop in tax rates. That's bad economics. Why should we invite so much liquidation of capital in such a short period of time? It's also bad budgeting. We may get a 2-year bump in revenue but over time we lose revenue and increase the deficit. And it's bad policy. The 2-year break makes new long-term investment relatively less attractive.

The Jenkins-Bush plan is ill-timed. The budget blueprint for fiscal year 1990 is a joke. We all know we need a real deficit reduction plan. So why should we give the President what he wants most, a capital gains tax break, without getting in return what this country needs most, a serious deficit reduction plan?

Simply put, cutting the deficit is more important to the economy than cutting the capital gains tax rate.

Now is not the time for a capital gains break. This idea should be discussed as part of an overall plan to cut the deficit.

The Jenkins-Bush plan is inequitable. Upper income taxpayers, particularly high paid executives, could quickly move to take advantage of the capital gains tax break. Middle income taxpayers don't and can't move money around as easily. This would tend to further the regressivity of effective tax rates to the detriment of middle income taxpayers.

The Jenkins-Bush plan is unfair. Any way you look at it, this capital gains tax break is primarily targeted to the rich. While middle income taxpayers may benefit, on occasion, from the sale of a home or other assets, upper income taxpayers will benefit year in and year out from the availability of a lower tax rate on capital gains. It is a basic fact that those in upper income levels make money by investing, those in low and middle income levels make money by working and earning a paycheck.

While lowering the capital gains tax would certainly spur investment, it would not appreciably encourage new investment by low and middle income workers. On the other hand, an expanded IRA would also foster investment and savings, but the benefits would be spread to all income levels, not just the wealthiest Americans, The IRA also helps respond to the need for better retirement planning on the part of the American work force.

The Jenkins-Bush plan is undesirable. Assets held for no more than 1 year would qualify for a tax break. Why? We don't need to reward short-term profit taking. We ought to reward long-term investment. The effect of the Jenkins-Bush plan would be to perpetuate the shortsighted business policies which were the trademark of the 1980's.

If we are to lower capital gains rates, it ought to be available only for assets held 3 years or more, perhaps with a declining rate for assets held even longer.

The Jenkins-Bush proposal is pernicious in two ways. First, it has precipitated a breakdown in bipartisanship. We are now pitted in a fierce, largely partisan, fight at the worst possible time as the start of the next fiscal year approaches.

Cooperation between the White House and Congress is essential to achieve deficit reduction. Instead of risking a breakdown of the 1990 budget process at the last minute, we should front-load the question of capital gains into the fiscal year 1991 budget cycle, giving us plenty of time to address this issue carefully as part of an overall budget and tax package to cut the deficit.

Second, we undermine public confidence with a plan to cut capital gains now. Many Americans were suspicious of the lower tax rates offered by the 1986 tax reform. The tradeoff for lower rates was the elimination of credits, deductions, and loopholes primarily available to the wealthy. Now they'll feel their suspicions are confirmed if, in addition to lower rates for the wealthy, we restore tax breaks.

Further, most Americans know that the Federal Government is floating in red ink. They will not understand how Congress can increase the deficit by adopting a major tax break, when, frankly, spending cuts and additional revenues are needed to attain a balanced budget. Fundamentally, the credibility of Congress with the American voter is on the line.

Finally, the Rostenkowski-Gephardt substitute is the better option. Unlike the Jenkins-Bush capital gains plan which benefits primarily the wealthy, the benefits of expanded IRA's are spread to all income levels. Unlike the Jenkins-Bush plan which increases the deficit, the Rostenkowski-Gephardt plan actually cuts the deficit. Unlike the Jenkins-Bush plan, the Rosenkowski-Gephardt proposal would enhance, not undermine, the objective of the 1986 tax reform bill to make our tax system more fair.

Eliminating the bubble will keep upper income earners paying the same rate as middle income taxpayers, not a lower rate. Incidentally, capital gains would stay at a 28-percent rate providing some incentive for wealthy Americans to make such investments.

Today, we must make a choice. We can't choose both capital gains breaks and IRA's. For now, the best choice is the Rostenkowski-Gephardt substitute. It furthers the goals of tax reform and deficit reduction. Conversely, if the Jenkins-Bush plan is adopted by this Congress now, and in its current form, it would begin the process of dismantling tax reform and derailing our deficit reduction efforts.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA].

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Rostenkowski-Gephardt Democratic IRA/deficit reduction alternative to the capital gains giveaway.

Today's debate offers us all a clear choice: a 2-year bonazana for the rich, or fairness and a secure future for everyone. In cannot in good conscience support a cut in the capital gains rate knowing full well that the $21 billion tab will be passed on to the middle class over the next 10 years. It is incredible and irresponsible to give the 375,000 richest families in America, already earning over $200,000 annually, a $25,000 windfall, with the knowledge tha our budget difficulties will force us to drastically reduce Government services or raise taxes for millions of middle class Americans in the coming years if this giveaway is passed today.

The Rostenkowski-Gephardt substitute, in contrast, helps the average American family. Restoration of the IRA deduction would help encourage personal savings, would help young families realize their dream of owning a home, would help parents pay for their children's college education, and would help everyone save for their golden years.

The Rostenkowski-Gephardt substitute also takes positive steps to reduce the deficit. The amendment would reduce the deficit by $24.5 billion over 5 years. The deficit is of paramount importance to the ability of our Nation to invest in the future and compete in the world market. The Jenkins-Archer amendment would postpone consideration of serious deficit reduction and sound economic policies. The substitute deals with the deficit head-on and conveys a sense of Federal fiscal responsibility that is essential to business confidence and long-term investment planning.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Democratic alternative, to support deficit reduction and sound economic and budgetary policy, and to support young families and students in realizing their dreams.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CHAPMAN].

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have voted on a permanent capital gains rate reduction today. Unfortunately, the capital gains rate reduction proposal in the budget reconciliation bill which we are voting on today is a 2-year gimmick designed not to spur new investment or create new jobs but to force divestiture of assets and create one-time capital gains revenues to the government.

The temporary 2-year capital gains fix would do nothing in the long run for deficit reduction and economic development. Studies show that after the first 2 years the proposal will lose revenues and cause the deficit to skyrocket, forcing massive future tax increases to pay for it.

Passing a tax bill forcing owners to sell real estate in the next 2 years to take advantage of capital gains would further depress land values in my district that are far too low today.

To those who say that the Rostenkowski-Gephardt-Stenholm proposal is bad because it makes families who earn over $200,120 pay the same rate as those who actually make less, I say: "Yes, I'm sorry, but it's just plain fair."

We must be honest with ourselves in cutting the Federal budget deficit. Budget gimmicks that disguise the long-term deficit problem are not the answer.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, to paraphrase a popular commercial, many decisions central to our Nation's survival and strength become tax decisions, which means that tax policy is often the heartbeat of America.

No concientious politician likes to raise taxes and I certainly do not. It is far more attractive to propose tax reductions, as the President did with capital gains, and as the Secretary of the Treasury is now hinting about with regard to dividends.

Nevertheless, in my opinion, any tax proposals that would enhance capital formation and U.S. competitiveness deserve to be considered on their merits, whether they recommend increases or decreases. So, what are the merits of the bill currently before the House?

First and foremost, the context of the proposal to reduce taxes by billions of dollars a year is a string of Federal budget deficits—more than $1½ trillion in the past 9 years—that threatens the financial stability of the country and an adamant refusal by the President to consider tax increases under any circumstances, either to reduce these deficits under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law, or to respond to the most significant national needs and opportunities. This position has brought the U.S. Government to virtual paralysis or tokenism in the face of some of the most historic developments of the past 50 years. In short, this position lacks realism and responsibility. It plays politics with tax policy, and among other things, detracts from the credibility of the administration's capital gains proposal.

Second, I respectfully disagree with the form of the capital gains proposal as it emerged from the Ways and Means Committee (subtitle J, part 1, section 11951 of H.R. 3299). In my opinion, what capital gains policy is all about is encouraging long-term investment where risks are multiplied by uncertainty. Accordingly, a short-term 27-month reduction in capital gains rates seem contrary to the spirit of what capital gains policy should be. The indexing system—that would take effect thereafter, for newly purchased assets under the Ways and Means proposal—might also be worthy of consideration in some form. However, it would apply to only to one class of assets and not others, and would create a compound treatment of property that seems unduly complicated to me.

Third, the Ways and Means proposal would lose further revenue that the country desperately needs. After a short-term pickup of $9.4 billion over the first 3 years, it would lose $30.3 billion in revenues for the next 7 years, for a net loss over 10 years of $20.9 billion. We taxpayers would have to make up that revenue in some other way. The alternative proposal in fact does raise revenues—$12.5 billion in the first 5 years—and more thereafter—which would be specifically earmarked for deficit reduction.

Fourth, according to the Congressional Budget Office, the 3.3 percent of U.S. taxpayers whose incomes are more than $100,000 would enjoy 79.7 percent of the cuts from the committee proposal. While that fact is not automatically disqualifying, since investment generally parallels wealth and income, it is also a matter of history that in the past decade, maximum tax rates on long-term capital gains have fallen from 49 percent to 28 percent and on short-term gains from 70 percent to 28 percent. To add another tax reduction concentrated on this group of wealthy taxpayers on top of what they are already enjoying, at a time of severe budget stringency, seems to me to be basically unfair to the rest of us. As my distinguished colleague from North Dakota recently pointed out, capital gains cuts could be structured in a different way to focus more upon the middle class ("A Tax Cut For Those Who Really Need It," by Rep. BYRON DORGAN, Washington Post, September 12, 1989, page A21).

The alternative proposal—to allow a deduction for one-half of an individual retirement account contribution of up to $2,000—benefits all income classes and would also encourage national savings and investment.

My preference would be to have no tax reductions and no tax increases this year, so that Congress and the administration could work out a major, legitimate reduction of the budget next year, in order to address the critical budget deficit program.

At that time, in my opinion, there are several fairness problems which capital gains tax policy should address, such as the situations of operators of small and other long-term businesses, homeowners, farmers, and risk-taking high-technology entrepreneurs, and venture capitalists.

For example, small business persons work for a lifetime, reinvesting heavily in their enterprises to remain competitive over the years. It seems unfair that in the year that the business is sold, the owner must pay tax on the proceeds of this reinvestment all at one time and at ordinary income rates.

Homeowners and farmers are in the same position. In the year they sell their prime asset they become subject to tax at the highest rate, which falls on 20 or 30 years of inflation that has already eroded the purchasing power of the assets.

Risk capital is the likeblood of new enterprise. It is a source of pride, I believe, that the 1978 and 1981 reductions on capital gains taxes caused an increase in the amount of formal venture capital in this country from $3 billion to $30 billion. Informal risk capital may have grown to approximately twice that amount.

A recent report of the National Venture Capital Association and the American Electronics Association documents the benefits to our economy of companies that have received investments of these larger pools of capital. The study examined 200 companies financed by venture capital investment between 1981 and 1985 and found that they had created 38,616 jobs. Every $100 invested in these companies generated $22 in research, $12 in taxes, and $34 in export sales ("Generating Economic Growth Through Young Technology Companies." 1989).

These companies paid almost no dividends, because their earnings were plowed back to finance growth, employment, and research. The reward for these leading-edge companies, their executives, and their investors, is capital appreciation and the risks of organization, product development, market development, and competition are extraordinary. I feel that an appropriate capital gains policy should have a role in compensating for the risks of extended investment periods and uncertainties of this kind of economically valuable activity.

But the Ways and Means Committee proposal is, in my view, not the answer. I hope that we can try again in the near future to formulate such a wise and beneficial policy.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Democratic substitute and in opposition to the Bush-Jenkins capital gains proposal.

The Democratic alternative will restore one of the most popular middle-class tax deductions eliminated by the 1986 Tax Act—the IRA. Moreover, it will make IRA's more useful as a vehicle for savings by allowing them to be used not just for retirement income, but for college expenses and the cost of a new home, as well.

In stark contrast, the Bush-Jenkins amendment is designed to benefit the very wealthiest Americans. It provides a 30 percent tax cut for people who sell stocks, bonds, timber, real estate, and certain other capital assets—but nothing for people whose income is derived from wages or salaries.

Fully 80 percent of the savings from the Bush-Jenkins proposal will go to taxpayers with incomes in excess of $100,000—less than 4 percent of all taxpayers. And, as the Washington Post points out, the richest 1 percent of Americans, who make $200,000 a year or more and who need Government help the least, would get $25,000 each from the President's tax break.

Who will pay for that $25,000 grant to the wealthiest 1 percent? My constituents. My autoworkers, teachers, secretaries, steelworkers, office workers, construction workers, and nurses will pay.

What could be more unfair?

Mr. Chairman, I ask that today's Washington Post editorial be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to vote for the Democratic alternative.

$25,000 APIECE FOR THE RICH

The capital gains tax cut before the House today boils down to this simple proposition: whether the representatives will give an average grant of more than $25,000 apiece next year to the 375,000 richest families in America. Stripped of all the made-to-order rationalizations about economic growth and the cost of capital and trickle-down and the budget deficit, that is what this proposal that President Bush is so ardently pressing amounts to. The defense is in macroeconomic terms, but it is a distributional device. It moves money in the wrong direction, and vastly more of it than the conventional method of measurement suggests.

On transactions they might normally be expected to make during the next two years, without the impetus of the rate cut that would be in effect, holders of capital assets would gain $34 billion. That is how much the respected staff of Congress' Joint Committee on Taxation estimates their taxes on these transactions would be reduced and their incomes accordingly increased. Eighty percent of this money would go to the fewer than 5 percent of all families with incomes of more than $100,000 a year, and 60 percent (more than $20 billion) to those with incomes of more than $200,000.

The belief is that holders of assets would then be induced by the lower rate to engage in still more transactions. On these, congressional aides estimate that their tax savings—to say nothing of the underlying gains—might be $20 billion.

The Treasury comes out ahead in the short run because there are more transactions, but in the long run it loses. The income of the rich is enormously increased. The ability of the government to finance necessary services, including national defense, is correspondingly reduced. The administration is new, but the feel-good policy is not. It is the same policy that during eight years nearly tripled the national debt, produced a numbing deficit, left the country dependent on foreign loans, forced the Federal Reserve Board to hold interest rates well above what they would otherwise have been and greatly increased the income gap between the rich and poor.

The Democrats instead would raise the marginal tax on the richest Americans, redistribute part of the proceeds and use the rest to reduce the deficit that is so insidious a drag on the economy. House members, some of them, are afraid of voting for a tax increase. Their alternative is to vote for another deficit increase. The House is like a fat boy in front of another jelly doughnut. Does it eat again or finally have the self-respect and discipline to say no? That is the question of character it will be answering today.

Mrs. LOWEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the IRA amendment to H.R. 3299.

I would like to make clear from the outset that I am not opposed to a capital gains tax cut. In fact, I strongly feel that we should index capital gains. This is a reform that make eminent sense for all Americans. And a properly targeted, long-term capital gains tax cut may actually help increase the availability of capital, spur new investment, and increase the rate of savings.

On the other hand, the capital gains tax cut before us today is not good long-term policy. Because of the way it is crafted, it will not expand the availability of capital nor spur new investment. Its short duration adds to the stop and start nature of tax policy that harms long-term planning. And the alternative that is being offered—increased availability of IRA's, more opportunities for students, and first-time homebuyers, and a large reduction in the Federal deficit—will clearly do more to improve our Nation's long-term economic prospects.

Under the administration-supported plan, the 30 percent exclusion for capital gains will be available only for assets sold in the next 2 years. Therefore, new assets are likely to make up only a tiny fraction of the assets that benefit. This means that the Bush tax plan is almost entirely a reward for investments made previously, rather than an incentive for new investments. In fact, the Congressional Research Service [CRS] has determined that the Bush capital gains tax plan could actually reduce overall capital investment by 0.6 percent.

A capital gains rate that shoots downward and then upward during a short period will stimulate the immediate sales of capital assets and threaten uncertainty in the financial markets. It will also create Tax Code instability and reinforce short-term speculation and short-term investment. Capital formation will not be achieved by short-term economics. Rather, if we adopt changes in the Tax Code aimed at increasing investment, we should do so in a permanent and broad-based fashion.

This Nation is faced with enormous economic challenges in the coming years. If we hope to remain competitive in the global marketplace, we must pursue policies that will increase savings and investment. A capital gains tax cut, including the indexation of capital assets, may be among these policies. But a convincing case has not been made that this specific plan for a temporary capital gains tax cut will really contribute to our Nation's economic future.

While economists battle about the drawbacks and benefits of a capital gains tax cut, there are some economic precepts that remain unquestioned. We know beyond any shadow of a doubt that the enormous Federal deficit is sapping the economic strength of our Nation. We know that increasing the rate of personal savings will help spur economic growth. We know that if we hope to compete effectively in the 21st century, we are going to have to improve educational opportunities for our Nation's young people. And we know that one of the most important economic quests of young families is the quest to own their own home.

These are basic concepts. And the IRA amendment before us today gets back to the basics. It will cut the Federal budget deficit by $25 billion over the next 10 years. It will restore the deduction for IRA's, which are proven to dramatically increase the rate of personal savings. And because the plan will permit withdrawal of funds without penalties for a college education or the purchase of a first home, this plan will help Americans across the Nation fulfill their dream of receiving a quality education and owning their own home.

In short, Mr. Chairman, the choice we face today is between a capital gains tax cut which, because of the way it is crafted, may actually endanger our economic future, and an IRA alternative that we can rely on not only to significantly improve our Nation's economic prospects, but to help Americans everywhere fulfill their dreams.

Importantly, it accomplishes this without raising new taxes. Despite the shrill cries of those who are seeking to gain partisan advantage from the debate over America's economic future, the financing of the IRA-deficit reduction amendment is achieved by correcting an anomaly in the 1986 Tax Code that mistakenly provides a lower rate to those with the highest levels of income in our Nation. This lower rate was never intended. Furthermore, the new rate will still be less than half the top tax rate in 1981.

As the Gannett Westchester newspapers indicated, this plan does not impose new taxes. It will, however, protect Americans everywhere from a massive future tax increase that very likely would be necessary as a result of the revenue shortfall created by the administration's capital gains tax cut, which is estimated to lose $21 billion over 10 years.

Given this choice, I must vote in favor of the IRA alternative. But in doing so, I do not rule out the possibility that a capital gains tax cut could be crafted that would contribute to the future of this Nation. In fact, I believe that the indexation of capital assets is appropriate and should be pursued.

I look forward to a future debate about America's economic needs that will focus more on the real economic problems we face as a nation and less on partisan politics. And I can assure all of my constituents that I will wholeheartedly support changes in fiscal, monetary, and tax policy that will maximize America's economic potential and the personal economic opportunities available to American citizens.

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my wholehearted support for a reduction in the capital gains tax, as long as it is clear that the cut will result in greater productivity and longer term investment for American industry.

Unfortunately, the current Bush-Jenkins proposal falls far short of those goals, and would in the end weaken America's industrial base. The proposal's integrity has been sacrificed to special interest concerns, in particular the timber industry. And contrary to its authors' claims, the Bush-Jenkins proposal won't encourage new investment. Instead, it will principally provide an unearned windfall to old investments, and in particular would largely benefit assets other than venture capital investments.

Most significantly, by applying the exclusion only for assets disposed of during the period from September 14, 1989, through the end of 1991, the Bush-Jenkins proposal gets capital gains backward. Instead of encouraging long-term investment, their proposal would encourage the churning that now plagues our capital markets.

And finally, Bush-Jenkins doesn't address the serious fiscal implications of a capital gains cut, and is estimated to boost the deficit by $5.7 billion in 1993 alone.

In contrast, the Democratic leadership's IRA proposal is a valuable alternative to Bush-Jenkins that would encourage savings and allow middle-class Americans a better chance to build a home, educate their children, and retire with security. I do not, however, consider it a substitute for future consideration of a carefully constructed capital gains reduction.

Unlike the Bush-Jenkins plan, the IRA proposal will pay for itself by closing the bubble and reducing the deficit by an estimated $25 billion over the 5-year period from fiscal year 1990 to fiscal year 1994.

Although I cannot abide the current Bush-Jenkins capital gains plan, I have proposed, and will continue to strongly support, a sliding-scale, revenue neutral, targeted capital gains proposal that would increase productivity, encourage long-term investment, and prove fair to all taxpayers. I believe that the current capital gains debate too broadly painted a picture of capital gains support being a purely upper income phenomena. In my district, for example, there are a number of moderate income citizens who own homes of significant value, and clearly stand to benefit from a properly constructed capital gains proposal.

My proposal would include: First, taxing gains on assets held less than a year at a 50-percent rate, but only at a 10-percent rate for those holding assets for more than 5 years, perhaps zeroing out after a 10-year holding period; second, recouping revenue losses by an increase in taxes on upper income earners to ensure that benefits and costs are shared progressively.

America needs both strong savings and investment strategies; today's IRA's proposal will fill in half the equation, but unfortunately, we must wait for the other half. America cannot afford to take risks with the shortsighted capital gains tax tinkering currently being considered.

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in full support of the Rostenkowski amendment to H.R. 3299. The choice between IRA and capital gains tax reduction as vehicles for boosting our economy comes down to two questions. Do we want prosperity to trickle down from our wealthiest citizens, or do we want America's financial strength to surge upward, empowering every family?

Do we want to encourage a short-term financial fire sale which will enrich a few with a shower of dollars, or to enhance the ability of every American to gain the true long-term benefits of a college education, a home, and a stable, dignified retirement?

On these simple issues on national policy IRA's are clearly preferable to reducing the capital gains tax.

A capital gains rate reduction would also undermine the Tax Reform Act of 1986 and our long-term commitment to reducing the budget deficit.

In light of that deficit any new tax preference must be scrutinized for its impact on Federal revenues, its economic effect, and most importantly, for whether it meets the test of treating all of our taxpayers with basic fairness, regardless of their incomes. The capital gains tax rate cut fails all three tests.

First, it claims to raise $9.4 billion in the next 2 years to aid us in reducing the deficit.

What we're not told, is that over a 5-year period, the Treasury would lose revenues estimated at $2 to $25 billion, which would contribute to increasing the Federal deficit, not solving it.

Second, a temporary rate cut for currently held assets actually reduces savings and investment in the short run, since realizations will result in consumption of some portion of the gain. We must encourage savings but not at the expense of eroding the hard-won 1986 Tax Reform Act that cut tax rates in return for reducing tax deductions and elimination of loopholes.

Third, over 80 percent of the benefits of the capital gains rate cut will go to the individuals with incomes in excess of $100,000. Such a windfall fails the test of basic tax fairness.

Unlike the capital gains cut, the Rostenkowski amendment reduces the deficit in the short and long term, a total of $2.5 billion over 5 years. This is achieved by restoring the 50-percent deductions for individual retirement accounts and eliminating the current "bubble" tax rate structure which, in turn, provides relief to the middle-class, not just the rich.

Mr. Chairman this vote is a clear choice between enriching individuals and enriching our Nation and its future.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the Rostenkowski amendment.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, we have some important issues facing this Nation, and this Congress. People want us to reduce the appalling national debt—and rightly so. People in Maine, and, I think, around the Nation, want us to clean up our environment. People are willing to spend more on education, because they know how critical a good education is to our children and to our future. People want us to fight a real war, not a phony slogan war, against drugs. They want us to work on providing affordable health care, and affordable housing.

But when we try to come up with aggressive, meaningful plans to address these issues, we run into a red light. Where is the money? Congress is almost paralyzed by the national debt and by the artificial, short-term limits of the Gramm-Rudman Act, which is prompting short-term solutions that make no long-term sense, that in fact cost the taxpayers extra money in the long run.

So what do we do? We vote today on a plan to give a special tax break to the very wealthy. President Bush's own Office of Management and Budget admits that this will cost the U.S. Government money after a brief, 2- or 3-year windfall. It will increase the deficit. It will do nothing to address the felt human needs, the serious problems facing ths country.

In fact, if you were to ask average Americans what Congress should be doing, I don't think that giving a tax break to the very rich would even show up on the list.

Eighty percent of the benefit of this capital gains tax cut would go to people making over $100,000 a year. Sixty percent would go to those making over $200,000—less than 1 percent of the people in this country. Only 8 percent of the benefit would go to people making less than $50,000. As the Washington Post said today, this legislation is the equivalent of giving a $25,000 grant to the 375,000 richest families in the Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I know a lot of families who could use a $25,000 grant. None of them makes over $100,000 a year. For most of them, $25,000 would be more than they would see after a full year of hard work, day in and day out. But for some reason, the proponents of this tax break think that the U.S. Government should be in the business of giving a break to the rich. Somehow, it will trickle down to the rest of us, they seem to say. I do not believe it.

President Bush wrote a letter. I think some of my colleagues may have received one, too. He said that this legislation "will ensure continued economic prosperity and provide powerful incentives for investment and jobs." But how can this be true, when the special break is scheduled to end 2½ years? Are we interested in creating businesses and jobs that will be quickly sold off, and lost, before the tax break ends in two years? Or is this, pure and simple, a quick fix to encourage people to sell their investments quickly, right now, so we get some cash in the U.S. Treasury to meet the Gramm-Rudman target and avoid raising taxes this year? Why should we worry about 2 years from now? Why should we worry about the incredible, growing debt we are passing on to our children? Just as the administration is adding to the true deficit, while trying to hid it, by putting the huge savings and loan bailout off budget, it is now adding to the long-term deficit for the sake of a short-term gimmick that will benefit the very richest Americans, at the expense of the average taxpayer.

If this bill were designed to help average, middle class Americans who had worked hard to make long-term investments, it would be worthy of serious consideration. But we were not given the opportunity to vote on a proposal designed with those people in mind. The proposal before us does not differentiate between an individual in a nursing home who must sell his lifelong home to pay for his care, and a Donald Trump or Malcolm Forbes.

There is a serious issue of fairness here. This administration vetoed an increase in the minimum wage for the working poor. But it can hardly control its eagerness for a break for the very rich. It isn't the rich who need our help, its the poor, and the middle class. Wealthy Americans got a break in the 1986 tax law changes. The tax rates for the wealthy were lowered drastically. In return, many tax loopholes and breaks, such as the capital gains tax break, were eliminated. Now Congress may act to give the rich back their tax break, too.

I cannot support this capital gains tax break, and I sincerely hope my colleagues will not support it either.

Mr. JONES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I supported the Jenkins-Archer proposal to reinstate the capital gains rate differential, and I am pleased the House voted to include this provision in the reconciliation bill before the House today.

I do not consider this to be a partisan issue. I consider it a mainstreet, mainstream Democratic position in the tradition of John F. Kennedy.

The Fourth District of Georgia has many small business persons who communicate with me daily on the importance a capital gains rate differential is to their continued growth and economic competitiveness. I also hear from the elderly and the middle class who cannot afford to sell their house, or the stocks they have invested in over the years for retirement without a capital gains rate differential.

I am frustrated that I was forced to choose between a capital gains rate differential or a reinstatement of IRA's. I think both are good for business, both are good for all Americans, and both are good for the Democratic Party. I do not think, though, one is a substitute for the other, it is like comparing apples and oranges. First and foremost, I support a reinstatement of the capital-rate differential, and I hope the Senate will agree with the House and send a bill to the President with the capital gains rate differential.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to reduction in the taxation of capital gains and in support of the amendment to restore the opportunity for all Americans to contribute to new individual retirement accounts and to allow those such savings to be accessed without tax or penalty if used to help purchase a first home, pay medical costs, or afford rising college tuitions.

Study after study has attempted to determine whether proposals to lower the tax rate on capital gains will increase revenues by encouraging transactions or decrease revenues through a lower tax rate. The studies have yielded conclusions supporting both premises. The spinmasters and statisticians have the ability to show us both.

However, it is clear that although the initial cut in the capital gains tax rate will likely yield increased revenues, projected revenue losses are, without question, in the billions for the future. With the immobilizing national and annual deficits we face today; with a national debt that stretches to almost $3 trillion; with massive funding needs in housing, drug abuse prevention, child care, health insurance, environmental protection—we cannot afford such a giveaway to the wealthy in our Nation. "Trickle down" did not work when the Reagan supply siders forced it through the front door in 1981. It will not work when the Bush clones try to slip it through the back door in 1989.

This capital gains cut proposal will create a host of loopholes that were closed in the 1986 tax reform law. The rates were lowered and the tax loop holes closed in 1986 we should not open them today. Eighty percent of the capital gains tax cut will go to but 5 percent of the taxpayers. Those with incomes in excess of $200,000 will see cuts averaging around $24,000. Most families can't convert their income into capital gains, so they will continue to pay the higher 28 to 33 percent rates in the law. They will pay even more as the revenue shortfall overtakes that short-term revenue increase that is hoped for by the capital gain cut proponents.

On the other hand, the IRA proposal will encourage savings and assist more middle-class Americans in achieving the American dream while saving for their futures. The Rostenkowski-Gephardt alternative will encourage savings for education and savings for a future home. This measure also eliminate the unintended rate reduction in the 1986 tax law which causes the rates to rise to 33 percent for some taxpayers and then to drop back to 28 percent for the upper income taxpayer, the so-called tax bubble rate affect. This amendment will not only fund the new IRA savings plan, but will provide sufficient new revenue in a fair and equitable manner to meet the deficit budget goals for 1990, 1991, and 1992. It is surely time to begin to address the deficit and budget realities instead of passing forward to another year, the next Congress, or future generations, the massive unchecked deficits from the decade of the eighties.

My choice and my vote will not be for borrowing against our future for the 1 or 2 percent that will save almost $25,000 a year from a capital gains cut. It will be for a proposal that will eliminate a gross inequity in the Tax Code known as the bubble—that taxes some at a 33 percent rate while those earning above $150,000 pay at the 28 percent rate—and will in its stead, create additional incentives for savings and for deficit reduction. I would urge my colleagues to consider this matter carefully and support the Rostenkowski-Gephardt amendment.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the reduction in the capital gains tax rate contained in H.R. 3299, the budget reconciliation bill.

I believe that we must take steps on the national level to promote investment and savings in order to make the American economy more competitive. I am not convinced that this reduction in the capital gains tax is either the most appropriate or the most effective mechanism through which to achieve that goal.

Proponents and opponents of the capital gains tax rate cut are citing conflicting facts and figures to support their arguments. There are several specific facts which do stand out. Cutting the capital gains tax is projected to raise some revenue in the short run—up to $9.4 billion because of increased asset sales. It is estimated that the long-term cost to the Treasury, however, is much greater. The capital gains rate cut would contribute to the deficit by costing the Treasury $21 billion through the fiscal year ending September 30, 1999 and would achieve little in terms of spurring new investment and savings.

The most comprehensive study on the impact of a capital gains tax reduction was done by the Reagan Treasury Department. This study found that an across-the-board capital gains tax would increase annual income by about $1 per taxpayer. Such a reduction would actually hurt the economy by increasing the deficit in 1993 alone by $5.7 billion. The upward pressure on interest rates will swamp any marginal benefit of a short-term rate cut.

There are also real questions about the impact of a capital gains reduction on increasing venture capital investment. Venture capital is important, but it only constitutes a small fraction of equity markets in this country—probably less than 1 percent. The fact that the capital gains reduction would be across-the-board means that assets other than venture capital would probably be the prime beneficiaries.

Individual investors contribute only a small—and getting smaller—share of new venture capital. In 1987, individuals accounted for only 12 percent of new venture capital commitments. In percent share, venture capital investments were as high from 1981 through 1983—between 20 and 23 percent share—when the top rate was 20 percent, as it was in 1979, when the top rate was 28 percent. The dollar volume of commitments by individuals rose steadily through 1983, dropped in 1984, dropped again in 1986 and rose in 1987, the first year after tax reform eliminated the capital gains differential.

Pension funds, which are untaxed, account for the largest share of venture capital commitments and their share is growing. In 1987, they accounted for nearly 40 percent of venture capital commitments. Other institutional investors, including endowments, foundations and insurance companies account for about 20 percent; corporations about 11 percent.

These statistics indicate that the impact on venture capital of a capital gains reduction would be negilible. The facts do not bear out the argument that such a reduction would result in increased and improved productivity.

To promote new small business investment, a capital gains reduction would have to be selective, limiting the advantages to those investing in small businesses; applicable only to new issues and for investments held for a long period of time. The Bush across-the-board capital gains reduction does not meet any of these criteria.

I believe that reducing our Federal deficit is the single most important thing we can do to increase the productivity of our economy and improve our competitiveness. The current proposed capital gains reduction would, over the long-run, increase the Federal deficit and have an adverse impact on our deficit reduction efforts.

It is important to reduce the cost of capital for new businesses. I urge my colleagues to support a plan which could actually do this by opposing the capital gains rate reduction contained in the budget reconciliation bill.

Mr. SABO. Mr. Chairman, today we will cast a very important vote. We have two distinct options from which to choose. One gives another big tax break to the very rich and adds to the budget deficit. The other helps average Americans and reduces the deficit.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the capital gains tax cut plan. It's bad tax policy, bad economic policy, and bad budget policy. Any way you look at it, its the wrong thing to do.

BAD TAX POLICY

It's bad tax policy because it will overwhelmingly benefit the very wealthy in this society. Four-fifths of the capital gains tax cuts would go to people earning more than $100,000 a year, a group that constitutes only 3.2 percent of all taxpayers. Those earning $200,000 or more would get three-fifths of the savings and an average tax cut of almost $25,000 a year. Conversely, the 85 percent of the taxpayers who earn less than $50,000 would receive less than 10 percent of the tax savings.

It is especially inappropriate to give the richest people another tax break now when economic disparity is growing in this country. In fact, the gap between the rich and poor is now larger than at any time in the 40 years since the Government began compiling those statistics.

This capital gains tax cut is also bad tax policy because it would promote an uneconomic churning of capital assets as people rapidly sell assets just to take advantage of this tax break.

The purpose of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, adopted just 3 years ago and not yet fully implemented, was to provide an economically neutral Tax Code. In exchange for lower tax rates for everyone, we did away with many tax breaks and loopholes that tended to benefit upper income people and encouraged one type of investment over another. The lower rate on capital gains was one of the biggest and most significant tax preferences that was eliminated. If we adopt this proposal we will again see a significant transfer of capital assets whether it makes economic sense or not.

BAD ECONOMIC POLICY

It's bad economic policy because this particular capital gains tax cut is so poorly designed. It cuts the tax rate for just 2 years. That is supposed to raise revenue briefly because it will promote a fire sale of assets in the next 2 years. But that very characteristic will almost certainly create chaos in markets as everyone rushes to sell assets. It could wreak havoc in sectors throughout our economy and artificially lower the value of assets.

This capital gains tax cut won't contribute to economic growth as proponents claim. Their rationalization that it will encourage savings and risk-taking investments is dubious at best. We were told that the big tax cuts of the early 1980's would increase savings; they didn't. In fact, the savings rate has gone down in this decade. This capital gains tax cut won't encourage "venture capitalism," because it is available for all kinds of assets, not just new assets.

BAD BUDGET POLICY

It's bad budget policy because it would be another case where we accept a short-term revenue gain that complicates our long-term deficit problem. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that the tax cut will increase revenue slightly for 2 or 3 years when many people are expected to sell assets. But it will cost the Treasury dearly after that.

If we are really serious about reducing the deficit, we should not make the job more difficult in the years ahead. Cutting the deficit will be tough enough. We should not make it even tougher. The capital gains tax cut will soon be a major revenue loser. Then we will face some very difficult and unpleasant choices: Either have to live with a bigger deficit that violates the Gramm-Rudman law, make significant cuts in other Government spending, or face serious pressure to raise the average taxpayer's taxes.

A vote for the capital gains tax cut is clearly a vote for increasing the deficit. It is a vote for instant gratification that will cause long-term pain.

As the Washington Post summed it up today:

> It is the same policy that during 8 years [of the Reagan Administration] nearly tripled the national debt, produced a numbing deficit, left the country dependent on foreign loans, forced the Federal Reserve Board to hold interest rates well above what they would otherwise have been and greatly increased income gap between rich and poor.

A BETTER ALTERNATIVE

Fortunately, we do not have to continue down this path. Today we can reject this unwise, unfair, and irresponsible proposal and adopt a better, fairer, and more responsible alternative.

The Democratic alternative helps the average taxpayer by expanding the tax deductibility of individual retirement accounts [IRA's]. That will help middle-class Americans achieve the dream of home ownership, pay for their children's college education, and plan for a secure retirement. Encouraging the use of IRA's will also help the economy by increasing savings.

But, most importantly, this alternative will cut the deficit—not add to it. Over 5 years, the Democratic plan will cut the deficit by $25 billion more than the capital gains cut plan.

It reduces the deficit by eliminating the bubble in our current tax structure that taxes families with incomes of more than $200,000 in a lower tax bracket than families with incomes between $75,000 and $200,000. Now those in the richest group pays at a marginal rate of only 28 percent, while the other group pays at a marginal rate of 33 percent. Our plan extends the 33-percent rate to the richest taxpayers.

The Democratic plan is the responsible thing to do. It is better tax policy, better economic policy, and better budget policy. I urge my colleagues to reject the tax cut for the rich and vote for the tax plan that shows we are serious about reducing the deficit.

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Two days ago I fully expected to vote in favor of the capital gains provision contained in this bill. I support a cut in the capital gains tax and notwithstanding my position today, I still do.

But having been courted by both sides of the issue, as I have been, I had to review the issue more closely.

Both a capital gains tax and restoration of the IRA deductibility increase savings and investment.

I believe a capital gains differential spurs business development, especially small business development.

I believe a capital gains cut will spur economic development along the Texas border.

However, I also believe that restoration of IRA tax deductibility is more apt to yield a more immediate payoff for individual taxpayers than will a cut in the capital gains rate.

Mr. Chairman, if I had the option to vote today for both a capital gains cut and expanded IRA deductibility, I would. But political questions seldom afford a broad range of options, and this question is no different. We are limited to a single choice. And on that question I have decided to cast my vote for the position that will benefit the greatest number of taxpayers and that is to expand the deductibility for IRA contributions.

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Chairman. I rise today in opposition to the Gephardt-Rostenkowski amendment and in support of the Jenkins-Archer proposal.

Mr. Chairman, it has been stated repeatedly that this issue, more than any other issue, delineates the differences between our two great political parties. And on the surface, this is probably true. But it also represents the continuation of a drama that has run continuously throughout recorded history—the conflict between the morality of achievement and the morality of resentment.

You see, when the former flourishes, and when individual effort and hard work are respected, the society grows and prospers and economic mobility abounds. But when the latter predominates, the society and the economy stand still, and soon decline.

Mr. Chairman, the essence of both a growing economy and a dynamic society has been known for almost 90 years, ever since the late Austrian economist, Joseph Schumpeter, identified innovation as the driving force behind economic growth, and the entrepreneur as the agent behind innovation. For it is the entrepreneur who moves resources from the old to the new, and from the obsolete to the productive.

But unfortunately, it is the entrepreneur and the small businessman who suffers the most from our adversely high taxes on capital gains. For the entrepreneur is a person who assumes the risk of starting a business and works long hours nurturing that business, a business which might not produce a profit for many years. However, that entrepreneur, if successful, may then see the value of his or her assets rise sharply. And if that entrepreneur then disposes of those assets, he or she should be allowed to reap the rewards associated with both the risk and the hard work.

Now, those who favor the politics of resentment will most certainly discount this logic. However, it will be difficult for even them to discount the following facts: In 1977—before the capital gains tax was cut—there were only two initial stock offerings in the United States. By 1983, new stock offerings reached 304. Furthermore, new business formations went from 280,000 in 1978 to over 600,000 in 1983. And best of all, the tax cut actually paid for itself.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues not to view this issue in terms of a zero sum game. Rather, it represents an opportunity to unleash the creative talents of the American people. And in the process, we will create jobs, and growth, and upward economic mobility.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of restoring the deduction for individual retirement arrangements (IRA's], and against restoring the capital gains exclusion.

I think there is room in our Tax Code for a carefully crafted capital gains exclusion, designed to spur investment and research in critical areas.

Unfortunately, that is not what is before us. What we have before us now is nothing more than a window of opportunity for speculators and Wall Street traders to have big profits and low taxes.

This is just bad tax policy all the way around. It is going to add to the deficit in the long run, while being counterproductive to the economic health of the Nation in the short run.

I frankly fear what is going to happen, with the real estate market depressed in so many parts of the country, if we enact the juicy inducement for investors to sell their real estate in order to take advantage of the 2-year opportunity to enjoy a maximum 19.6 percent tax rate on capital gains.

Moreover, although restoring the capital gains exemption will produce more revenues in the short run, in the long run its going to be a real loser.

I don't have to tell you that, with horrendous deficits staring us in the eye, the last thing we need is another revenue loser. We don't need any more temporary expedients that make us feel good today but which will give us excruciating choices in the future.

Frankly, I voted against the rule because I am not happy with the choices we are given. However the more sound alternative, in my judgment, is to restore the deduction for individual retirement arrangements [IRA's].

It will be a bonanza to no one, but a help to many.

It will encourage people to make plans for their retirement, as well as for their childrens' education or a first home.

It will boost our Nation's dismally low savings rate.

Just as importantly, this particular legislative option will burst the bubble—that anomoly in the 1986 act that actually gives wealthy taxpayers a maximum marginal tax rate of 28 percent, while certain others in lower income categories have a 33-percent maximum marginal rate.

By extending this 33-percent rate through to all high-income taxpayers, we will eliminate this fundamental unfairness and generate enough revenues to not only offset any losses brought about by restoring the IRA deduction but will significantly reduce our deficits.

While neither option is perfect, I strongly urge my colleagues to reject restoration of the capital gains exclusion, and support the alternative which will do far more good for the economy and for the large numbers of middle-income taxpayers who are the backbone of our economy.

At the same time, I look forward to supporting a carefully crafted renewal of the capital gains exclusion which will be targeted toward our Nation's most pressing economic needs.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, there's been a lot of talk about the differences between this administration and the previous one. This week, however, we're seeing one major similarity. The return of trickle-down economics.

The capital gains tax giveaway that will be considered this week in the House is the Bush administration's Trojan horse. We've been through this all before.

We've had 8 years to learn a very important lesson. Tax breaks for the rich don't pay for themselves. Everyone in this Chamber knows that cutting the capital gains tax is a money loser. Furthermore, we know that the reasons given to support this plan are specious, if not deceptive. Economic growth will not make up for the loss in revenue that will result from the President's proposal.

Behind all the rhetoric is a simple political motive. Candidate Bush knew that cutting the capital gains tax would be popular with big business and other wealthy individuals. Trickle-down theory might be good politics for my Republican colleagues, but recent history has shown that it is also, without a doubt, disasterous economics.

Mr. President, stop pretending that we can have our cake and eat it too. Trickle-down is bad economics, bad tax policy, and unfair to most Americans. Let's be responsible. Vote against the capital gains tax cut. Vote for the Rostenkowski-Gephart substitute.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Gephart/Rostenkowski tax alternative to a reduction in the tax on capital gains and in support of the Jenkins-Archer capital gains language as reported in the budget reconciliation bill.

I believe that the essential unfairness of the current capital gains tax is that it taxes unreal, inflation-caused gains. I am pleased that the budget reconciliation bill includes a provision with respect to the disposition of assets acquired after December 31, 1991. That provision enables individuals to index the basis of assets for inflation. Ultimate indexing of capital gains will eliminate the unfairness of taxing unreal gains and ensure that only real economic gain is taxed.

While I enthusiastically endorse the indexing provision, I do believe that the temporary rate reduction from 28 percent to 19.6 percent is plainly Gramm-Rudman driven, but fine for the New York City economy which is heavily reliant on the securities industry. The Joint Tax Committee estimates that the rate reduction will increase revenue by $2.9 billion in fiscal year 1990, $3.8 billion in fiscal year 1991, and $2.7 billion in fiscal year 1992. No one can argue that our Government does not need the additional $9.4 billion in revenue, especially for domestic discretionary spending.

In the long term, lowering the capital gains tax will improve America's competitive strength in the international marketplace by reducing capital costs and stimulating investments. Traditionally, U.S. companies have perceived the cost of capital to be higher than that of our competitors overseas. A recent study conducted by George N. Hatsopoulos, chairman of Thermo Electron Inc., and Stephen H. Brooks, an economic consultant, examines debt and equity as the foundation of capital. The study concludes that United States managers rely heavily on costly equity, such as stock, whereas their Japanese counterparts have turned to debt, such as bank loans and corporate-issued bonds, to finance capital. As Hatsopoulos and Brooks point out, the bottom line is that the cost of capital is almost three times higher in the United States than in Japan and that cost of capital can be attributed directly to differences in capital gains taxes.

In the United States, investors pay the same proportion of taxes on capital gains as they do on income from interest; in Japan, investors pay very low capital gains taxes and, therefore, do not need to require future corporate earnings to be as high as United States investors do. In fact, the United States taxes long-term capital gains at a higher rate than nearly all of its European and Asian competitors. The higher gains tax coupled with higher costs of capital have placed American companies at a competitive disadvantage. While there are no quick fixes or easy solutions to that problem, a reduction in the capital gains tax will bolster equity financing, which American companies rely upon for capital. By lowering the costs of capital, America will be better able to compete. In addition to enhancing our Nation's ability to compete, and stimulating investment, a reduction in the capital gains tax rate will generate new and better jobs in our economy.

While individual retirement accounts have a favorable effect on cost of capital by lowering the interest rate, they have failed to trigger investment which can be directly attributed to a lower tax on capital gains. Furthermore, on the basis of aggregate data, IRA's do not appear to have stimulated overall saving. Instead, there appears to have been a major shift in the allocation of existing saving between taxable and nontaxable accounts. When IRA's expanded after 1981, other forms of savings declined, and when they were cut back in rate was nearly 8 percent, whereas by 1986 it had declined to 4 percent. Essentially, IRA's have failed to increase long-term savings and provided the necessary capital for economic growth.

A great deal of misinformation has been spread about the distributional effects of a cut in the capital gains tax rate. Let me take a moment to dispel the notion that a cut in the capital gains tax rate will disproportionately benefit those whose income exceeds $100,000. The Treasury Department has conducted an analysis, of the most recent tax data available, which concludes the vast bulk of taxpayers who would benefit from a capital gains differential are those with ordinary incomes of less than $50,000. The analysis verifies that 74 percent of the taxpayers who show capital gains on their tax returns have incomes under $50,000. It is abundantly clear that the capitals gains provision will benefit a significant number of taxpayers across the economic spectrum.

Today, as we choose between new taxes or a capital gains package, let us keep in mind that the Jenkins-Archer capital gains proposal will work to stimulate economic growth for all Americans while the consequences of a tax increase are quite unclear. Not only will the capital gains proposal restore an essential fairness by taxing only real economic gain, it also will promote investment in general and venture capital in particular. Ultimately, the reduction will help mitigate risk and increase investment, which will contribute to economic growth, expansion, and a more competitive America. In closing, I should like to urge my colleagues to vote against the tax increase and in support of a bill that will enhance the economic prosperity of our Nation.

Mr. BAKER. Today we have an opportunity to vote on two competing tax plans which both claim to reduce disincentives for savings and investment. Today we have an opportunity to encourage long term savings and enhanced opportunities for American farmers, timber owners, small businesses, young homeowners, and a number of middle class Americans. The major question confronting us today is: Do we want to improve the ability of Americans to invest in America; or do we want to continue the pattern of increasing foreign investment in America?

When the U.S. Government reduced the capital gains tax from 49 percent to 28 percent in 1978, the U.S. Treasury Department documented that revenue collections increased from $8.5 billion in 1978 to $20 billion by 1984. Once again, Americans saw that lower taxes actually generate more business activity and increased taxable income. We should work to reopen this type of growth, to lessen our dependence on foreign investment, and enhance economic growth.

While the Archer/Jenkins plan temporarily reduced the maximum tax on capital gains, I believe its best feature is the provision to index capital gains for inflation after 1991. It is simply inequitable to tax capital gains that result for inflation. With inflation rates changing nearly everyday, capital gains should be taxed at their true value. For this reason, I am one of 53 cosponsors of H.R. 719, the Inflation Tax Relief Act of 1989, a part of the Archer/Jenkins capital gains plan. Indexation of capital gains income serves as a very important complement to tax reform by preserving the real value of investments.

We are now in the midst of the longest peacetime period of prosperity in our history largely as a result of the economic reforms put in place by the Reagan-Bush administration. We should continue this growth and support the Archer/Jenkins plan and a reduction in taxes on capital gains.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have come to view budget reconciliation packages with much the same distaste as I view continuing resolutions. Like the unwieldy continuing measures, this enormous package seems to have everything in it but the proverbial kitchen sink. However, if there is a redeeming feature to this bill, it is the capital gains reduction. I have always endorsed tax policies which encourage savings and investment, and there is no doubt in my mind that reducing the capital gains tax rate will do just that. In fact, if it were up to me, the reduction would go much further; it would be permanent.

Congress has a poor record of credibility with the American public, because we keep changing the rules in the middle of the game. Via the so-called tax reform bill, which I did not support, we pulled the rug out from under a great many Ameicans attempting to plan ahead. Since this cut is not permanent, thos rules will be subject to change in the future. Nonetheless, the Jenkins-Archer-Flippo amendment is the best we are going to be offered, at least in this Congress. I strongly urge my colleagues to support it, and to disregard the confusing rhetoric which is circulating concerning the alternative to be proposed.

Make no mistake, I strongly support reinstatement of tax deductibility for contributions to individual retirement accounts [IRAs]. Certainly, such a step would increase and encourage savings, and I have introduced legislation of my own to accomplish just that end. However, this alternative is nt simply reinstatment of that desirable tax treatment. Instead, it is a wolf in sheep's clothing. Thiks alternative is yet another indication that many of our colleagues cannot shake their allegiance to the old tax-and-spend thinking which got us into serious trouble in the first place. It is a tax increase, plain and simple. No tax increase in our history has ever been use to retire old debts. I cannot support revenue increases, no matter how noble or attractive the package they come in may be.

I am amased by the arguments set forth by opponents of capital gains tax rate reduction that only the rich will benefit. My office has been barraged with anxious phone calls and letters from individuals who are far from rich, but who strongly support the reduction. Some are senior citizens with modest incomes who want to sell the home they have lived in all their lives. Others are individuals who tried to invest in an plan for their own futures. Still others are parents attempting to salvage as much as they can of what they earn to pay for their children's educations. Small business people, small investors, family owners—those are the people I am hearing from, and no doubt my colleagues are having similar experiences. They all say the same thing: Cut the captial gains tax rate. And they are right.

Today, we have a choice. We can vote to cut capital gains and encourage economic prosperity. Or, we can vote for the alternative, guaranteeing an unwanted tax increase. To me the choice is simple.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Chairman, in his special message to the Congress on tax reduction and reform, the President of the United States said: "The tax on capital gains directly affects investment decisions, the mobility and flow of risk capital from static to more dynamic situations, the ease or difficulty experienced by new ventures in obtaining capital, and thereby the strength and potential for growth of the economy."

The President who wrote those words was John F. Kennedy who, in that special message, proposed a capital gains tax rate reduction which brought the top rate down to 19.5 percent from 25 percent.

Reducing capital gains tax rates enjoys bipartisan support around the Nation. This is true, not just today, but in years past as well. After all, the capital gains tax reduction which was enacted in 1978 was the product of a Democrat-controlled Congress, with a Democrat in the White House.

The image has been promoted that only the wealthy receive capital gains, and that is simply not true. Every person who owns a home, if he or she should sell it for more than he or she paid for it, realizes a capital gain. In the 11th Congressional District of New Jersey, where the prices of homes are high and ever-rising, it is not at all unusual for middle income individuals selling homes to realize gains of tens of thousands of dollars. if those individuals do not qualify for a deferral or exclusion, they are hit by a capital gains tax. Are they fat cats? Hardly. They are the people who make America thrive, by their hard work and dedication.

Therefore, it is not correct to say that this reduction will just benefit the wealthy. Indeed, Treasury Department figures show that those taxpayers whose ordinary income is below $50,000 will comprise 74 percent of those who will benefit from this cut.

The Democratic leadership has tried to put up a smokescreen on this issue with its IRA proposal, claiming it will help the middle class. But the Joint Committee on Taxation reports that 83.9 percent of those who would benefit from their proposal have incomes over $50,000. The Democratic leadership's plan would also increase taxes. I am not against looking at the question of restoring deductability of IRA contributions. However, if we are going to do so, we ought to make sure that the rhetoric matches the reality, and that the benefit truly extends to the middle class. The Gephardt-Rostenkowski amendment does not accomplish that.

Additionally, if the United States is going to be competitive in the world market, we need to ensure that we are playing on as level a playing field as possible. Japan taxes capital gains at 5 percent. West Germany doesn't tax them at all, if they are held for at least 6 months. South Korea and Taiwan, two economies that are enjoying sustained growth, also do not tax capital gains.

I regret that some have tried to turn the debate on this issue into a battle between the haves and the have-nots. That sort of posturing does not contribute to an understanding of the merits of the question on either side of the issue. The bottom line is that a capital gains tax reduction is good for everyone in America—good because it helps us reduce our deficit, and good because it will help unharness even more of the productive capacity of the American people.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, which will only cut the capital gains tax rate to 28 percent. The American public needs and wants a lower cut in capital gains tax to 19.6 percent as passed in the Ways and Means Committee thanks to the leadership of my good friends, Mr. ARCHER and Mr. JENKINS.

Those on the other side of the aisle claim that this is a tax break for the rich. Not just the rich will enjoy the benefits from a capital gains, but the average American will also benefit. In fact, 70 percent of those paying capital gains tax earns under $50,000 per year. I do not consider grandma and grandpa who sell their home so they can move to a smaller place and retire as rich. I do not consider people that work hard all their lives and invest their money wisely so they have a better life for themselves as rich.

By reducing the capital gains tax rate, we are also providing an incentive for Americans to start a small business of their own or make stock investments so they can realize the American dream. A capital gains tax cut will make startup money easier and cheaper to obtain for Americans willing to start their own business. Eighty percent of future job creation will come from these smaller, newer enterprises. Americans would be more willing to invest in venture capital if they pay low capital gains tax.

If America can compete in international markets effectively, the whole country benefits. As a result, we need the cut in the capital gains tax rate because it will help America compete against countries like Japan and West Germany who have very low or no tax on capital gains. If we can compete in international markets, companies would expand, create jobs, and put more money into the American economy.

The other side seems to worry about foreign investment all the time. If they want to discourage foreign investment, I encourage my colleagues to make it easier for Americans to invest in America by lowering capital gains tax to 19.6 percent.

This tax cut will also help average Americans to realize the American dream. The average American wants to make sure the IRS does not gobble up all of their savings through a high capital gains tax. I have inserted this article into the record which I hope all my colleagues will read. I urge my colleagues to support the Jenkins-Archer bipartisan proposal as passed in Committee, and vote against the Rostenkowski amendment.

[From the Washington Times, Sept. 20, 1989]

CAPITAL GAINS HYSTERIA

(By Patrick Buchanan)

"Soak the poor! Trash the economy!" wailed The New York Times. "A financial disaster for the country," bellowed Democratic Rep. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois. An "immoral" subsidy for the rich, says the Rev. Jesse Jackson, "abandoning the poor."

Why the hysteria? Well, the Ways and Means Committee just voted to reduce the tax rate on capital gains to about 20 percent, where it stood in 1986.

Smearing on the war paint, sharpening the tomahawks, liberals are behaving as though the GOP and the Boll Weevils just ran a herd of cattle across their ancestral burial ground.

Why? Consider the benefits:

Smith, a cab driver, working 14 hours a day, earns $48,000; his wife, a teacher, brings in $25,000. Having saved in a mutual fund for 15 years to send his daughter to the Ivy League, Mr. Smith wants to sell his stock, which has gone up $50,000. Under the Ways and Means plan, his tax falls from $14,000 to $9,800; now, Mr. Smith can finance a car for his girl for school. How does this soak the poor?

Next is Jones, whose eight-unit rental appreciated from $500,000 to $1.5 million in 10 years. If the new tax rate survives, Mr. Jones will sell, and retire. Taking his million-dollar profit (part of it mythical, due to inflation), Mr. Jones sends $196,000 to Uncle Sam, and heads for Palm Beach. How does Mr. Jones soak the poor?

Third is billionaire Brown, who, celebrating Ways and Means, unloads the company he built over 40 years for a cool profit of $1 billion. Mr. Brown sends the Treasury $196 million (thus covering the entire budget for the National Endowment for the Arts), and departs for Biarritz. Instead of $1 billion in stock, Mr. Brown has $804 million in cash. How has Mr. Brown soaked the poor?

From each transaction, Uncle Sam, who took none of the risk, would take one-fith of the profit.

Smith, Jones and Brown will benefit; the Treasury will benefit; brokers and real estate dealers will benefit; the buyers who think they got a swell deal will benefit. Who is hurt? How do more deals, more income, more tax revenue add up to "financial disaster"?

Why is Jesse Jackson sending his Rainbow Coalition after the six Democrats who supported the cut? Not because U.S. economic interests will suffer, but because his political interests are at risk.

As Americans, black, white, red or yellow, come to rely on their own talent to produce their income, on their own capital to increase their wealth—rather than on government redistribution—the politics of envy and the gospel of greed cease to appeal. Who needs Jesse Jackson, if you're sharing in the wealth?

Capitalism is killing liberalism; and panicked Democrats arfe resorting to deception and demagoguery to counter its appeal.

When capital gains taxes (beginning in '78) were cut from 49 percent to 20 percent, tax revenues did not fall; they exploded. Only when the rate was raised, back to 28 percent, did revenues fall off (one reason the little Duke's revenue projections in the Bay State went south in 1988).

The same holds for income taxes. Under President Ronald Reagan, the top tax rate fell from 70 percent to 28 percent. Did the rich now escape? According to the Tax Foundation:

In 1979, the top 5 percent of Americans paid 37.6 percent of all income taxes; by 1987, that had jumped to 43 percent.

In 1979, the top 10 percent of taxpayers paid 49.5 percent of the income-tax load; by 1987, their share had risen to 55.4 percent.

In 1979, the top 50 percent paid 93.2 percent of all income taxes; after the Reagan reforms, that rose to 94.1 percent.

In 1979, the bottom 50 percent paid 6.8 percent of total income taxes; that fell to 5.9 percent after Mr. Reagan.

Under Mr. Reagan, the income tax burden shifted toward the upper class and the rich; for the working class it was reduced; for the poor, it was eliminated.

Yet, you can put burning coals under the fingernails of liberals, and they will not concede what statistics plainly show.

Why? Because socialism, the Democratic ideology that dare not speak its name, is a religious belief, impervious to evidence, the hidden agenda of which is the constant transfer of power from producers to politicians.

The left demeans Mr. Reagan's boom, the 20 million jobs, because to concede that Reaganomics works is to question the political faith that directs their lives. If Ronald Reagan was right, the left is not just wrong, it is the primary roadblock to freedom and progress.

Which is why the GOP politics of compromise is foolish. If you are going to be hanged for rustling a pony, why not steal the whole herd? Democratic Rep. Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri will charge Mr. Bush with favoring the rich, no matter the size of the tax cut; so do it right. The capital gains cut that came out of Ways and Means was not too risky; it is too timid.

At 19.6 percent, that tax remains a constipating factor in the U.S. economy, crippling efforts to compete with Germany and Japan, whose capital gains tax is zero.

How can Americans whine about a savings and investment rate that is the lowest in the West, when the taxes we impose on the return from savings and investments are near the highest in the West?

Rushing to recover, Democrats are rallying behind Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's proposal for new IRAs for the middle class. Good idea. Mr. Bush should tell Lloyd to go right ahead and tack it onto the capital gains tax cut; we're delighted to have both. A bidding war over tax cuts is a war America cannot lose.

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong opposition to the Rostenkowski amendment, and in strong support of the capital gains proposal as outlined in the Budget Reconciliation Act.

I have always felt that we must do everything possible to encourage saving and investing in the United States. Our economy is driven by people who invest in businesses so that they have the capital to grow and create jobs.

Although I would have preferred a permanent exemption, I believe the indexing is a major victory. In my view, this change will help to encourage the investment our country needs to remain a world economic power.

It has long been said that the business of America is business. I firmly believe that this is true, and Government must make every possible effort to foster business so that all Americans benefit. Lowering the capital gains tax will do this.

I urge my colleagues to keep the capital gains exemption as outlined in the Ways and Means bill.

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, for those of us who have been longtime supporters of capital gains, this has been a difficult fight, and not one without its price. But nevertheless I am a supporter of the Jenkins-Archer proposal and I oppose the Rostenkowski amendment. I do so for some very simple reasons, first of which is the issue of competitiveness.

If the rest of the world continues to have a capital gain differential and the United States doesn't, America loses.

If the rest of the world continues to have tax policies which provide disencentives for consumption and energy use and the United States doesn't, America loses.

If the rest of the world continues to have a global economic perspective and the United States doesn't, America loses.

It's time to wake up. The stock market crash of October 1987 proved that we live in a world economy. That our economic growth is interdependent on the economic policies of other nations. Well other nations have capital gains differentials. The Japanese, who have become technological leaders, have a cost of capital that is almost 2 percent lower than that of the United States their lowest capital gains rate is a major reason for that difference.

I'm not enamored completely with the Jenkins-Archer proposal because it only provides a temporary 2-year reduction. I would prefer not to address our Tax Code in a piecemeal approach and I would like to have longer holding periods. But we must make a start in the right direction. I believe that if we reject the Democratic proposal, that the Senate will make the reduction in the rate permanent. Nevertheless, the distortion effects of a temporary rate reduction are overblown. Twenty-eight months is more than enough time for the markets to compensate.

I commend the leadership for much of their substitute proposal, but I cannot agree with its' proposal on capital gains. Is it fair, as outlined in the Democratic alternative, to give only the top 33 percent a capital gains cut to 28 percent while everyone else continues to pay the present rates? At least the Jenkin's proposal provides a capital gains cut for everyone. While expanding the IRA deduction is good, is it fair that 84 percent of the benefits of the Democrats' IRA proposal go to individuals who make $50,000 and more? Furthermore, the cost of expanding the IRA's under the substitute proposal is $15 billion over 5 years. In the capital gains debate there is considerable disagreement as to whether a cut in the capital gains rate would increase or decrease revenue. On the other hand, no one disagrees that the Democratic IRA proposal will cost the taxpayer $15 billion, I therefore ask my fellow Democrats, if we had the choice to spend $15 billion, would expanding IRA's be our preference or would the war on drugs, increase funding for education, or money for the homeless be our choice.

However, today's debate is not about IRA's, it's about capital gains and growth. On that issue, the entrepreneuers of America have spoken and are seeking this body's help in providing the spark needed to fuel investment. Let us give them that spark and the help they need to build a stronger and more competitive America.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in vehement opposition to this amendment. This proposal, by attempting to raise income tax rates, is in clear violation of the Bipartisan Budget Agreement signed by the President and congressional leaders in March. Furthermore, as an alternative to a capital gains differential, the IRA portion of this amendment is wholly inadequate. I hope that my colleagues will reject this amendment not only on tax policy grounds, but also to avoid an otherwise inevitable veto of our reconciliation bill.

Item 10 of the BBA states that "revenue legislation pursuant to this agreement will be advanced legislatively when supported by the President." Item 10 constitutes a promise by Congress not to defy the President by proposing a tax increase. It is not a pretty description, but, in plain terms, the Rostenkowski amendment welshes on Congress' promise.

While the Bipartisan Budget Agreement clearly ruled out any tax increase opposed by the President, it in no way precluded a capital gains reduction. Democrat leaders knew full well when they signed the BBA that a capital gains cut was part of the Bush program and would be one of the revenue items under consideration.

While a capital gains differential may have seemed less likely in March than it does now, this is no excuse for breaking the deal. The Democrat leadership thought it could take the $5.3 billion in increased revenues in the Bush budget, but not accept the tax policy. Now, faced with the possibility of the policy, it is simply welshing on its agreement.

If we are to have any hope of concluding future budget summit agreements there has to be some sense of assurance that one side will not simply renege when it does not get its way. If only to preserve accountability for any future agreements between the White House and Congress, we should reject this proposal.

Even notwithstanding our prior agreements, this amendment is not acceptable from an economic policy standpoint. Allowing greater contributions to IRA's fall short of a capital gains differential in its beneficial effect on investment, competitiveness, capital costs for new business, and encouraging equity financing.

This IRA proposal has merit on its own, but it is not an adequate replacement for capital gains. History shows that its savings and investment incentives would be reduced by the ample opportunities to shift existing savings rather than to make new savings.

This amendment is a deal-breaker and it's veto bait. If the House does not want a capital gains differential, it should act within the confines of our budget agreement and have an up-or-down vote on capital gains. We should not break our promises by raising income tax rates.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to rise in support of the Rostenkowski, Gephardt, and Stenholm amendment. As I consider the impact of a tax break for the rich, I remember the recent hearing I heard where four children between the ages of 14 and 17 who lived in homeless shelters stated that they could not do their homework because they did not have adequate reference materials at their disposal, including a basic dictionary. As we try to achieve an equitable society for them as well as middle-class America, I cannot in good conscience vote for a capital gains tax cut to benefit the very rich who need it the least.

The capital gains tax cut issue is just one more step in ignoring those Americans who need the most help, the poor who have no money to buy, sell, save, or invest. Eighty percent of all capital gains go to only 5 percent of Americans, clearly meaning that the country's richest will become richer. At least the alternative plan attempts to aid a large majority of middle-income families by encouraging long-term savings through expansion of the availability of IRA's, a fundamental investment in the future. In addition, the alternative will eliminate the unjust present tax bracket "bubble."

This capital gains tax reduction is a cruel twist of Mr. Bush's, "Read My Lips * * * No New Taxes." This is watch my action, the poor must suffer * * * "No New Programs." I was pleased by Mr. Bush's call for a war on drugs, yet there has been little concrete and/or effective action since then. But for the benefit of the rich, he summoned members to his office and made the necessary promises to secure the needed votes. I say that action should be used to resolve our real problems such as drug abuse, homelessness, hunger, minimum wage, and the plight of America's children.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I truly regret the debate that goes on here today. We are talking about taxes and tax policy when we are dealing with the reconciliation bill that ought to be reducing the deficit. That is what the purpose of the reconciliation is all about. And yet the danger we are embarked upon is the danger of increasing the very deficit that everyone says they are worried about.

In our system, in our democracy, we solve problems through leadership or through crisis. In the last 8 years, we have had no leadership on the deficit issue. We have had crisis. Now we are in danger of choosing crisis again, political crisis and fiscal crisis.

Instead of the leadership we need, it is the same old partisan game of seeking a short-term political goal in exchange for long-term economic policy. The danger here is that we will embark on another riverboat gamble that will borrow from tomorrow in order to spend it today.

The capital gains tax cut is yet another freight car on the overburdened locomotive of budget reconciliation. Reconciliation should not be the occasion for a debate over capital gains. By insisting that this controversial issue of capital gains be part of reconciliation, its supports have undermined the bipartisan spirit which is needed to achieve significant permanent deficit reduction now and in the future.
